Mr. WARWICK. Exactly. That is the very point I want to bring the gentleman to. By the encouragement which has been given to it, there has been developed a property which, according to the gentleman from Washoe, divides a dividend of eighteen hundred thousand dollars a year, and which is taxed in Storey County upon over a million of dollars, and nearly three millions of dollars are produced by it annually for taxation.

Mr. FITCH. Six millions of dollars—more than the whole product of Washoe.

Mr. DELONG. And all the balance of the proceeds are divided amongst the laborers, and they are taxed on four millions more.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be better if one gentleman at a time address the Convention.

Mr. WARWICK. I will add, that the very wealth produced by these mines has gone to build up Washoe County, without which, that county would not have been worth more than a hundred and fifty thousand dollars to-day. Look at the elegant palaces which have been reared between here and Washoe City. How did they come there? From the potatoes and turnips and barley raised in the Washoe valley? No, sir; but from the Gould & Curry, and the Gold Hill mines. I passed by them this morning, and I observed particularly the elegant residence of a gentleman with whom we are all acquainted. Did that come from the agriculture of Washoe County? No, sir; it came from the wealth of the county of Storey. Therefore, I say it is sound policy to encourage that interest which is producing such vast wealth, and not to seek to crush it in the germ. We should nourish and encourage it, and let it rear its head to heaven, so that eventually you, and I, and our children's children, may reap the benefits of the wise legislation which we are seeking to place in the fundamental law of our State.

Mr. MASON. Is it in order to tell an anecdote? It is in the way of feeble illustration of the present position of this affair. A young man in southern Illinois, who was in the habit of neglecting to wash his feet, had been out in stormy weather, and going into a neighbor's house, he placed his feet under the stove to warm them. The man of the house soon discovered an odor, and hastily started up to drive out the dog lying near by. But the young man stopped him, saying: "Mister, you needn't interfere with that 'ere dorg, a mite; what you smell is my feet; but Lord, that's nothing; you orter smell 'em in the summer time." [Laughter.]

Mr. NOURSE. I think we can smell the "feet" of these gentlemen, and others, who have preceded them. I think "feet" is what is the matter here, and it is "feet" which we smell in this debate. "I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word."

Now, I wish briefly to pay my respects to the gentleman (Mr. Warwick) who spoke last but one—whose remarks preceded this dog story. I will not allow myself to characterize, as my feelings would lead me to do, the argument which he has advanced. He insisted on the necessity of refraining from the taxation of the mines—of refraining to call upon them for the payment of their share towards the support of the Government which is to defend and protect them—for the sake of encouraging an interest which has shown such innate strength that in the course of nearly three years' time, it has reached the towering magnitude of centuries of growth. When it takes only three years for the tree to spring up to such a height, from the little seed planted in the ground, does it need to be exempted from taxation for fear of its being nipped in the bud? Why, sir, there is not one miner in a hundred but spends more money, ten times over, every Saturday night, on wine and women, than his taxes for a year would come to. Gentlemen talk as if the taxation of the mines would crush the mining interest. Why, sir, it is only a drop in the bucket, and they never would feel it at all. It would be a cigar less, or a glass of wine less, every day, that is all. And it does not come from the feeble mines, which are undeveloped. Now that the speculating bubble has burst and broken, what is their value? They are to be taxed only at their cash value, and if they do not produce the precious metals they will not have much cash value. Who is going to consider a mere hole in the ground as worth five hundred dollars a foot, when Wide West is down to seven dollars, and Real Del Monte in proportion? It is not the weak and undeveloped mines that are going to feel the burden, for the cash value will not be there; but when a mine does come up to the enormous production of two million one hundred thousand dollars in a single year, then the tax comes in. Then it is a large sum, it is true, and yet, even then, it is a sum not to be felt. And I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, to you, and to the members of this Convention, that this amendment of the gentleman from Storey County, if not amended as proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby, not only exempts from taxation the "poor miner," who has been so much paraded here, but the whole mine of the Gould & Curry Company, and all the enormous wealth of all the other mines in the Territory. It will leave only their stock to be taxed to the owners, as personal property, wherever they may happen to be, whether in Sacramento, in San Francisco, in New York, in Boston, or in London. And, sir, these wealthy owners will not be compelled to pay one dollar towards the expenses of carrying on the Government of this State, where the mine lies, and from which they are allowed, as they have been hitherto, without fee or reward, to take up and carry away immense wealth.

Mr. DELONG. If the gentleman fears that the section would have any such effect as that which he has last suggested, we are willing to put in a provision that the proceeds of the mines shall be taxed here.

Mr. NOURSE. If you will also put in a provision that the proceeds of saw mills, and quartz mills, and grist mills, and farms, and everything else, shall be taxed in the same way, well and good. Let them all stand alike. But why should we name one species of property and not another? Why should we adopt one basis for one description of property, and another basis for another? Why not do as it is done in every other State? My information may be at fault, but I do not know now of a single instance where any other basis of taxation than that of value has been adopted in the Constitution of any State in the Union. I know that in excluding property from taxation, some distinction may be made; but when you come to the taxing of property, I do not know where any basis has ever been adopted other than that of the value of the property. What possible objection, then, is there to the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby? It simply provides, in language which we, who want all property taxed equally, are satisfied with—that all property shall be taxed equally. If gentlemen have no objection to that doctrine, why do they object to the amendment?

Mr. DELONG. I desire to ask a question. How will the rule work in taxing a piece of land in which a man has a title in fee, when you imagine another case where a tract of land, perhaps immediately adjoining it, which would be of equal value if it had the fee, is possessed by a party who does not own the fee at all, the fee remaining in the General Government? There is the same amount of improvement as in the case of the tract owned by the individual. Now, would you assess that at the same valuation, the one having the title and the other not, and each being of the same size and of the same intrinsic value?

Mr. NOURSE. The answer is ready at the moment. If the possessory title will sell for as much in open market as the title in fee, you would tax it the same.

Mr. DELONG. Oh, that is dodging the question.

Mr. NOURSE. It is not dodging it at all. If the fee title is better, it will be worth the most, and of course, it will be taxed the most. But if one piece of property to which a man has not the fee, but a possessory title only, happens to be worth, with that title, more than another piece with a title in fee, you will not, simply because the fee, as a general thing, is better than the possessory title, tax the less valuable property more than the property which is more valuable.

DELONG—NOURSE—STURTEVANT.

[July 14.]

Mr. DELONG. I have another question to ask. Where does the gentleman derive the right to tax the property of the United States Government within the limits of this State?

Mr. NOURSE. I do not derive it at all.

Mr. DELONG. Very well. Then the mineral lands, being exempted from taxation, and the miner having no right upon those lands, except merely the right of a permitted trespass, where does the gentleman derive the right to tax the miner at all, on property which belongs to the General Government?

Mr. NOURSE. I do not derive any such right. The gentleman is alleging a principle which is unsound, and he knows it. I should be sorry to think that the gentleman did not regard as a valid title, a possessory title on which he has brought suit himself, many a time. It is a title recognized by that Supreme Court of California, to which the gentleman looks up with so much reverence, and whose decisions—and some, I am afraid, which were never made by that tribunal—the gentleman has so frequently quoted. That is the title which we recognize—a title recognized by the courts. And here let me say, that with all my prejudices against California decisions, I recognize in the treatment of that question by the Supreme Court of California, the highest wisdom, the greatest foresight, and the broadest range of thought. There is one feature, certainly, in those decisions—and it is that very feature—in which the Supreme Court of California has attained a proud eminence. That title which we recognize as a possessory title, is not claimed to be an ownership of the land, as against the United States, but it is a right to hold the land, tolerated by the United States authorities, with a full knowledge of what is done under that possession. It is a right, which has never been interfered with, to go on and take the precious metals from the bowels of the earth. That right is worth money, is it not? Is it possible that a foot in Gould & Curry is not worth the $1,625 at which it is now quoted? No matter if the dividend come down again to one hundred and twenty-five dollars. Are men paying something for nothing? Are they paying money for that which they cannot hold? I think the gentleman from Storey will not venture to go before the people, or before a court, and say that these possessory rights are not rights; and yet they are not that right which the United States Government claims. It is not the gold, it is not the ore, that is taxed; it is not the land that is taxed; but it is the right that those parties have acquired, by and under the laws of the land, to go on and take from that particular location, the precious metals. Now, there are gentlemen here who have some analogous rights. They have rights, as I before remarked, under the laws of the Legislature, to gather in the tolls on the toll-roads. And yet they do not own an inch of the land. Will the gentleman say that toll-roads cannot be taxed?

Mr. DELONG. It is a franchise.

Mr. NOURSE. Exactly; and you tax that right, just as we propose to tax the right to the veins of the precious metals, which Congress allows us to do, leaving the United States all the right of ownership it ever had.

Mr. DELONG. The difference is, that in one case it is a grant by the sovereign power, and in the other there is no grant at all. The man with the grant of a toll-road franchise, has it granted to him by the sovereign power of the State, and in the other case, the miner enters upon the property without any grant, and can only hold it till he is dispossessed by the power which owns it. The whole error of the gentleman is that which has been alluded to by the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick.) He maintains that the mines are not taxed now, and I say that they are taxed in every way. Suppose the case of a merchant who sells goods to the miner—what does he charge? Why, a profit above the cost. But what is the cost? It is not merely what he gave for the goods, what he paid for the freight, the rent of his building, and his own profit alone; but he puts on also the taxes; and the miner pays a large profit over and above it all. So it is with the agriculturalist. He raises a barrel of cereals, and sells it in the market, and in fixing the price, he puts on whatever it cost him in every way, and among other items is his taxes. He charges that sum to the miner, and the value over and above all; so that he realizes his profit in that way. You take from the only class of people producing money, your taxes. You are taxed, but you get it back from the miners, and you will continue to do so. That has been, and will always be the case in every country where the miner is the sole producer of the currency, which is a metallic currency. The miners produce every dollar you have. But for the mines, all your stores would be removed, your farms would dry up, and be abandoned, and your wagons would stop in the streets, or be turned elsewhere. Every man you see engaged in any business, profession, or calling, looks directly to the miner. He expects his profession, or labor, or property invested, to return a yield, and that yield he derives from the miner, after he has produced it in the mines. Every one charges, in the disposal of his wares and goods, sufficient to cover his taxes, among other things. He makes the price large enough, so that the miner shall pay it back to him.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I wish to ask one question. The gentleman speaks of the wagons being stopped which are carrying the produce to the mines. Now, what would the miners do if the wagons were stopped, for their "grub?"

Mr. DELONG. Go and pack it, as I have done, for six months at a time.

Thursday.]

STURTEVANT—DELONG—NOURSE—HAWLEY—CROSMAN—KINKEAD.

[July 14.

Mr. STURTEVANT. But in some cases they would be eight months on the trip, if they had to pack it.

Mr. DELONG. They would get it by the exercise of Yankee ingenuity. So long as the mines pay, they will find the means of living, somehow.

Mr. NOURSE. Would it not be cheaper for them to pay a slight tax, instead of packing their provisions.

Mr. DELONG. That may be, and we are doing it now. We say, instead of packing our "grub," we will allow you to haul it to us, and we buy it from your wagons and pay the price you ask. And when you sell your provisions out of your wagons, what do you charge? First, what the ranches charge, and then the tolls on the roads, and then, over and above every expense and cost, including the tolls, the first cost, and the time, you charge a profit, and the consumer pays it. You know it is so, and every single dollar of taxes that any one of these merchants and farmers pays, he makes the miner pay back to him when he consumes his wares, or consumes the products of his farm. You know that; and I say further, that there is not a surplus dollar, which comes out of the mines, that you do not also tax. Suppose the Gould & Curry mine yielded, in the course of six months, six millions of dollars; how much of that amount has escaped taxation? The eighteen hundred thousand dollars divided among the share-holders has been taxed; that is admitted. Now, what becomes of the remaining four million two hundred thousand dollars which have been paid out to the teamster, paid out to the mill-wright, paid to the engineer, and paid to the miner? It goes out in payment of every class of industry, and those men who receive it, pay their taxes. In that way, there is not one dollar of the millions which have been dug from the bowels of the earth by the Gould & Curry Mining Company during the last twelve months, that has not been taxed. It is all taxed, immediately it sees the light. Now, on the top of that, you ask us to levy a tax of millions on the fictitious value of the mine itself.

Mr. NOURSE. Let me correct the gentleman. Not on its fictitious value, but on its cash value.

Mr. DELONG. On its cash value; but I say there is no means of determining it. I have my own ideas of the value of my mine, and perhaps nobody in the world will agree with me. I go and find a spot where I think there is a ledge, and commence to prospect for valuable minerals. Everybody may call me a fool for wasting my time and labor, but the assessor comes along and says: "I want to assess your mine; what is it worth?" I answer, "I do not know that it is worth anything." But he puts the screws on by saying, "I will give you so much," naming a trifling sum; and if I do not take it or say I think it is worth more, he says: "If you will not sell it, you must be assessed for that." Now, I say if you do that, you kill the goose that lays the golden egg. If you do that, you stop the development of the mines, and you prevent, perchance, the discovery of mines which would yield thousands of millions of dollars, but which will never be developed if this policy be pursued. The more mines are discovered, the greater will be our wealth and prosperity, and the more wealthy mines we have, the more numerous become those very consumers to whom the farmers look to purchase and consume the products of their ranches. I ask you to stay your hands from these mines. We are willing to pay on everything that is in sight, or that we know we have got. You may tax every dollar taken from the mines, and every building erected upon them; and when you have gone that far, we think you have gone far enough; and I hope the Convention will agree with us.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was about to rise to address the Convention—

SEVERAL MEMBERS. "Let us take a vote." "Question! question!"

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say a word only. I am pledged here to support a certain interest—

Mr. CROSMAN. As it is the time for recess, if the gentleman will yield, I will move that the Convention rise.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will give way.

Mr. CROSMAN. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article X, entitled Taxation, had made some progress therein, and had directed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. BROSNAN gave notice that immediately after the recess there would be a meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary Department.

The hour of twelve o'clock having arrived, the Convention was declared at recess until two o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met, and was called to order by the President at twenty minutes after two o'clock, P. M.

TAXATION.

Mr. KINKEAD. I offer the following resolution:—

Resolved, That Article X, and the various amendments proposed thereto, be referred to a special committee of five, with instructions to report a substitute therefor.

Thursday.]

DE LONG—EARL—DUNNE—HAWLEY.

[July 14.]

My idea in offering this resolution is, to have an opportunity to get together some statistics and facts in regard to the financial condition of the Territory, which I think are necessary for a proper understanding of the subject.

Mr. EARL moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. DE LONG moved that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

After some discussion, mainly in relation to questions of order, both motions were withdrawn.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution offered by Mr. Kinkead, and upon a division, it was not agreed to—ayes, 8; noes, not counted.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole, the President remaining in the chair, for the further consideration of Article X, entitled Taxation.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

TAXATION.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the Chair,) and resumed the consideration of Article X, entitled Taxation.

The CHAIRMAN stated the question on the amendment offered by Mr. Tozer to strike out the words, "including mines and mining property," and also on the substitute proposed by Mr. Johnson, for the entire section.

Mr. EARL. I do not propose to detain the Committee by speaking at any length on this question, for it seems to me that it is a matter which is now fully understood by each and every member of the Convention, and we might as well come to a vote now as at any time, upon the different amendments before us. I think we might talk here for hours and it would not affect the matter much, if any. I am one of those who have the utmost confidence in the ability of the Legislature which is to succeed us. I think we can reach the gross proceeds of the mines so as to tax them, and we can certainly do that after the Act of Congress requiring the bars to be stamped, goes into effect: because, by an act of the Legislature, we can reach those bars in the same way, and tax them. Further than that, I hope that at some time we may have an assay office established here, and then we can tax the bullion passing through that assay office. I shall vote for the amendment of my colleague, (Mr. Tozer,) and think the whole matter can be very easily and properly disposed of in that manner.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am extremely loth to inflict my views on this question upon the Convention, but I think I should be entirely derelict in my duty if I did not give a full, free, and frank exposition, not only of my own views, which coincide with those of my constituents, but particularly of the views of the people to whom, directly, I owe my election as a delegate to this Convention.

The first proposition I lay down—and I shall endeavor to confine myself to three propositions—is that all species of property are equally subject to taxation, and that the failure of any body politic to make each and every species of property a subject of taxation has the effect to create privileged classes—a species of legislation which, whether taken negatively or affirmatively, is entirely at variance with the spirit of our institutions. The proposition itself, stated in plain terms, is one so self-evident, that it seems almost a work of supererogation to attempt to dilate upon it. Now, sir, it is contended, in direct terms, by some of the gentlemen on the other side of the question, that the mines are not properly subjects of taxation. I am as well aware as any gentleman in the Convention that such has been the general view of the question ever since the mines became so important a feature in the resources of our country, especially upon the Pacific slope. But I have listened attentively, and read carefully, the immense number of arguments which have been advanced to sustain that proposition, and nothing I have ever yet heard, or ever yet read, has tended to change my views on the subject, or to convince me that it is not the duty of the law-making power to compel that particular species of property to contribute to the support of the Government, as much as it is to compel the house, the ranch, the ox, the horse, the ass, or any other species of property, to contribute to the support of that Government, without which we might as well resolve ourselves at once into an aboriginal condition of anarchy, choosing, if you please, the tallest man among us to rule over us. Sir, I contend that the tendency of this sort of legislation, or the adoption of provisions like this in organic laws, is to create a privileged class. It is to give to a class of men all the rights and privileges of citizens, and at the same time to ask them to contribute nothing towards the support of that Government which secures us all in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. I shall content myself—for I do not wish to occupy much of the time of the Convention—with simply asserting that proposition, leaving any one who may come after me to refute it if he can.

Again, it has been alleged here most earnestly, that we cannot tax the mines, because they are property of the United States. I think the only argument made to-day on that side which is entitled to much consideration is that of the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason,) who advanced that proposition—that we are prohibited by the Enabling Act from taxing the property of the United States. Now, sir, when the terms or the meaning of any legislative act is obscure, or difficult to be understood, it is to be construed in the light of those established customs which possess the force and sanctity, so to speak, of enactments, the meaning of which can be understood. Now, what has been the custom upon the Pacific coast, ever since the country came into the possession of the American people? I need only cite one decision of the Supreme Court of California, which was rendered some few months since, and in which the question of the right to tax possessory claims arose.

DELONG—HAWLEY—NOURSE.

[July 14.]

Mr. DELONG (interrupting.) But that is not authority on your side of the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not the gentleman from Washoe, sir. [Laughter.] That decision was, that the possessory right was a legitimate subject of taxation, and the court went on to say that in assessing it, it was necessary that the act of assessment should specify that it was the possessory right which had been taxed. Now, sir, under that decision, the principle is settled, in a manner which I think ought to be satisfactory to the gentlemen on the other side of the house. And the question arose there, because some individual, thinking himself wiser than others, who for a decade had paid their taxes, imagined that he could go on and possess the lands as the property of the United States—that he could hold them and receive from them all the benefits of occupancy and use as such—and at the same time pay nothing for the benefit and support of that system of Government by which we are all protected in our rights and privileges. Now, sir, such being the fact, I ask, with what degree of reason can gentlemen contend that there is such a distinctive difference between the possessory right to a mining claim, and the possessory right to agricultural lands? And more especially, how can they argue that the mineral lands are not taxable as possessory rights, when every man knows that a ranch, or a town lot in the foothills of California, which, under the laws of Congress prohibiting the sale of the mineral lands, is occupied in that manner, by possession only, is subject to taxation? The whole thing is disposed of by that decision of the Supreme Court of California, and it is idle to attempt to controvert it, until it shall be decided that that decision is not a correct interpretation of law, by some higher authority.

Why, then, need we falter in our duty, or hesitate as to our action, in regard to this subject? Every gentleman must know that if the proposition advanced by the gentlemen on the other side shall obtain in this Convention, if either directly or implied by, the Legislature, which is to regulate the mode and manner of collecting the revenue for the State of Nevada, are to be restricted from levying a tax upon the possessory claims, it will be a matter of utter impossibility to carry on the machinery of the State Government. And if gentlemen are so tenacious of their rights, they must know, as I know, and every man knows, that it is the shortest and easiest way to determine them, and to determine our status as a people, to allow this question to go untrammelled before the Legislature. Then the Legislature can enact a law taxing claims of all descriptions, and in that event, parties deeming themselves aggrieved, will resort to the highest tribunal for redress, and the question will there be definitely settled. If possessory rights are taxed, and if their owners think that that taxation is illegal, they will appeal to the courts, and there the matter will be determined. On the other hand, if they are not taxed, those property holders upon whom the heavy burden will rest, will contest at once the constitutionality of the law, and in that way they will arrive at a definite and clear decision of the question.

Mr. DELONG. Cannot you do the same thing? Suppose you adopt this proposition of ours, and the Legislature should fail to tax the mines, the farmers might attack the revenue bill in the courts. They would say: "Here, the Constitution provides that all property shall be equally and uniformly taxed; and now, inasmuch as this revenue bill does not do it, it is unconstitutional and void."

Mr. NOURSE. But that would destroy the whole tax levy for that year.

Mr. DELONG. So it would if you take the other way.

Mr. HAWLEY. The interrogatory of the gentleman has been well answered. Let those men who have grown rich and have not contributed towards the support of the Government, go into court, and do not throw upon the State which is about to be created, the burden of one year's support of the Government, without any income from taxation, when that burden would create a debt which would be likely to hamper the State for generations to come. Let the question be tested affirmatively, and not negatively.

Mr. DELONG. You could test it just as well the other way.

Mr. HAWLEY. I admit that we could; but we, on this side of the House, prefer that you should be the party to bring the test.

Now, let us look at this matter a little further. Suppose this course of action is pursued, we know what will be the result. We know this, that if we adopt a State Government, and the Supreme Court decides that a portion of the revenue for the support of that Government is not to be derived from the taxation of possessory rights and claims, such as have been enumerated, it will be impossible for us to support that State Government, and we shall at once be obliged to lay down the attributes of sovereignty, and appear as miserable suppliants, asking to be supported as paupers at the hands of the General Government. Now, I put it to the mind of every gentleman here, whether it is not better to meet this issue boldly, and not to listen to the suggestions of men who are rolling in wealth, and occupying high positions in other lands. I submit whether our own pride of character, and our State pride, should not do away with those objections, even if other arguments failed. I most sincerely hope that the Convention will adopt the amendment offered by our President, and then we shall have no half-way dealing. I hope the Convention will not consent to the proposition of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) to strike out the words, "mines and mining property," and so leave the whole matter open to endless debate and conflicts in the courts of law, which will have to be carried on, without any distinct, decisive proposition laid down in the Constitution upon which to base the judgment of the courts, either for or against any issue that may be raised. Let us, I repeat, meet the issue squarely. I do not fear to be found voting in the minority, when it is an honest minority. I have conversed, I may say, with hundreds of my constituents on this subject, and they all think and say that that class of property which has already raised so many, and which promises to raise so many more, to wealth, should be taxed, like all other property, for the support of the Government. I do not tear the issue before them, but I do fear the influence of that class of men whose interests are not with us, and who care nothing for the prosperity of this community, further than that prosperity may enable the community to keep from the doors of their tunnels, and from the precincts of their mills, the hand of the spoiler.

CHAPIN—NOURSE.

What, I ask, would be the consequences of an intervention of a foreign power in our National affairs? Gentlemen may say that that is only a scare-crow, or a bugbear; but where would be the objective point of an invading army, in such an event? Not the few houses and improvements scattered through the sagebrush in our State, but rather, they would strike at once at the centre of our wealth. And who would be called upon to defend it? The question answers itself, and I conceive it is unnecessary to go further. Now, sir, it is necessary only to lay down my first proposition, that every species of property should be equally taxed, and then it follows in the second place, that the fallacy of the argument of the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason,) is entitled to no consideration, because custom, which is our unwritten law, destroys whatever of vitality that objection might have had, even supposing it to be well grounded. I ask the members of the Convention only to consult what I believe to be their best judgment, and I am confident that the result will be a broad, distinct, emphatic, unmistakable enunciation of the principle that every species of property held by the people of this Territory, or State, is a legitimate source of revenue, and ought to be required to contribute to the support of the system of Government under which we hope to live.

[Mr. McCLINTON in the Chair.]

Mr. CHAPIN. I presume, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen of the Convention are already weary of this discussion, and ready to vote upon the question before it, but I beg their indulgence while I make a few, and only a few remarks, for I am as anxious as most of them, to come to a vote as soon as we have the subject sufficiently and properly ventilated.

There is one point on which I think we are all agreed, namely, that our prosperity depends materially upon the successful development of the mines in our Territory. The wealth of our towns, and the beautiful and comfortable houses that now surround us, are all the results of the development of the wealth of those mines. Without them, sir—if they were stricken out of existence, or if work were suspended for a single year in all those mines—we would revert back at once to the condition of the old days when you could find in our Territory nothing but here and there a way-station of the overland route. The beautiful edifices and comfortable homes in our towns and cities, would be deserted, and given over entirely to the occupancy of bats, donkeys, and goats. For what is there to induce men of enterprise to live here, except the wealth of our mines? Of what value would be all your farms in the valleys around here, without the population which is employed by those mining companies—without the miners engaged in opening the mines throughout the land? Of what value, I say, would all this property be without that population, to afford them a market, and to pay for their produce those enormous, and more than remunerative prices, which have heretofore been referred to in this discussion?

Now, we all agree on that proposition, and I think we will all agree on another proposition, namely, that it is our duty to foster, protect, and encourage this mining interest. How should we do that? Why, sir, my idea is that we should do it in the same manner that the State of Massachusetts encourages the whale fisheries—the associations and incorporations of companies, who send ships from New Bedford to sail in search of whales upon every sea. They encourage that branch of industry in every possible way. It is true, they may tax the outfit, as we tax the mills, and the machinery of the mills; but do they tax the oil, or the prospect of obtaining the oil, before it is brought into market? No, sir; they wait till it gets into New Bedford, and the result is, that there has been built up a magnificent city, with an amount of wealth which affords, in the way of taxation, hundreds of thousands of dollars to support the Government of the old Bay State.

Mr. NOURSE. How could they tax the whales, which are at large, in the ocean?

Mr. CHAPIN. They could do it with the same propriety that we might tax the undiscovered mines in the bowels of the mountains, which it may take a thousand years to find. I would rather take my chance in chasing up the whale. [Laughter.] They have something tangible and valuable, upon which to levy their tax, after the oil is brought in, and they derive a revenue from it. And all I ask in our own case is, that we shall be as wise as they are—that we shall keep our hands off and refrain from oppressing the miner, and all those associations which are investing their thousands and tens of thousands of dollars in the chances of developing new mines, until they shall find something of value which may be a legitimate subject of taxation.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to make another inquiry.

Mr. CHAPIN. The gentleman can interrupt me as often as he pleases.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to suggest that there are no amendments proposing to tax any mines which are outside of our limits, as the whales are outside of the limits of Massachusetts. It is only proposed to tax them within the limits of the State.

Mr. CHAPIN. We are talking about mines in our State; that is the question before the Convention, and we have nothing else under discussion now. But it is much easier to take a trip into the North Sea than a trip into our mountains, as my own personal experience has demonstrated during the last few years, in sinking a good many thousands of dollars trying to run a harpoon into a good lead. Now, sir, I believe in giving encouragement to the mines, and, as I said in the former Convention, I would sooner levy a tax upon the people and property of this State to offer a bounty for the prospecting, discovery, and development of our mines, than I would levy upon those mines an oppressive tax. By so doing, we would bring forth and develop wealth. We would get something which would be tangible—something which would bring in a revenue in the future, far greater than any benefit that we could hope to derive, if now, in our infancy, we go to cumbering the efforts of those who are already struggling under the weight of their burdens, and groping their way amid the clouds which surround them. Look at the effect produced simply by the talk there was six months ago, of levying a tax on our mines. That cloud began to arise then, and the whole community trembled. And beyond our own Territory—in New York, in Philadelphia, and elsewhere—where men had shown a disposition to deal in our mines, they began to stand aloof and to hasten into the market with their stocks, in view of the threatened taxation. And what has been the result, during the last six months? Why, sir, many of our best mining stocks have gone down five hundred per cent in that time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Does he attribute the depression of which he speaks to the fact that holders of stocks abroad forced them into the market?

Mr. CHAPIN. Somewhat; but not wholly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has the gentleman any information as to how much of those stocks were held by persons living outside of San Francisco, and outside of this Territory; or how much were held in New York, or elsewhere abroad?

Mr. CHAPIN. I have not the data, but a large amount is held outside, and held, too, by parties whom we should be glad to interest more and more in our mines.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman know a single person outside of California and this Territory, who has forced his stock upon the market?

Mr. CHAPIN. I have been so informed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman state the particulars, or specify a single instance?

Mr. CHAPIN. I have not the data, as I said before.

Mr. DELONG. The stock circulars show it; they show that parties outside of California and this Territory have done it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the gentleman will produce the authority. Where he can show that one man abroad has forced a single foot of stock on the market, I will show where ten feet have been thrown into the market in California and this Territory.

Mr. DELONG. I will agree to that; I think I can furnish the data.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope I may be allowed to proceed with my remarks. I say it is bad policy to depress the mines, for upon them we depend for our prosperity. That tax which Congress threatened to fasten upon us, although it was only a threat, has done its work, by depressing the value of the mines to a great extent; and now shall we add another depressing influence of the same kind, here at home—we, who should feel the importance of the encouragement and development of the mines more than all others? I say it is not good policy for us, as business men, to do it. I am free to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have much more property on the surface than I have in the mines; and that my particular interests would be promoted, perhaps as much as the interests of those who occupy ranches, by levying a tax on the mines. I stand in that respect in the same position as the owners of ranches. But I believe that if you allow anything to be placed in this instrument tending to depress our mines, they will go down to a fearful percentage below their true value. I had rather be assessed to keep them up; and I believe that the outside and surface property, as it is called, would become so much more valuable as to compensate for the whole of that assessment.

My colleague (Mr. Collins) has informed you that the surface property alone, in our county of Storey, amounts to about fifteen millions of dollars—that is, just the surface property alone. Now let me ask gentlemen where that amount of property has come from? Why is it there, upon that rugged mountain side and mountain top? how came it there? It is the result, entirely, of the development of a few mines. It is a parallel case with New Bedford, and the beautiful towns on Cape Cod, which have all been built up by the enterprise of those who delve in the depths of the sea, as we delve in the depths of the mountains. Is there not property enough to carry on our State without taxing the mines? Wait a few years longer, and we will give you fifteen millions more of surface property in Storey County, and you can tax that; but I entreat you not to lay a greater burden upon the mines by taxation. If you will not do that, all our interests will go on prospering together.

COLLINS.

[July 14.

Now, to come right down to the point—for I do not want to occupy much more time—I am in favor of the amendment proposed by my colleague (Mr. Tozer.) I am in favor of leaving it for the wisdom of the Legislature to prescribe and carry out the mode of taxation. In regard to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson.) I think, in a few words, that it is a little worse than the original section. I would prefer it as it stands here in the original, because the gentleman comes down on us with strong and substantial language, drawn just like the work of a lawyer, and says that all property, possessory rights, and claims, shall be taxed according to their true value in money. He fixes everything, and ties it down, so that there can be no escape whatever. [Laughter.] I would prefer to be allowed to vote for the old Section 1 of Article X.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not share in the feelings of my colleague (Mr. Chapin) in regard to the consumption of time on this subject, for I regard it as a question of too much importance to be passed over lightly. It is a question that challenges our deepest concern. It is on this very question that hinges the possibility of our maintaining a State Government. And, for one, I do not want, as I said this morning, to launch our Constitution and State Government upon the waters of experiment, unless there can be some evidence that we have in our midst the means adequate to maintain that government.

My friend and colleague, a gentleman whom I highly esteem, and who I believe is always governed by the highest convictions of duty and of right, takes a different view from myself on this question of taxing the mines. He lays down the proposition, that the mines need encouragement. Well, I admit that. Every interest needs encouragement. But the mines of this Territory have challenged the avarice and cupidity of the capital of the world, and you might as well attempt to knock the dong out of a bell, as to prevent these mines from being known and prospected. The world will come here; capital will come here; and though capitalists may be defeated in one operation, they will nevertheless make their investments in another. The mines must, and will be, prospected.

Now, my friend has, unfortunately, I think, alluded to the whale-fishery, and to other protective efforts of governments, for the development of particular interests. Why has Government offered bounties for the protection of those interests? Because they were trembling and feeble, not possessing sufficient vitality to bring forth the elements of success. And by means of the encouragement which the Government lent, they have acquired sufficient vitality to go forth and organize themselves for the carrying on of those enterprises, by which they have become vigorous institutions. Thus has the whale-fishery grown into an institution of great importance, and thus has the cod-fishery, also, grown up to be an important institution. And it is the same with all the other interests which are protected and encouraged in the same way, and which have in like manner grown up into importance. It was the far-seeing statesmanship of Henry Clay, and some other great men of that period, that brought our manufacturing interests up, so that broadcloths were reduced in price from ten and fourteen dollars, to two and three dollars per yard. It was this protection of the weak interests, which built up those interests.

But is this any reason why they should not bear their share of the burdens of Government? Go into the West, and see how such a rule would apply there. The farmers might say, "Look at the beautiful villages around us; they are all built up by the product of our farms; and now do you mean to tax us for the support of the Government, when we have built up so much other property?" But you would not for that reason exempt them and throw the whole burden upon the weaker institutions, which are struggling, perhaps, against foreign competition. Yet that would be just as rational and reasonable, I think, as the argument of my excellent friend and colleague from Storey County. Now, what is the weak interest of this Territory? Why, sir, during the last two or three years, as it seems to me, one of the weak interests of the Territory has been that of the mill-men. We have to-day more rock than we have mills to crush it. The mines are competent to get out more ore than the mills are competent to reduce; ergo, the mills should be exempted from taxation, and not the mines! That is one of our great interests, then, requiring protection, for we certainly do want more mills. I will be borne out in this by the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) and I think also by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks.) The gentleman from Lander tells us, that if they had ten times as many mills in his county, there would be a sufficient amount of rock to keep them in operation night and day. Go to Virginia City, and look at the vast accumulations there of cheap rock, which, in consequence of the high price of mill privileges, the failure of the mills for the want of water, and the lack of cheap means of transportation, will not compensate the miners for crushing. Then if we refer to the high price of living for the miner, we shall find that another weak interest is that of the railroad, and that ought to be protected by a premium. Then there is the want of water. The man who will dive down deep into the earth, not in search of rich mines, or deposits of ores, but to bore for those Artesian wells and springs which will give us mill-power, and the means of irrigation; the man who will furnish us the means of irrigating our lands, so as to enable us to obtain the products of the earth seventy-five, eighty, or ninety per cent. cheaper than the present prices, should, most assuredly, receive a premium. These are the things which need protection; and just as soon as we turn our minds and thoughts in the direction of true statesmanship, and look at the public interests which require protection, instead of the interests of the mines, which are potent enough to take care of themselves, we shall arrive at an idea of great importance to our community.

CHAPIN—COLLINS—EARL—JOHNSON.

[July 14.]

Now, as to this idea which my particular and excellent friend entertains, that the fall of our stocks is the result of the threatened tax upon the mines, or upon the products of the mines—however unwise I regard it on the part of Congress to entertain the idea of that project for a moment, and I think it was injudicious in the highest degree—still I do not think it has had an influence in depressing the mines to the amount of one-fifth of one per cent. I do not believe it has had any practical influence upon them at all. But I apprehend there are other causes for that depression, of which this is not the time nor place to speak; but if I had the time, I think I could show you a hundred and one reasons, each one more potent in its operation in that regard, than those to which the gentleman alludes. Now I want gentlemen of this Convention to look at the policy of this thing—

Mr. CHAPIN. Will my colleague allow me to correct him in one statement.

Mr. COLLINS. Certainly; I hope to be corrected whenever I am in error.

Mr. CHAPIN. My remarks in reference to that point were not alone in relation to the depression occasioned by the apprehended action of the Government; but what I had in view also, was the fact that Congress looks upon our mining interests as something different from any other property, and was proposing to levy a peculiar and special tax upon that description of property, different from the tax levied upon farms, or upon anything else, and therefore people had taken the alarm.

Mr. COLLINS. This will bring me back, for a moment, to the consideration of our Enabling Act. Gentlemen learned in the law have given it as their opinion that we cannot tax the mines, because Congress, in framing the Enabling Act, has forbidden it. Now, who believes—what lawyer will venture his reputation as a legal man upon the assertion—that Congress, in employing the language used in that Enabling Act, had any reference whatever to this extensive class of property existing in our Territory? I think, if you attempt to tax the property of the United States at Fort Churchill, or any other segregated property belonging to the Government in this Territory, you would find that the Government would resist such taxation; but if I have in the city of Virginia, a lot of land, and the Federal Government wants it for purposes of its own, the Federal Government will send agents to negotiate with me, and will pay me its full value for it. And so of every other kind of property in this Territory, which has not been segregated by the Federal Government. The farms, and the mines, and every description of property held by possessory title, were not in the mind of the drafter of that Enabling Act, but simply the property claimed, held, and possessed by the Federal Government, for its immediate wants and uses. That has been the course of the Government, so far as I have been able to trace it, all along through its history of eighty-eight years.

Now, sir, I would like to have my distinguished friend and colleague, and all the other gentlemen, who have so eloquently opposed this amendment, give us some substantive, practical idea of a plan by which this State Government can certainly be supported, without taxing the mines. Anything that will relieve from taxation those smaller claims, which the laboring men of the Territory are at work upon, and in which they have invested their hopes, I will most heartily and joyfully support, if I can.

Mr. EARL. I wish to ask my colleague a question. It is whether or not, under the amendment of my other colleague, (Mr. Tozer,) the Legislature have the right to tax the gross proceeds of the mines?

Mr. COLLINS. I am willing to accept the amendment of my friend and colleague, (Mr. Tozer,) if he will allow one word to be inserted there. I will read it as it would then stand:—

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real, possessory, and personal.

If he will accept that word "possessory," I will vote for it, for in that I see many advantages over the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby. (Mr. Johnson.)

Mr. JOHNSON. Right there we seem to make an issue, and if the gentleman will allow me, I will ask him what distinction he makes between the words "possessory claims," and "possessory rights?" For, I have used the word "possessory" in my amendment. Now, in what sense does the gentleman regard the distinction as existing?

Mr. COLLINS. I will give the gentleman, very gladly, my views on that question, for I hope we may always be clear and distinct in the enunciation of our opinions, in order that the people may understand what we do. I have a desire always to present my views in a form which will be least offensive to the community, and to my associates. In conversing with a gentleman, I might express my thoughts in a very offensive manner; whereas, by clothing them in the language of a gentleman, they would not be offensive. Now, I will remind the gentleman that there is nothing upon which the mining interest is more sensitive than in regard to taxing the mines—not in regard to tax-

JOHNSON—COLLINS.

ing the wealthy mines, however, for I do not believe that their owners will make any great opposition to being taxed, because it is so manifest that they ought to contribute towards the support of the Government. But it is the weak, low grade of mines—the miners who have claims which they hold at from one dollar to five dollars a foot, and which, they hope, in time, may be equal in value perhaps to the Ophir itself—it is from this class that the opposition will come, if any shall be made. And if I could make the language strong enough without using the word “claim,” I would not use that word, because with the miner, the word “claim” is associated with a mining claim, but is not associated at all with an agricultural claim. And on the stump, my friend from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) whose mind is so clear, who is such a skillful advocate, that he can draw conclusions from very weak premises—would make a great handle of that word “claim.” And if you take the case of a man who is less conscientious, and who, right or wrong, might be determined to defeat the Constitution, you give him, by using that word, the means of inflaming an audience of miners almost to desperation, so as to make them blind to everything that is good in your Constitution. For that reason, I would remove the word “claim,” because it would not strengthen the language of the section, in the least. I think that those three words, “real,” “personal,” and “mixed,” or “possessory,” cover all the property there is in the Territory. This word “claim,” in the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby, is therefore useless, although if it could add any real strength to the section, I should be willing to vote for it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will ask the gentleman, does he want to give the language of this section strength before the people, or in the Convention? I would like to know whether he desires to add strength to the constitutional provision, or merely to add strength to the argument before the people, who are to vote upon the Constitution?

Mr. COLLINS. Here is a provision, in the old Constitution, with which the public mind of the Territory has become perfectly familiar, and the only objection to it has been that it included the words, “mines and mining property.” Now, I introduced that clause, in the committee of the Convention of last year, and it was the last thing I did before my illness. I introduced those words, “mines and mining property,” and I did that, in order that we might go before the people with a fair understanding; not that the section gains any strength from that language, but to prevent any possible quibble or evasion. The public mind of the Territory, from one end to the other, has become perfectly familiar with that language, and it is well understood that the people would be satisfied with that section, with those words stricken out. But another objection has been raised here to-day, and to make that matter more clear, in consequence of the language of the Enabling Act, which says that we shall not tax the property of the United States, it has been deemed by gentlemen here for whom I have the most profound respect, that the insertion of the word “possessory,” would be of value. I think so, also, and therefore I say, the only alteration I would make, after striking out the words, “including mines and mining property,” would be to insert that word “possessory.”

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman answer the question which I have asked him—whether he desires to impart strength to the provision in the Constitution by using words which will leave it without doubt that the mines are to be taxed, or to add strength to the argument before the people, when the Constitution goes before them? Does he wish to use the word “possessory,” to add strength in the Constitution, or for the sake of the argument before the people?

Mr. COLLINS. I am decidedly in favor of adding strength to the Constitution.

Mr. JOHNSON. If that be so, and the word “claim” be used, I would ask the gentleman further, whether there is any difference in the application of that word “claim,” whether it be applied to that which is worth a dollar a foot, or to that which is worth a thousand dollars a foot? If applicable to a mining claim at all, can there be any distinction between that which is worth a dollar, and that which is worth a thousand dollars a foot?

Mr. COLLINS. I conceive that this word “possessory,” which I have introduced, makes the section as strong as the English language can make it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman answer my question, since he has given me permission to ask it? I will repeat the question, so that it cannot be misunderstood. It is, whether he conceives that there is any difference in the application of the word “claim” to a mining claim, whether it is one which is worth only a dollar, or ten dollars a foot, or one that is worth a thousand, or ten thousand dollars a foot?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not think the word “claim” gives the least value, directly—

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there any difference, my question is, in the application of that word, between a claim which is worth a dollar a foot, and one which is worth ten thousand dollars a foot?

Mr. COLLINS. I think not; either to a house-lot, a farm, or to anything else. The point with me, is this: This section is familiar to the public mind, from one end of the Territory to the other, as I before remarked. It has been canvassed thoroughly, and it has been accepted by ranch-men, by miners, and by everybody else, as all that can be required. It is believed that through it, with the words, “mines and mining property” stricken out, the mines and all mining property will be taxed: for it is not for the purpose of avoiding the taxation of the mines, but simply because the words are surplusage, just as the gentleman's word "claim" is surplusage, that we wish to strike them out. The section is just as strong without those words. But the words "mines and mining property," have awakened a powerful opposition among the miners, and if we strike out those objectionable words, and put in the word "claim," that would still operate to excite them intensely. Therefore, I am in favor of using such language as shall answer all the purposes of the Government for taxation, but which shall not, at the same time, tend in its operation to stimulate and excite the minds of the mining community. I believe that is wise. I do not think, because I may have a difference in opinion with a friend, that I should place my language in the most offensive form, when I communicate with him. On the contrary, I think that if I have the correct idea—as a gentleman of caution, as a gentleman of discretion, as one who means to carry a point harmlessly—I should frame my language cautiously and courteously, but with perspicuity.

JOHNSON—COLLINS.

But again, I say, if any gentleman will introduce an amendment that shall relieve that small class of miners—the men who locate their own claims—the men who, with pick and shovel, penetrate the bowels of the earth, horizontally, perpendicularly, or on an incline—those men whose only wealth is their hope—if we can relieve them from taxation, I say, I shall be glad to do it. But you know, as well as I do, that when a mine becomes worth five, ten, or twenty dollars a foot, foreign capital comes in, and gobbles it up. The scriptures tell us to love our neighbors as ourselves, but it does not tell us that we must love the non-resident better than we do the citizen, nor that foreign capital should be allowed to come in and draw cent-per-cent from our mines, and that we should relieve it altogether from taxation. That is neither just nor proper. But the poor miners, and not only them, but laboring men of all classes and descriptions, I would like to see exempted. If that cannot be done, if we must lay the axe at the root of the tree, and allow no exemption, even for charitable, or religious purposes, the poor miner, or the poor farmer, then I say let us take the whole Section 1, of Article X, and, with the amendment which I have suggested, adopt it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that anything I can say will have any influence upon the action of members, but as we pass along, I will say this, that no man in the Convention or out of it, shall ever have occasion to say that I have used a word of argument, or advocated any one proposition, that was calculated to cover over anything, or to secure any end by surreptitious means.

Mr. COLLINS. Does the gentleman mean to convey the idea that I have done so?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; I did not say that; but when I get through, if I shall have said anything unparliamentary, I will subject myself to the censure of the gentleman from Storey.

I assume this proposition, that no man thus far has heard me speak upon any subject, but knows that I have been unmistakably in favor of whatever proposition I have attempted to advance, and when I have advocated the placing of any words in this instrument, it has only been to incorporate such words therein that the simplest in the land, upon reading them, might understand what they meant. I have not avoided the responsibility of incorporating words which might be offensive to a portion of the tax-payers of this State that is to be. But I have sedulously sought to do this, starting out with the broad proposition that all property—whether it be in the mines, or not—of little value or great value—or whether it be in houses, in goods, in stocks, or anything else—should, according to the value of that property, contribute its quota, ratably, to the support of the Government. And what I have intended, or have sought to place in this instrument, has been with the intention and purpose of carrying out that view, without assimilating or conforming my language to what people might think was or was not due to a sense of propriety. Now, sir, I have thought, and I do still think, that if it is the purpose and intention of members of this Convention to provide that all property and possessory claims, whether of such description of property of which the title in fee is in the individual, or of that property where the title is in the Government, but the individual has the possessory right, shall be taxed according to the value of that property or possessory right—its value in money, using the language of the amendment—that those who own or claim such property, shall contribute their proportion to the support of the Government, then the Convention should say so, in this Constitution, in unequivocal language.

Now, sir, I must say, in all candor and frankness, to my friend from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) that after all the various questions which I propounded to him, I was not able to deduce from his answers to those questions, the conclusion whether he was for or against the taxing of property and possessory rights, according to their value. If the word "claim" applies, and is obnoxious because it is peculiarly applicable to the small class of claims, or the holding of small priced claims—if that is the sense of the gentleman's objection—I cannot see, for the life of me, why the word is not equally obnoxious, and equally applicable, to those claims which are of a higher class. And if the striking out of that word will, in its operation, exempt those which are of the smaller class, those who have claims that are worth a dollar, or five dollars, or ten dollars a foot, I cannot see why it should not also exclude those which are worth a thousand, or ten thousand dollars a foot. If the word "claim" has any significance, I desire to retain it, and from the remarks of gentlemen it is apparent that it has some peculiar import, else there would not be so much objection to it from the other gentlemen who are advocating the striking out of those words. If it were not objectionable to them they would consent to its use, notwithstanding that they might regard it only as surplusage—they would accept the word, for all that. But the fact is that it has a significance, as applicable to mining property beyond that which is apparent upon the surface.

Thursday,]

FITCH—JOHNSON—EARL—DELONG.

[July 14.

Now, sir, we know, and all gentlemen who have lived in new States know, the peculiar applicability of the term "possessory rights." It is ordinarily applicable to the right of possession which the individual has to agricultural and grazing lands. The word "claim," however, is a word which, although in itself it imports not a great deal, yet in the experience of those who have lived for years in a mining community, it denotes a great deal. Every man here knows full well that it has a local signification and meaning—a meaning which cannot be misunderstood, because it has been so long employed and used in a peculiar sense. But my friend from Storey fears that when that word is used in the Constitution it will exert some tremendous power to prevent the miners from voting for the Constitution. Because why? Not, says he, because of any particular significance it has.

Mr. FITCH [interrupting.] Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Would he be in favor of allowing the section to pass, with the words "mines and mining property" stricken out? or would he prefer to have it definitely stated that mines shall not be taxed?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir. I am in favor, now, henceforth, and forever, of the one broad proposition, that all property, and possessory rights, as well as other property—everything that can be converted into money—shall, upon the basis of its valuation, be made to contribute to the support of the Government; and for the reason which I gave the gentleman this morning, and the gentleman's memory cannot be wholly at fault as to that.

Mr. FITCH. The gentleman misapprehends my question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will accept of any proposition which will tax every species of property that has a cash market value.

Mr. FITCH. What I wish to ask is this: both propositions being alike objectionable to the gentleman, would he rather have it left that the mines shall not be taxed, or would he prefer to have the section pass leaving out those words "mines and mining property?"

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; that is not my position, and it is a heresy to which I do not subscribe. I do not seek to avoid responsibility. On this question, I want every man in the Territory to understand fully my position. I do not wish—I will not say it in regard to anything which has been said here—I am not willing to say or do anything here which would have a fraudulent effect upon any portion of the voters, or the people of this Territory. I repeat, that I am in favor of exempting nothing which has a money value, from contributing its quota to the support of the Government. That is my position, and I have repeated it, time and again. I want to place in the Constitution, words which shall render certain and unmistakable what we mean. And if, on the other hand, gentlemen desire to make a distinction, by which the mines may be exempted from taxation, then I say—"Gentlemen, show your hands, boldly, and seek not to avoid the responsibility which you owe to those who sent you here, or to those who are to come hereafter. Place no words there, trusting to the chances of judicial or legislative interpretation. Let it be one way or the other; but come squarely up to the mark, and say what you mean." That is my position. And I say to those who agree with me, and, I am free to add, to some of those who only apparently agree with me, that everything which has a cash value, shall be made, so far as I am concerned, to contribute its quota to the support of the Government, so far as designating it here, in plain, unmistakable language may provide for it.

Mr. EARL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does he propose to tax a prospecting mine?

Mr. JOHNSON. If it has a cash value, I do. If it has a value of ten dollars, one hundred dollars, or one thousand dollars a foot, if it has any cash value in the market, just to that extent do I propose to tax it. And I can see or imagine no reason why it should not be taxed. If it be a prospecting interest, which can be turned into money, to the extent perhaps of thousands of dollars, I see no valid reason why its owner should not be taxed, just as well as I, or another man, who owns a town lot, or a mill-site, or a team, which he can as readily turn into money. I can see and know of no reason why one should not contribute, as well as the other, to the support of the Government.

Mr. DELONG. In reply to one remark of the gentleman from Ormsby, I desire to say, that I consider we have shown our hands, and shown them pretty plainly. I have said that I am in favor of taxing the mines, and I think there has been no shirking.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I will say this, if the gentleman will excuse and pardon the imputation, that I think that they are devoid of frankness, when they tell us that they want to leave out those words, and submit the matter to the Legislature.

Mr. DELONG. The difference is in a legal point of view, however. The gentleman says the mines are property, and we say that they are not. We propose to leave it so that if he is right, the mines will be taxed, and if not, and if we are right, they will be exempted. That is what we want.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman has an advantage of me now, in advocating that which I conceive to be a most damnable heresy. He has the advantage in this: that since the Constitution which serves as our basis was framed, the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of its power and prerogative, has passed a law, in which it is said that the property of the Government cannot, and shall not, be taxed. Prior to that time, gentlemen who advocate that view, had not the benefit of this argument. Independently of the legal proposition, enunciated through the legitimate channels, I was prepared to go before the Legislature, or the courts of the land, and maintain, successfully, as I conceive, the proposition, that mining claims, or interests, are as much property, under the laws of the Territory, as any other designated species of property which can be named. Now, it is alleged that we are inhibited from taxing the property itself; but sir—and I have now to commend myself to the attention of a gentleman who spoke earlier in the day—I deny that it is not in the power of this Constitution to provide that the Legislature may, and shall, impose a tax upon the possessory right of any individual on the government lands, mining or agricultural. This, sir, I conceive to be a foregone conclusion. There are gentlemen who have lived in new States, and participated in the formation of State Governments—gentlemen whose birth-place has been upon the soil of Territories which have since grown into States, great in their proportions, in their population, in their wealth, and in political influence—and those gentlemen are quite familiar, whether they are lawyers or not, with the fact, that in those States, from time immemorial, they have provided for the taxation of possessory rights and improvements. And when the right was in fee simple, when a survey was made by the Federal Government, and a patent issued, then, and not till then, they have taxed the higher title which was thereby obtained.

Mr. DELONG. If the gentleman will pardon the interruption—this clause appears in the Enabling Act, under which we are drafting this Constitution:—

“And that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States, residing within the said State, shall never be taxed higher than the land belonging to the residents thereof; and that no taxes shall be imposed by said State, on lands or property therein, belonging to, or which may hereafter be purchased by, the United States.”

Now, if it is admitted that the lands belong to the United States, and are within the State, could the Legislature impose a tax upon them?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the point, exactly. We cannot tax the lands, and the gentleman has offered an amendment in that respect. These gentlemen foresaw this, and they are not without shrewdness. They had read the Enabling Act before they came within this Convention, and they understand well the advantage to be gained by the adoption of the simple amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Tozer.) They are not deficient in duly estimating that point, and I will frankly say that they have now exhibited their hand in full. I do not think they have a “full hand,” but it approximates to it.

Mr. DELONG. If it was not a “full” hand, we drew one. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. But there are hands that beat a “full,” as, no doubt, the gentleman has learned by experience. [Laughter.] These gentlemen were not so unsophisticated as not to know that by simply taking the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) there would be nothing in the State to tax but the houses on the mineral lands; and I do not know as even those would be subject to taxation. The gentleman from Storey understands the law on the subject of freeholds. I do not know that there are decisions of Minnesota which will bear it out, but certain decisions of California will—that where anything is annexed to the freehold, it becomes part of it. The freehold carries with it the improvements; and not only the mines, but the mills, and the hoisting apparatus, and everything connected with the mines, may be held to be so fixed to the soil that they cannot be taxed. And all those fine houses, and buildings, and palatial residences that line the hill-sides between Virginia City and Gold Hill, will escape, because they are fixed to the soil. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) would be found, with logic irresistible, advocating the proposition, that it is illegal to impose a tax even on the improvements. If an assessment were made on the value of the improvements of the Gould & Curry property, my friend would be found in the courts resisting, and I believe successfully resisting, the attempt to impose, even upon that property, a tax for the support of our Government. These gentlemen had foreseen this, and well nigh had we been caught in the trap. But, sir, there were others than myself on this floor, who had considered the consequences of the adoption of that amendment, leaving only personal and real property to be taxed—and if that had been done, there would have been very little of any kind of property subject to taxation.

I do not know how earnestly gentlemen are in favor of a State Constitution, or how desirable a State Government may be in the minds of the members of the Convention. So far as it has been developed on this floor as yet, there is but one gentleman opposed to the formation of a State Government, and that gentleman had the frankness, at an early hour in the session, to avow his position. I refer to the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) and I think I do him no injustice in stating that he is now opposed to it.

Mr. DUNNE. Not the slightest.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman, then, is still opposed—for I take it that the converse of his proposition is correct—to a State Government. Now, I do not deny to the gentleman the right to that judgment, nor the right to the due exercise of that judgment. He has the same privilege in that respect that others have. And that, nevertheless, he has performed his duties here faithfully and well, I fully believe, and I have no doubt he will continue to do so to the close of this Convention.

HOVEY—JOHNSON—DELONG.

[July 14.

Mr. HOVEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ormsby a question. Under the statute of the United States exempting these public lands from sale for five years, does he propose that his amendment will cover those lands, so that they shall be subject to taxation?

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman is mistaken in assuming that the lands may not be sold by the General Government, at any time.

Mr. HOVEY. I think it is provided in the Enabling Act that they shall not be sold for five years.

Mr. JOHNSON. Before the Enabling Act arrived here, we were so informed, by a newspaper correspondent, but there is no such inhibitory feature in the Act. This is a little further west than some others of the new States, and they did not place such a provision in our Enabling Act.

Now, if we adopt the section as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) what have we left to be subjected to taxation for the support of the Government of a great and mighty State, which is to be represented in the councils of the Nation by two able and distinguished Senators, as I doubt not they will be, and in the lower House by one talented Representative? Possibly, too, the State of Nevada may be allowed to participate in the election of the President of the United States. And yet, to sustain all this grandeur, and glory, and political power, what is there left to the people of this State to be taxed? Why, sir, to support this immense power and dignity as a State, we shall have nothing but what little personal property there is scattered about the Territory and the little property owned in fee by individuals, and at the present time there is scarcely any of that latter description of property—none at all, I was going to say, for no patents are issued until the parties have proved up their preëmption claims, and gentlemen who are familiar with the red-tape movements of the General Land Office, know that it is likely to be two or three years before they can obtain their muniments of title from the General Government. What is there left, then, to be taxed? Nothing but the personal property.

Now, is there any gentleman who has spoken on this question here, who has for a single moment entered into any estimate of the probable amount of taxes to be derived from such a source? What gentleman has presented any figures on this subject? Unfortunately, we are deprived of the presence of our distinguished friend from Storey, (Mr. Ball,) who is thought to be rather expert in that way, else there might have been some demonstration in the matter of figures, but I am inclined to think it would be upon our side that those figures would have been presented, rather than on the other, for I am sure there is no gentleman so skilled in that branch of science called mathematics that he would be able to present estimates showing that under such an arrangement as is contemplated by the proposition of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) we should not be entering upon an experiment which would be a formidable one for the people of this Territory; or in other words, that without the taxation of the mines the State organization would not be a burden too grievous to be borne. The value of the amount of property which would be subject to taxation under the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, would be so immaterial that it would be impossible to carry on the State Government upon such a basis.

Now, I want gentlemen of the Convention to bring their minds to this work, with calm thought and dispassionate consideration. What we are doing to-day, and shall be doing to-morrow—what we have been doing for the last ten days—all we have done in the past, and all we shall do in the future, is to be "love's labor lost," unless we provide by language which the people can understand, for a basis of revenue which will be ample, so that the people can appreciate their ability to support our State Government. Why idle away our time here? Why spend these valuable moments in useless and endless discussions, if that is to be the fate of the instrument so soon to pass from our hands? I, for one, must say that I do not flatter myself for a single moment, however earnestly I desire the adoption of a State Government, that the labors of the Convention will amount to anything if it is to go forth that we have stamped a lie on the face of this instrument; for it is to be presumed that this Convention, or any other Convention assembled to adopt a fundamental law for a State Government, will at least provide the means for its maintenance and existence; but when, on the contrary, we stamp on the instrument we are framing that which kills it at its birth—yes, even before its birth, so that, as the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason,) has stated, it will be an abortion—I say sir, that the people of this Territory, who have sent us here, will in no wise thank us for all our labors, and we would certainly have done better if on the first day we met, we had adjourned, in accordance with the resolutions introduced by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Duane,) which received, I believe, not a single vote except his own. It would have been better for us to have gone home to our business, and to have announced to our constituents the melancholy fact that as a people, they are not yet able to support a State Government.

Mr. DELONG. Will the gentleman permit me to present some figures on this subject, since he has called for figures?

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman will allow me to have them, I will read them myself. I am tolerably good at figures.

Thursday.]

DELONG—JOHNSON—FITCH.

[July 14.

Mr. DELONG. Let me say a few words, first, and I will then hand them over.

Mr. JOHNSON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DELONG. Five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

Mr. DELONG. There has been a good deal of loud talk here to the effect that if this tax is not levied on the mines, the State Government cannot be maintained, and this Constitution will burst up, because the support of the State Government falls back entirely on these extraordinary cow county gentlemen. Now, how does it stand at present—without including the mines, but taking the property as it now stands? Here is a recapitulation: Storey County, which is supposed to be exclusively a mining county, pays taxes on over $14,000,000; Ormsby County, which through its representatives here, threatens a dissolution of the Government, or at least the defeat of the Constitution, if it cannot have its own way, pays taxes on only $1,983,655 26, or about one-seventh of the amount of the taxable property of Storey County; Washoe County, which is an agricultural county, is taxed upon $2,623,000; Douglas County, which has been on the rampage here, struggling for the taxation of the mines, pays on $772,000, not quite a million; Lyon County, which is a mining county mostly, is taxed upon $2,373,000; Humboldt County, exclusively a mining county, pays on $579,000; Esmeralda County, exclusively a mining county, or nearly so, is taxed upon upwards of a million; Lander County, exclusively a mining county, pays somewhere about the same. The total amount of taxable property is put down here at $25,580,423 37. And these three counties—Ormsby, Washoe, and Douglas—which are the only strictly agricultural counties, and whose representatives make such a terrific attack on the Convention in regard to taxing the mines, are paying taxes altogether according to these figures on just about five millions of dollars worth of property only, out of twenty-five millions of taxable property in the Territory at the present time. And yet they insist that they must have things just to suit them. They tell us we must yield to their demands, or have no State Government; in other words, that we must add to this twenty millions, on which we are already paying taxes, a direct tax upon our mines, although we are now paying nearly all the taxes. We are taxed upon property amounting to twenty millions of dollars, while they are paying taxes on only five millions, and yet they must have the mines added to our share of the burden. They must tax our mines, they insist, although we are now paying four times as much of the tax as they are.

Another thing: our taxable property is increasing all the time, and will continue to increase; while theirs would not be increased one cent, by the proposed change. That is what is the matter. These are the gentlemen who clamor for the taxation of the mines, and for equal taxation. These are the gentlemen who raise potatoes, and cabbages, and peas, and sell them at their own prices; and, not satisfied with taxing what we have, expect us also to pay taxes on what we hope to obtain hereafter.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is true the taxable property of Ormsby County was, last year, only about two millions of dollars, and the gentleman assumes that because Ormsby County was only taxed on that amount, there was no other property upon which her citizens were taxed. The gentleman is slightly mistaken in his assumption. I know of many citizens in Ormsby County who own property in Storey County, and they are probably as prompt tax-payers in Storey, as any in that county, or Ormsby County either. But I did not propose to raise any invidious distinction as between Ormsby County and Storey County. I have interests in that county, and have had, ever since my arrival in this Territory. My principal business for some considerable time was in that county. But I do not desire, in any discussion in which I may take a part here, to raise any of those invidious distinctions, or to say anything calculated to arouse local or sectional jealousies.

Mr. DELONG. I disclaim any such intention on my part. I meant only to show the counties from which the money comes. Now, men usually pay their taxes where they live, and if a man living in Ormsby County pays his taxes in Ormsby County, he is not generally charged in Storey County. I had no intention, however, of making any invidious distinctions.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I will take that remark back. But this is not the question we are considering. The question is: what will you leave from which to raise money by taxation for the support of the Government? What will there be on which to base your taxation, if you adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey? (Mr. Tozer.) And the other gentleman from Storey (Mr. De Long) very adroitly avoided a reply to this question. Now, we have on this floor, another equally honorable gentleman from Storey County, who tells us that property in the county of Storey has been assessed this year about four times its cash value. This suggestion involves another gentleman from Storey, possibly—and I hope while I am speaking he will not rise to a question of privilege, and then, it may be, the other gentleman will not—of whom it has been stated here, and therefore it is not mere rumor, that he has been taxed at least three-fold more than he should have been. It is said that he was assessed for six thousand dollars, on a piece of property which he would have taken two thousand for then, and which he would be glad to take five hundred dollars for now.

Mr. FITCH. Yes, sir, if I could get it. But my other friend and colleague (Mr. Hovey) is in a worse condition.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have had him in my mind's eye, and it is understood between us,

Thursday.]

HOVEY—JOHNSON—KINKEAD—HAWLEY—DELONG—CHAPIN.

[July 14.]

that he is not to rise to a question of privilege. [Merriment.] Now, that is the proposition before us. In regard to the assessment of property in Storey County, here we have an illustration—one lot assessed for six thousand dollars, which was only worth two thousand dollars, and for which the owner is willing to take five hundred dollars now. The presumption is, taking that as a basis, that to-day the assessable property of Storey County—and that, mark you, is including also the gross proceeds of the mines—would not amount to more than—

Mr. HOVEY [interrupting.] No, sir; it would make nineteen million dollars and over, if you include the proceeds of the mines.

Mr. JOHNSON. Under what law, then, are the mines assessed?

Mr. HOVEY. We make the assessment under the same law.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are not the gross proceeds, then, included in this grand total, or aggregate?

Mr. HOVEY. No, sir.

Mr. KINKEAD. Because there never has been anything collected on them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, then; that renders Storey County a worse delinquent than I thought it was. But that is neither here nor there, in regard to the subject we have before us. This property I have referred to, was a town lot, and had nothing to do with the assessment of mines. Now, when the assessors are efficient officers, and sworn to discharge their duties properly, the presumption is, that they have discharged their duty faithfully; and if a depreciation has occurred in this instance, the same rule might be made to apply throughout; so that if there were fourteen millions of taxable property in Storey County last year, by that ratio it would be only about two and a half millions at the present time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Five millions.

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, yes; five millions. The figures came so rapidly, that I did not get the calculation exactly right. I will say here, that Ormsby County, in its assessment for this year, will not fall short of last year, and therefore, upon such a basis, Ormsby County will have more taxable property this year than Storey County. But whether this will be the case or not, I do not seriously undertake to say—and some of these remarks, of course, are to be taken rather in a jocose sense. But this I will say, and I challenge contradiction, that the property assessed in Storey County last year, upon an assumed cash basis of fourteen millions of dollars, leaving out the mining property, if assessed again to-day, would not exceed one-half that amount.

Mr. DELONG. A great deal more property has come in since that time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; and a great deal has been carried away since that time. But these assessments run eight months into last year, being made up to November. I will state this proposition—and I do not think Storey County has a defender here so ardent as to undertake to gainsay it—that this day, if the taxable property of Storey County, exclusive of mining property, were re-assessed, according to its market value, it would not amount to one half what it did last year. I do not believe that any gentleman here differs with me in this opinion.

Mr. CHAPIN. I beg to correct the gentleman. There certainly would be no such discount as that. I do not believe it, and my colleagues all around me say the same.

Mr. JOHNSON. I knew that my friend from Storey (Mr. Chapin) was not in the discount business, but I hardly expected that he would refuse to discount that statement. But this fact is assuredly indisputable, as gentlemen know full well, that last year there was murmuring and complaining, and the press in Storey County teemed with articles deprecatory of the assessments, and condemning the valuations which the assessors had made. Will the gentleman deny this? Now, sir, I have no doubt that upon the basis of last year, the property of that county, if re-assessed to-day, would not exceed in value one half the value of last year.

But, sir, we must not forget the main point—a proposition which no lawyer, at least, will gainsay, that under the operation of the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) millions of this same property—in one instance alone, a hundred thousand dollars—would be exempt from the operation of the tax-laws, or the operation of any tax-laws which it would be within the power of the Legislature of the State of Nevada to enact. Millions would be exempted under that provision. I see that the gentleman from Storey, the author of the amendment, shakes his head. I do not propose to join issue with him on the legal proposition, and I do not suppose he proposes to deny it, but I will say that I am willing to place myself on the records of this Convention as expressing the belief that under the amendment which he proposes, there would be exempted from taxation, all that property of which I have spoken.

Then, how many millions of property would there be left in the State, subject to the operation of the tax-laws, to aid in the support of the State Government? Last year we were able to present facts and figures which demonstrated clearly that there would be eighty millions of dollars of property subject to the tax-laws; and yet we know that the Constitution was rejected by the people. One gentleman attributes its rejection to one cause, whilst another assigns a different reason for its defeat; but this fact I do know, that the only organized opposition that we had to encounter—we who were the advocates of the State Government—was found in the county of Storey. And what was the basis of that opposition? It was, that we were too poor to bear the expense of a State Government. These gentlemen who oppose the taxing of the mines, know that fact.

Thursday.]

CHAPIN—JOHNSON—DELONG.

[July 14.

There was an organized Executive Committee in that county, embracing many if not most of the leading citizens, one of whom has the honor now of occupying a seat on the floor of this Convention; and I recollect well the circular which was sent forth, containing the address emanating from that committee, and in which was embodied the one distinct proposition—and it was the chief ground of opposition alleged by them—that the people were too poor to bear the burdens of a State Government. If that were so then, with a taxable property of eighty millions, where will you find your one hundred millions, or your eighty millions, or your sixty, or your forty, or even your twenty millions of taxable property upon which to base the support of a State Government now? The question which we have to consider, narrows itself down to this point.

Now, sir, I do not propose to discuss the question of the price of cabbages, or potatoes, or the extraordinary influences which such matters—as the remarks of some gentlemen would lead us to infer—are to exercise on the minds of the people of this Territory; but I do propose to have this feature of our Constitution presented in such wise that the people cannot fail to understand that in the organic law which we frame, providing for a State organization, we have incorporated such provisions as will enable them to avoid excessive taxation, if as a community they shall decide to become a State. For, without equal taxation, upon mining, and every species of property, it will become a burden altogether too grievous to be borne. On the other hand, if that is not done, I propose to present to the people, in language that cannot be mistaken, the fact that we have incorporated in our Constitution provisions that shall not deceive them—that we have framed a Constitution which cannot in its terms mislead the public mind—although at the same time it declares that certain species of property alone, shall bear the burden of taxation. If we make an issue, I say, let us make it fairly.

Sir, I repeat that I want no government that is not self-sustaining. I want nothing in our Constitution but what is founded on the immutable principles of equity and justice. I care not what motive may be attributed to me, for my action in this matter. I know that the positions which I have taken here, are based upon those principles which are correct and just, and which will govern my every vote, during the sessions of this Convention. I shall act throughout as I have hitherto, upon the one broad principle that all property, possessory claims, or rights—everything convertible into money—shall contribute pro rata its support to our government. Unless we can devise a system of government founded upon this principle of equity, and justice, and right, I am prepared now to say, as I shall at a later period, I want no State Government.

I would prefer, rather, hereafter as heretofore, to stand in defence and support of that law now contained in our statutes. That is a subject, I know, upon which these gentlemen are somewhat tender-footed, because it is a statute which requires them to bear a part of the burdens of government; but we now have in the laws of the Territory, a provision that mining property shall be taxed. The Congress of the United States never inhibited it. Such has been its own policy, and such have been the expressions of those who have represented the people of this Territory, coming alike from the mining and from the agricultural counties. We can, by the grace of God, and vigilant assessors and collectors, enforce that statute, at least to some extent; and by its operation, we shall be enabled next year to make a better exhibit, through the report of the Territorial Treasurer, my colleague here, (Mr. Kinkead,) of the financial affairs of the Territory, than we can at the present time.

Gentlemen may talk about taxing gross proceeds, and net proceeds, but we have been told by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Hovey) that there is a discrepancy of some four millions of dollars between the assessments of Storey County as reported, and the same assessments as they were actually made, and that discrepancy, too, mark you, was in an assessment founded upon these gross proceeds. Now if you narrow this question down to a precise point, you will find that it is this—and I say it with all deference to the gentlemen who are so earnestly in favor of taxing the gross proceeds, because I hope they are more sincere—that the grand object, after all, is to avoid taxation upon the mines altogether. And I think my friend here from Storey (Mr. Chapin) will hardly assume otherwise.

Mr. CHAPIN. The gentleman must not assume too much. Wait till we have produced something. Wait till we come into port with a cargo, and then it may be taxed. I will not object to that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then is the gentleman willing to tax the gross proceeds?

Mr. CHAPIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I do not think my other friend from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) will make so frank a concession. There is an obvious disagreement between the gentlemen.

Mr. DELONG. We have not the capacity of being united, as you have on the other side, because you all agree in wanting to tax us as much as you can.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose there are such antagonistic elements in your county that you find it impossible to unite upon anything. However, we have now a law which taxes the gross proceeds of the mines, and you cannot repeal it, unless you elect to the Legislature a majority from Storey County, and I do not think that can be done. This year, at all events, there is no earthly power which can prevent the taxation of mining property, if not according to its cash value, at least approximately so;

Thursday.]

BROSNAK.

and thereby we may be enabled to pay off some portion of what I regard, considering the short period of the existence of the Territory, as an enormous debt, and a living scandal as well as an exhausting burden upon the people of the Territory. And then the immense wealth we have will be talked about, and promulgated through the columns of the newspapers, and sent broadcast over the land, to induce and stimulate, and invite immigration, under the operation of those laws, until at last we shall have a sufficiency of population and wealth to support a State. Until that time, we can afford to continue under a territorial form of government.

Unless we adopt the features embodied in the amendment I have submitted, and reject that of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer.) it is to my mind a foregone conclusion that we cannot support a State Government, and the people of this Territory never will be such, as I might justly say, arrant knaves and fools, as to attempt it. They will not undertake to set up a State Government at an enormous expense, far beyond their means, merely for the sake of the petty grandeur of having two representatives in the United States Senate, as well as a representative in the other branch of Congress, who can not only speak, but vote. No, sir; the people will not take upon themselves the gaudy trappings of a State under any such conditions.

Mr. BROSNAK. I have been very much edified with the interesting debate which this subject has evoked from this Convention, although I should have been better pleased if the discussion had not taken quite so wide a range. To my mind, the debate which has taken place, would have been very appropriate if we had been proposing at this time to enact a law fixing the class or character of property upon which the burdens of taxation should be imposed. But I do not conceive that we are here to discharge any such duty. I submit to the good sense of this Convention that our duty is, barely to define a rule, clear and positive, as to the aggregate of property, without making any specification of the class or classes of property which shall be taxed—that we are to establish a rule which shall be uniform, and which, within the limits and boundaries of the State, shall be universal. We are not here to designate whether or not cows, or oxen, or calves, or anything else, shall be assessed, or in what manner they shall be so assessed, but simply to lay down a general rule for the guidance of the law-making power.

The state of my health, and my disinclination to trespass long upon the Convention, will prevent me from expressing my views fully on the subjects which have been touched upon in the course of this debate, by gentlemen who have spoken before me. I do not propose even to take up the arguments which have been advanced by the several gentlemen. I should like to see a spirit of conciliation manifested in the Convention on this question. I deprecate certain sentiments which have been expressed, and certain intimations which have been thrown out, indicative of an intention on the part of gentlemen, if they are not satisfied or pleased with the results of our deliberations, that they will, at a future time, take the position that they do not want, or that we do not want, any State Government. I look upon that spirit as one which ought to be buried in this Convention. It is very evident, because it is in the nature of men, that we must inevitably have some disagreement on a question like this, inasmuch as there is a conflict of interests between us; but I think, as sensible men, as reasonable men, as brethren, I might say, in all the political relations of life, at least, we ought to be willing to make concessions to one another. It is very clear that unless we do that, we never can arrive at any harmonious or satisfactory conclusion.

My own views need not be expressed on this subject, Mr. Chairman, for I had the honor of sitting in a Convention called for the same purpose as this, which was assembled here last year, and I then had no concealments as to my opinions. They are on record upon this question, and, sir, the oak, at the age of nearly fifty years, is a little too old to be transplanted. I entertain the same opinions to-day that I did then, and those opinions were, in effect, that in my judgment the mines should be subjected to the burdens of Government inasmuch as they required its protection, and upon the same scale, and under the same rule as attaches to the taxation of other property. That is my judgment to-day. But I have an idea of my own as to what a mine is. What is a mine? A man who is in search of a ledge, I take it, has no mine; when he has a mine, then, of course, it should be subject to taxation, and not before. But you cannot draw that fine line of distinction in this Constitution, and that part of the modus operandi of taxation you must necessarily leave to the Legislature, just as you leave the Legislature to levy the taxes upon any other description or character of property.

We all seem to agree, Mr. Chairman, upon this proposition, that the mines, at some period of their progress, should be taxed, as well as all other property, and there seems to be so little disagreement in reality between us, that if we should lay aside our prejudices, if we could lay aside the apprehensions which we have entertained in regard to those who are to succeed to us in shaping legislation in this State, as to whether or not they will be honest and capable men; if we would only consider that their interests will be identified with ours, though varied perhaps in some respects, I think there would be no difficulty in coming to a determination of this question. We should consider that gentlemen will come to the Legislature from what we call the "cow counties," as they will from the counties whose principal interest consists in mining; and when they get here they may be as wise as we are, and they will certainly have a little more practical experience than we in the history of mining, and in the development of that interest. It seems to me it would be more sensible and reasonable on our part to leave something in their hands, in regard to a matter which is as complicated as this question seems to be.

Now, sir, one gentleman has said that if we strike out the words, "including mines and mining property," the Legislature would be estopped, so to speak, from the taxation of that species of property, no matter how rich a mine might be. With all due respect to the gentleman who has advanced that idea, I deny it, both as a proposition of law, and as a statement of fact; because a mine is property, as I hold, notwithstanding that in that opinion I may disagree with my learned friend and colleague, (Mr. DeLong,) who, if I understood him correctly, maintained the doctrine that a mine is not property. That it is property seems so plain and manifest to my mind that a gentleman of the intelligence of my colleague, by holding an opposite opinion, would be in danger of losing his standing as a reasonable and reflecting man. But he does not mean that a mine is not property; he means to say only that according to his idea of it, when a man is searching for a mine, and has money invested in that search, that investment is not property. I suppose that is the extent to which he would go. Neither do I agree with those gentlemen who say that property in land in this Territory belonging to the United States Government is not subject to taxation. I say it is subject to taxation, and is property, although the fee is in the Government. My friend and colleague said, I thought, very unhappily, that we were upon this land in the character of "permitted trespassers." There is a paradox which I think he cannot explain. A trespasser is not permitted, for if permitted he is not a trespasser. Sir, the settler under the laws of Congress, the settler under the bounty of the General Government, is not a trespasser.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the repeated efforts which have been made use of by some gentlemen before the Supreme Court of California, to obtain a decision of that very question?

Mr. BROSNAN. With me, that is not good authority.

Mr. DELONG. They contend that a man working the mines is protected there, occupying the position of a legalized trespasser.

Mr. BROSNAN. I shook the dust from my feet when I left California; and, with all due respect to my colleague, I say in regard to the court which once existed in that State, I have no respect for its decisions.

I was about to say, when I was interrupted by my friend, that we are not trespassers; that the title, call it what you will, is such as to secure the protection of the laws of the land. It is to the possessor, by the license of the government which he lives under, and respects, when he obtrudes upon no pre-occupant of the soil, a title as indisputable, as irrefragable as though it were sealed with the signet of royalty. Nay, more; in my estimation, it is of a stronger character than even the grant of an Emperor. He cannot be driven out until his Government drives him out; and I am happy to say that during the long period of the existence of our Government, it has not yet turned the cold hand upon the adventurer, and the Government will not do it now. So the man who settles upon and cultivates the soil, who builds his house, who creates for himself that home which my colleague so eloquently depicted when speaking upon another subject, setting up his penates, or household gods under the roof-tree, gathering around him the family circle; when he has done that, he is protected, and is willing, in order to be protected by the laws of the land, to pay for that protection which the laws award him. And his possession of that soil is property to him. My friend, I think, would have been likely to receive a rebuff if he had gone to Washoe County, and said to one of those gentlemen who own ranch claims there, that he had no property to be taxed. I think he would have been rebuked, for they all understand that it is property, and subject to taxation for the support of the Government. That question has been decided.

And here I may say that I do not exactly agree with my friend from Ormsby County (Mr. Johnson) in all the propositions which he has advanced, although on the subject of taxation it seems that I agree with him on the main question. But I can agree with many of the propositions which have been advanced here, during this discussion. The gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) and I think I might say my respected and worthy friend from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) have, in my judgment, shown that they entertain very correct ideas upon this subject. Yet I do not believe that it is necessary that the words "possessory rights" should be included, although to that extent, I am willing to go with the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) albeit, at the same time, I consider it a matter of supererogation, being entirely superfluous in the paragraph. Yet, to that extent, I say, I am willing to go with him, so that there may be no question upon that subject. We might employ the phrase "real, personal, and mixed," which has a legal definitive meaning, well understood throughout the world by all those who read, and have experience in respect to the laws of property. But inasmuch as my friend from Washoe, (Mr. Starveant,) it seems, does not understand what real property means, and might be puzzled by the word "mixed," I will not urge the use of that language.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to trespass any further upon the time of the Convention. I wished merely to explain to the Convention my own position in the matter. I should be content to vote on either of the propositions that are before the Convention, though I should prefer that the words "mines and mining property" should be stricken from the section, allowing it to remain otherwise as it is, for the reasons which have been given. That is, however, more a matter of taste than otherwise. I have some objection to one or two of the expressions contained in the paragraph or section which my friend from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) offers as a substitute: but in any event, whatever shall prevail, I want the language employed to be such as can be distinctly understood. So far as I am concerned, I only desired to place myself on the record as being in favor of taxing the mines, when they are mines, and not before.

Mr. CROSMAN. This, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Committee, is, I think, one of the most important questions which has been, or will be, before the Convention. Very much time has already been spent in the discussion of this matter, but I feel that I should be doing injustice to myself, and to my constituency, if I should let it pass without expressing my opinion upon it—without giving a reason for the faith that is in me. In my opinion, if in the outset we had come here and taken hold of this article at once, and explained, and fixed it, in language so plain that it could not be misunderstood, and then gone home, we should have done our duty, at least in a great measure. And I firmly believe that if an angel from heaven were to frame the rest of our Constitution, leaving this article only for us, and we should go on, and frame it in such a way that every laboring man could not understand it, or so that its language should be susceptible of two or more interpretations, the people would reject our Constitution. I conceive that this provision should be framed in such language, that the most common understanding, and the most illiterate man, may fully comprehend it; and to that end, we should put in only the plainest language.

Now, I am not in favor of either of the propositions which are pending before the Convention, in the shape of amendments. There has been much said of which I approve. I do believe, and I start out with that proposition, that all property should be subject to taxation equally. I believe that to be a principle founded in justice and equity, which no man can gainsay. But we are peculiarly situated in this Territory—more so than in any other country known in history. Our primary and principal interest is the mines, and it is for the advantage and interest of the people of this Territory to encourage the development of the mines, and to encourage the early work of prospecting, as we term it, before the mines are developed. For that reason, I am in favor of incorporating in this article of the Constitution something which possibly may appear like legislation, though, in my opinion, it is no more so than many things which we have already adopted. My wish is to provide and establish a limit as to the market value of the mines—a price below which they shall not be subject to assessment. By doing that, we shall fix the rule in such a shape, that the miner can understand it. I do not recognize the correctness of the doctrine that the mining claims ought not to be assessed. They should pay a share towards the expenses of the government. It is certainly through the mines that governmental expenses are incurred, to a very large extent, and therefore, when they become property, and are available to raise money upon, I do believe they should be recognized as property, and should be made to bear an equal share of taxation. And the proposition I would make, provided these amendments were voted down, and the question before the Convention should assume such a shape that I could do so in order, would be to the effect that no mining claim having a value below a certain figure, shall be taxed—that the Legislature shall not pass a law taxing mining claims having a market value below a certain amount per foot—and in the amendment which I have prepared, I have placed that limitation at a hundred dollars a foot. It will rarely happen hereafter, I think, that a claim will attain a value of one hundred dollars a foot, without a ledge having been found, and some proof in regard to the value of that ledge; and for that reason, I have fixed it as low as one hundred dollars, although, perhaps, six months ago, I might have preferred a higher figure.

So far as I am concerned, the interests of my constituents are based on mining. They are all mainly dependent upon them—either upon milling or upon prospecting the mines—and I know that this same mining clause, as it is called, when the old Constitution was submitted to the people, last January, was to them a strong objection. The question arose—What is a mine? and some gentlemen took the position that a hole in the ground was not a mine, while others maintained that it was. A great deal was said during that Convention in regard to what was a mine and what was not.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to ask a question. How many mines in your part of the country would be subject to taxation under that amendment of yours?

Mr. CROSMAN. I am not aware of any mine there that would be. [Laughter.] If we had them, however, we should be willing to pay taxes upon them to support the Government. I was saying that the objection was raised in the canvass upon the Constitution, in regard to the definition of the word "mine," and I was about to say that my worthy friend from Storey, (Mr. DeLong), during that canvass urged in a speech which he made there just before that election, that a mine was—

Mr. NOURSE (interrupting.) I rise to a point of order. I would ask if a gentleman can be held responsible for what he may have said in a stump speech? [Merriment.]

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the gentleman

CROSSMAN—McCLINTON.

[July 14.]

from Storey is concerned, the Chair thinks he can hardly be held responsible. [Laughter.]

Mr. CROSSMAN. As I have said, the question was raised frequently during the canvass as to what was the meaning of the word "mine." Some held that a mine was only a claim which had struck a ledge, and others defined it as a hole in the ground, whence precious metals were taken. And upon that latter view, some of the miners took the position that inasmuch as they had holes in the ground from which they could take precious metals to a small amount, therefore, under that provision, they would be taxed.

Now, I do feel, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that it is important that we should clearly define our position on this question. Not only my own constituency, but the constituencies of several other members on this floor, who are representing undeveloped mines, in Humboldt, in Esmeralda, and in Lander Counties, are deeply interested in this matter. They have a great many undeveloped mines in those districts, which I hope are better than ours, but we also have some which are undeveloped; and I do urge the importance of making this distinction, or some like distinction, so that when this Constitution goes to the people, the language it contains will be such that they shall know what they are voting for—so that when they go to the ballot-box they will not feel that they are voting for a provision which is susceptible of an interpretation either one way or the other, and that interpretation may, after all, be against them, and the Legislature may tax their efforts in the way of developing the mines so heavily that all their labors to that end may be lost. I tell you if that shall be our action, the miners will hesitate long before they will vote for a Constitution containing such a provision. Now, I do believe we are anxious to frame a Constitution which will be acceptable to the people, and upon which we can maintain a State Government. The people of Storey County probably are not much interested in the class of mines which are still undeveloped, and they ought to be willing, if they have mines which are worth a hundred dollars a foot, to pay the tax which may be assessed upon such mines, for the purpose of maintaining our government.

And here is one fact worthy of our consideration, and that is, that if we neglect to provide for the taxation of mining property, we relieve from taxation altogether a great amount of property owned by non-residents, but which nevertheless is protected by the State Government, at very great expense. A very large proportion of the property in Storey County is held by parties outside of the limits of this Territory, and therefore is beyond the reach of taxation, for the purpose of maintaining our Government; and yet the litigation, the lawsuits growing out of that property, is costing hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. Hence, I say, it is important that that species of property should be subjected to taxation. But that class of men who are laborers in the mines, I think, should be, as they would be under the rule I propose to adopt, exempted from taxation. And the owners of these undeveloped mines would feel, whenever their mines should come within that rule, willing to pay the taxes imposed upon them, and hence they would be willing to endorse by their votes a provision of this kind, feeling that the object of it is the protection of the interests of those men who are delving in the mines. I do hope that neither of the propositions now before the Convention will be adopted, for the reason that I want to see the article further amended in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. McCLINTON. I wish to have my position fully understood upon this question, and in explaining it, I shall try not to occupy the time of the Convention to exceed three minutes, as I perceive that the hour for the recess is near at hand. I do not want this question to go before the people so mystified that the voters of the Territory cannot fully understand it. On the contrary, I desire to see it made so plain that the most illiterate man in the Territory may be able to know, when he goes to the polls, whether he is voting to tax the mines, or voting to exempt them from taxation. I am willing to assume the responsibility of what I may define as my position, for my constituents, I know, understand it already, and I desire that the people of the whole Territory shall know as well as they do what position I intend to take upon this question.

I do not believe, sir, that the bed-rock tunnel which is searching for minerals in the depths of one of our hills is a mine; nor do I believe it can possibly be considered as a possessory right to a mine, because, unless you can see into the hill itself, so as to ascertain that a mine is there, how can you decide that there is one there? I am not opposed to the policy of taxing mines and mining property, provided there is anything tangible to be taxed; anything that possesses real intrinsic value; but I claim that if a miner expends thousands of dollars in delving in our hills, or if he expends thousands of dollars in drifting upon a quartz ledge, that does not show that he has something of intrinsic value. He has got no mine; he is only prospecting for one; and until he finds it, I do not believe he has any taxable possessory right. I say he cannot justly be taxed for the privilege of hunting for a mine. When he finds it, however, it belongs to the General Government—that is, the real title is vested in the Government, not in the individual claimant, or discoverer of the mine. But he has a possessory title which the Government respects, and is as little likely to rob him of as it would be to rob me of one hundred and sixty acres of land after I had pre-empted it, and acquired my title from the Government.

I should like to see this section so modified as not to be ambiguous in any single sentence or clause. I desire the people to understand plainly, when they vote on this Constitution, that they are, or that they are not, voting for the taxation of the mines. I admit that this printed instrument which serves as the basis of our action was rejected, in Esmeralda County at least, last fall, almost for the sole reason that it authorized the taxation of mines and mining property; but I believe, nevertheless, that the majority of the people in that county are not indispoused to tax the mines whenever they become able to bear the burden of taxation. But they want the language so plain and conspicuous in the article as to leave no doubt in their minds whether they are to be taxed only upon mines that are actually paying for working them, or to be taxed also for the mere privilege of seeking for a mine.

I believe that the mining counties generally will not object to being taxed upon the actual value of mines that have an intrinsic value, so distinct, and so easily arrived at, as to present no difficulty, and no question at all in the mind of the assessors, or of the law-makers. I believe in taxing such mines. I say, but I do not believe that a quartz ledge to which I may claim that I have a possessory title, for the purpose of trying to find a mine, can be legitimately considered as a mine. I am not entirely satisfied with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey. (Mr. Tozer,) but at the same time I am emphatically opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby. (Mr. Johnson,) and upon the principle of choosing the least of two evils, I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Storey.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I rise for information. The gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) has said that there was but one individual in the Convention who was opposed to a State Government.

The CHAIRMAN. I said there was only one so far as had yet appeared by any expression of opinion in the Convention.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Now, I desire that I may not appear inconsistent, in case I should see fit to oppose the Constitution when it comes before the people, and therefore I wish to state my position. I said when I was nominated—and the nomination was entirely unsolicited on my part—that I had always been opposed to a State Government, and had voted against the calling of the former Convention; that I did so because I did not think it necessary for us to become a State. And I said I did not think that any man holding that position really ought to come into this Convention, and I had no desire therefore to be elected as a Delegate to the Convention; but I said if I should be elected, I would do all I could, with what little ability I possessed, to create a good Constitution, and then if I thought that, under that Constitution, the prosperity of the people of the Territory would be enhanced by the adoption of a State form of government, perhaps I would favor it. With this explanation, I will leave that personal matter.

Now, I propose to occupy about three minutes in discussing the question before the Convention. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is a strange inconsistency in the action of some of the members of this Convention. They were so liberal in their views and feelings a few days ago, that they proposed to vote away three millions of dollars to the Pacific Railroad Company, when the great State of California, whose wealth, compared with that of this Territory, is as a mountain to a mole-hill, only proposes to pay the interest on a million and a half of the bonds of that company. I opposed that proposition for the very reason that I favor the amendment of my colleague. (Mr. Johnson,) now before the Convention. I saw a disposition, as I thought, to leave that matter in a state of uncertainty. As a distinguished gentleman from the South once said in the Congress of the United States, when the slavery question was under discussion there, that he desired to put it before the American people in such a form that nobody would be cheated, so I am decidedly in favor of the amendment of my colleague to this article, in order that nobody may be cheated. Then we say to the people that, having assembled here to frame a Constitution, we, in our wisdom, decide upon this proposition: that if they desire a State Government at all they must submit to the taxation of the mines. For I submit that gentlemen raked this Territory as with a fine-tooth comb, to find something to donate to the Pacific Railroad, and they could only find five hundred thousand acres of land which we are to receive hereafter as a gift from the General Government. They gave that away to the railroad company, and it was all they could find.

Now, these gentlemen submit to us, who represent the few cabbage patches there are in the Territory, this proposition: "We will go into a State organization, provided you will pay the expense." I consider that as the real proposition, divested of all the talk. Who is it that wants a greater number of judges? Why, the mining interest. Who is it that wants a remodeling of our form of government? It is the mining interest. And you magnanimously propose, as the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason,) said, in substance, if not in words: "If you will pay for the support of a State Government, we will buy your cabbages, provided you sell them lower than we can get them from California." That is a magnanimous proposition, truly! Now, I happen to know something in regard to the election in Esmeralda County, for I was there last winter, working with a party of twenty-six men in a mill. The weather was rather bad, and we did not go up to vote, but we took a vote among the mechanics who were there, and there was but one man among them who was not opposed to a State Government. Every individual except one was in favor of taxing the mines. I may be taking an undue advantage of my friend from Esmeralda.

Mr. MASON. Oh, not all; it amounts to nothing.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Now, I propose to inquire what it is that the miners want. In the first place, they say we want the railroad, and we want the agricultural counties to pay for it. Then we want more judges, provided you pay for them, also. No one has pretended, in this Convention, to argue that the railroad would enhance the value of agricultural property, but on the other hand, they have contended that we were opposed to the railroad provision, because of the supposition that a railroad could bring vegetables into our markets from California, a little cheaper than at present. Now, sir, the reason mainly why I am in favor of taxing the mines has not yet been stated in this debate. I am in favor of taxing the mines, because I want to make those gentlemen who are rolling in wealth in San Francisco, pay something for the support of our government, for the support of our common schools, and for the support of our courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that the Committee should rise now, as the time for the recess has arrived, and the gentleman will be entitled to the floor when we go into Committee again.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Very well; I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article X, entitled Taxation, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave to sit again was granted accordingly.

Mr. CHAPIN gave notice of a meeting of the Committee on State Seal.

Mr. DELONG gave notice of a meeting of the Committee on Phraseology.

The hour of five o'clock having arrived, the President declared the Convention at recess until seven o'clock, P. M.

— EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met at seven o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President remaining in the Chair, and resume the consideration of Article X, entitled Taxation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—TAXATION.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the Chair,) and resumed the consideration of Article X, entitled Taxation.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I feel very little like attempting to obtrude further upon this Convention, but as the discussion of this question has taken a very wide range, I propose to give my opinions in full, although it may be an infliction upon the Convention.

When the time arrived for the recess this afternoon, I was about to speak of the injustice, or what I consider as the injustice, at least, of taxing none but the actual residents of this Territory, for that which benefits others as much as it does ourselves. Now, I do insist that it is not justice to exempt from taxation that which we are bound by our courts to protect. I have myself felt the burden of being summoned upon a jury, and thus called away from that labor which demanded my time and attention, for the purpose of spending weeks in this city, occupied in trying causes in which the residents of this Territory had no interest whatever. Sir, we are called upon to pay the salaries of judicial officers, whose time and attention is occupied in trying causes that interest the residents of San Francisco alone, and I insist that it is not justice to the residents of this Territory, for I admit that it is not a very desirable place for men to live, that they should be called upon to come here to open the roads, to build school-houses and churches, and to develop the resources of the land, for the benefit of other men, who have subjected themselves to no such privations, or hardships; while on the other hand, they are receiving immense interest upon the investments which they have made in this Territory.

It is a principle in political economy, that capital is sensitive, not to principles of patriotism, not to principles of State pride, but to the principles of loss and gain alone. Upon this very point I attempted to suggest my views to the Convention, when the railroad question was before us. I maintain that no railroad project was ever yet instituted and carried out for the purpose merely of benefiting any State, or for the purpose of advancing the interests of any people, living under a republican form of government. Capital, as I said before, is sensitive only to profit and loss, and I insist therefore that the argument which gentlemen have adduced, that we should foster the mines, in order to open up new claims, and so develop the country, has no bearing, because there never has and never will be a claim prospected in this Territory, merely for the purpose of developing the Territory, or of enhancing the prosperity of the people. No, sir; men go to work in the mines for their own profit alone. Go with me to any State—to the State of California, if you please—and where do you find what gentlemen choose to term the predominating interest of the country? And I am free to admit that mining is not only the predominating interest, but the preponderating interest of this country—the interest to which all else must bow in adoration—the interest which towers immensely above every other interest in this Territory. It seems to me that it would be an act of folly for us to exempt that all-absorbing interest from taxation—that interest which demands all the attention of all the people in the community. It seems to me a preposterous position for gentlemen to assume here, when they get up and tell us that such an interest as that ought to be exempted from taxation; and I hold, as do many other gentlemen on this floor, that the mining interests would be exempted, under the operation of the section as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) and I think I have very good reasons for saying so. I have spent ten years of my life in the State of California—a State which has in her Constitution, a provision of about the same tenor as that which the gentleman from Storey proposes to incorporate in ours. And the question I know was made an issue in every canvass there, both in the mining and the “cow counties,” whether or not the mines should be taxed; and the Legislature of that State, although acting under the solemn oath of office, taken by the members, never considered it incumbent upon them to pass a law taxing the mines of California.

Thursday.]

LOCKWOOD.

Further than that, the mines of this Territory are owned in part, and some of the most valuable mines of the Territory almost wholly, by men who are foreigners—aliens, who wish us no good. I have it from very good authority that the Spanish mine, for one, is now almost exclusively owned by foreigners. They send men here to take out the gold, or the bullion, and when it is taken out, it is sent to the city of London, and there is nothing left to show for it in this Territory. What other country in the world allows a thing of that kind to be done on its public domain?

Now, while I hold that it is impolitic for the National Government to tax the mines as property—for I do believe, (I say it only as a private citizen, for I am not professing to be well posted in legal matters,) that it is illegal and unconstitutional, to impose a tax on the mines themselves—at the same time I believe that it would be in violation of that constitutional provision which says that all taxation shall be equal, to exempt the possessory rights in the mines, which are property, from taxation. I do not believe that we have the right to tax any particular species of property to the exclusion of any other species of property.

I desire to go to work in this matter of organizing a State Government in a business-like manner. Any business man would assuredly fail in his projects, unless he should first consider his resources, the hazards of whatever investments he might be about to make, and whether or not the end would justify the means.

Now, sir, upon that principle, I propose, as a matter of business, to go before the people of this Territory, and say to them—and I believe it to be the true and solemn conviction of this Convention—that having carefully examined every question having a bearing upon the case, this Convention has come to the conclusion that a State Government cannot be supported without the taxation of the mines. And inasmuch as the mining interests demand a change in the status of our Government—for it is the mining interest alone that asks for the change, the industrial and agricultural interests being satisfied with the present condition of things—inasmuch as the representatives of the mining interests demand at the hands of the people a change in their status of Government, therefore we call on you to come forward and in this canvass decide this one plain proposition: Are you willing that this great interest, the interest which demands this change, shall contribute its share to the support of the new form of Government? Let that question be fairly decided, and then there will be no dodging the issue, no decisions of the Supreme Court to wait for, no necessity to make up issues upon any proposition. I want it so plain that he who runs may read. I consider that the proposition of my colleague (Mr. Johnson) exactly meets the case, and hence I am in favor of it.

I regard the duties of a delegate in this Convention in a rather different light from what some gentlemen do who have addressed the Convention upon this subject. I believe, sir, that while the delegate should have an eye to the particular necessities and wants of his immediate constituents, he should at the same time look abroad to the whole Territory, and attempt to compromise and combine in such a way that the final action of the body shall be as nearly perfect as possible. Now, I am satisfied—and I am tolerably well acquainted with the feeling of the people of the whole Territory on the subject—that no Constitution which provides that one part of the residents of the Territory shall pay all the expenses of the Government, the benefits of which are to accrue entirely to the other part, will ever receive the endorsement of the people. That is my position. The mining interest being the predominating interest—the interest that seeks for the change in the form of our Government—I say it ought to be the interest that should most promptly come up and support the Government. And its representatives should most willingly and cordially support the amendment which proposes to allow that interest to be taxed.

Look around you, sir, and see what other interests we have. You cannot find a single State in the American Union, and I doubt whether you can a single Territory, that has ever at any time been admitted into the Union as a State, that is, or has been, so entirely devoid of any and all other resources except that of the one great interest, so poverty-stricken in every other respect, as ours. Now, when you look abroad over these barren plains, can you for a moment suppose that a State Government can be supported by the few hard-working men who have occupied their little potato patches, and are trying to build up those homes which we have been endeavoring to exempt from forced sale? Do you propose to get at them, and tax them, and to let the miner escape?

But it is asked—How are we going to get at the "hole in the ground" so as to tax it? I will tell you how I propose to do it. I propose to do as the assessor did by me last fall. He came to me and said: "Sir, hold up your hand. You do swear that the answers you will make to the questions I put to you, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." Now, if a man has expended two thousand dollars where it is entirely worthless, will he not swear that he has done so, and thereby escape taxation? On the other hand, the San Francisco capitalist who comes over here to increase his wealth, will have to respond to that oath. He is the man who makes us serve on juries for his benefit. He appeals to our courts, and our officers serve summonses and other papers for him, while he sits in quiet and ease in San Francisco; and we do all these things for nothing. Is that justice, I ask? Or is it anything approximating towards justice?

I insist that, as business men, we should take a reasonable position in this matter. If we are opposed to the taxation of the mines in any form, we are really opposed to a State Government. If you put a clause into the Constitution stating that all property shall be taxed equally and alike, then carry it out. But you intend to put that clause in, because otherwise your Constitution would be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, and we have already adopted that. Now, will not that compel you to tax the mines? On the other hand, if you do desire to tax the mines for the support of that government which the mining interest imperatively demands, then, I say, come up and say so, in plain, unmistakable terms, so that when we go before the people in the coming canvass, nobody will be cheated, but we shall all be able to vote understandingly.

Mr. BANKS. I do not know that I can throw any additional light upon this question, after it has been so fully discussed. I admire the clear and able manner in which gentlemen have elucidated this subject, and while I confess that I do not like, more than other gentlemen do, to sit here so long without coming to a vote, yet I must say that if we have spent any day well since we first convened, I think it has been this day. I think we understand the question a great deal better now, than we did in the morning. I confess that I have heard arguments in opposition to my own views on the question, which I did not suppose existed, and on the other hand, I have heard arguments in support of the position which I had settled down upon in my own mind as the true one, for which I am very thankful indeed.

Now, we have three several propositions before the Convention. We have first the article as it stands in the basis which we have adopted, in the old Constitution, and that I regard as clearly providing for the taxing of the mines. It declares in terms that cannot be misunderstood, that mining property, and everything pertaining to the mines themselves, shall be taxed just like any other property existing within the bounds of the State. But it is alleged, and I think truly, that though the provisions of that section were sufficient, under the circumstances existing at the time of the former Convention, yet they are not sufficient under the present circumstances, or in the condition of things under which this Convention assembles. This body is convened, as has been stated by our worthy President, under an Enabling Act, and having in view the special provisions of that Enabling Act, our President proposes an amendment which clearly, and beyond all question, covers the ground, that not only shall mining claims and mining property be taxed like farms and all other kinds of property, real and personal, but that also anything which can be designated as a possessory right, shall be taxed. He thinks that the words "possessory rights and claims," covers everything which can possibly be enumerated in the list of things of value. Now, sir, if I occupied the position of that gentleman—if I believed that everything which has a value, or which could be sold for gold and silver, should be taxed, I would unquestionably insist on the amendment which he proposes, because I am free to confess that I do not think anything materially short of the language of that amendment would cover the ground which he and his friends desire to have covered.

And here I will say that I am unequivocally opposed to placing any language in this instrument that will require—as it has been confessed here that certain language proposed would require—judicial construction, or interpretation by the Legislature. I want to meet the issue here, fairly and squarely. If all property, regardless of its surroundings—regardless of any question of profit and loss—if everything that has a market value, that will bring dollars and cents, must be taxed, I want to say so. If, on the other hand, we recognize a difference between property in mines and property in town lots and in farms, then I want to recognize that fact here, and state it in the Constitution so plainly, that it cannot be misunderstood.

But there is another class of men in this Convention who desire to take a medium ground, and they propose merely to strike out the words "mines and mining property." I have referred to two classes—the one which insists that the mines shall not be taxed, and the other insisting that everything which will bring dollars and cents shall be taxed; and besides these, I say, there is another class here, who insist that the words "mines and mining property" ought to be stricken out, thus leaving it an open question before the people next fall, when the Constitution shall be submitted for their ratification or rejection, and an open question also in our future Legislatures, and in our Courts. They insist on leaving the matter vague and undetermined. They seem desirous—and I do not question their motives in the least, though I do question their policy very much—of leaving the subject in such a shape that they can go before the agricultural constituencies and say—"Gentlemen, this Constitution allows you to test the question as to whether the mines shall be taxed or not, in the Legislature, and in the Courts of the State." Then, on the other hand, gentlemen of the mining counties could go home to their constituents and say—"Gentlemen, this Constitution does not provide that the mines shall be taxed, but it leaves that matter just as it is in California, an open question, so that if you vote for the Constitution you can have this remedy, that you can by your political power send men to the Legislature who will decide in your favor by refusing to tax the mines, and if that should fail, you still have your remedy before the Supreme Court."

BANKS—LOCKWOOD—KINKEAD—NOURSE.

[July 14.

Now, sir, I do not desire to see the mines taxed indiscriminately; and, on the other hand, I do not want to see the "cow counties" taxed exclusively. I desire to see a fair tax levied upon the proceeds of the mines, either net or gross. If the net proceeds could be ascertained with any degree of certainty, that, unquestionably, would be the fairest, and in all respects the best plan; but as it is not probable, however, that any Legislature ever will assemble at the capital of our State, capable of devising a plan by which the net proceeds can be arrived at with exactness, I desire to see the question of net proceeds or gross proceeds left entirely open for the exercise of the discretion of the Legislature, governed by their experience and the experience of other legislative bodies. I say that no Legislature can devise a plan by which to determine with certainty the net proceeds of the mines, because, so far as my experience is concerned, I know of no means by which the net proceeds of anything can be determined successfully and accurately. As a general thing, in levying licenses or any similar tax, it has been found expedient to levy such tax on the basis of the gross, and not the net proceeds. But as the Convention in its wisdom has seen fit to vote down a proposition to tax the gross proceeds of the mines, I need not dwell at length upon that view of the case, because I may consider the question, at least for present purposes, as having been decided. But I may say this, however, that notwithstanding the fact that we have spent so much time in considering this subject, although I am no prophet, nor the son of a prophet, yet I feel safe in making a prediction that the time will come, and that before long, too, when that basis of taxation will be the settled policy of this Territory or State, whichever it may be, in taxing its mineral wealth.

Gentlemen may ask, what in this state of things I would propose? I reply that I intend to propose an amendment covering this very ground. It is not now in order, and therefore I shall not offer it until it shall be in order. I shall vote upon the policy of choosing the least of two or three evils, and I shall vote in reference to all the propositions before us upon the idea of choosing the best, and then when they are all disposed of one way or another, I shall propose to strike out the whole section and substitute this, the first part of which is in the language of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson):

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of taxes by a uniform rule, so that taxes shall be assessed and collected on all property, possessory rights and claims, according to their true value in money; provided, that no tax shall be imposed on any mining claim, or possessory right thereto, which, at the time of making the assessment, has a market value in money of less than five dollars per foot.

Now, sir, I know very well that it is not strictly in order now to discuss that proposition, but in view of the fact that an amendment of that kind is proposed to be offered hereafter, I wish to present my objections to the amendment we have now immediately before the Convention.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question. How does he propose to ascertain the value?

Mr. KINKEAD. By the Assessor.

Mr. BANKS. I believe it is generally conceded that what the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Lockwood) himself has so frequently stated, is true, that the value of property can be ascertained without difficulty. He said the value of his property was ascertained by his holding up his hand and swearing to its value.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I only wanted to see if we could agree upon that point.

Mr. BANKS. I think we agree more nearly, perhaps, than the gentlemen would think. He proposes to raise a revenue to support the Government, and I propose the same thing, but I do not propose, in order to do that, to tax a man for his hopes of future wealth. If a man, through his scientific knowledge, or his skill as a prospector, or the mere ardency of his hope, comes to the conclusion that down somewhere in the earth there is a valuable mine, and thereupon starts to develop it; if he supposes, what nobody else perhaps does, that it is worth thousands of dollars, I do not propose, therefore, that it shall be taxed for such an amount. But just as soon as it is developed sufficiently to make it an object of value, to the very limited extent of five dollars a foot, then I desire that he, like all the rest, should be taxed.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to ask the gentleman

Thursday,]

BANKS—DUNNE.

[July 14.]

one question, in good faith. I would like to ask, in reference to taxing a miner's expectations, if those expectations can be sold in the market to pay the tax, in case it is not paid, is there any good reason for not taxing them for so much as they will bring?

Mr. BANKS. I will endeavor to answer that question at the close of my remarks.

Now, sir, our very learned and worthy friend from Storey. (Mr. Brosnan,) presented a proposition here, in regard to which I did not agree with him, but to which, for the purposes of this argument, I now propose to refer. Substantially, he propounded the inquiry—"What is a mine?" He undoubtedly referred, though he did not dwell upon it at length, to the definitions of mines which were given last summer, and I do not know but he is the author of the argument which was published last summer, based upon the definition given by Webster, that a mine is an excavation in the earth from which minerals are taken. Now I claim that that kind of definition will not distinguish what we may regard as a valueless mine from a mine embracing great value. It is not sufficiently clear and distinct to rely upon as a part of a constitutional and statutory provision. I am inclined to believe that that gentleman's views and my own quite agree as regards this question, but I wish to go a little further than he does. I desire to have that state of things by which only that kind of mine which produces metals of value shall be taxed. I desire to place in the Constitution something more definite—something which will distinguish between mines which are of little value and those which are of great value. I desire to fix a limit somewhere between mere prospecting and mining. If five dollars a foot is too little, or too much, then change it to some other figure; but give us some assurance that persons who are engaged in prospecting will not be subject to burdensome taxation. Let the miners be assured of that.

Now, I say there is a vast difference between a prospecting enterprise—in entering upon which men may think they have good reason to believe that success will attend their efforts—and a farming enterprise. A man, for example, locates a mining claim which he believes to be a good one. He is willing to take the chances there, under all the circumstances, and he conceives that by the expenditure of a considerable amount of money, and a considerable amount of labor, he will make himself wealthy. Perhaps very few others believe with him; but it may be that there is some one man, perhaps, who, relying upon the good judgment of the prospector, or relying upon other circumstances, conceives the same idea, and he offers the locator three dollars, four dollars, or four dollars and a half per foot for his claim. Now, that man, understanding the lay of the ground, understanding the topography of the country, and the mineral indications there, perhaps does not want to give up his chances. At the same time, under this proposed constitutional provision, he would be compelled to pay a tax equivalent to the amount offered by his equally sanguine neighbor. I do not think that is just or wise. I would like to encourage prospecting enterprises, not merely those of men who ramble over the hills to find places to dig, but those also which involve the sinking of shafts, and the running of tunnels, in searching for mines which may exist beneath the surface of the earth. The prospecting of a ledge to find mineral deposits, is as much a part of prospecting, as is roaming over the mountains in search of indications. I hope, therefore, in that view of the subject, that we shall leave this section in such shape, by the adoption of an amendment similar to this which I am now prepared to offer, that while the mines and everything else will be taxed as property generally, we shall except those mines which are not worth at least five dollars a foot, and exempt them from taxation.

The Convention might adopt a provision of this nature, that no mine shall be assessed which during the year previous to the assessment has yielded less than a certain specified sum, say one thousand or five hundred dollars, if you please. By either of these modes, we can accomplish this desirable result. And with this thought I close. We can secure this condition of affairs, and thus we can secure the taxation of all those valuable mines which are generally owned by non-residents. We can, in that manner, derive all the revenue from the mines that we can reasonably expect, and at the same time we need not oppress the prospecting enterprises. That policy, in my opinion, is the best which can be adopted, since the Convention has determined not to tax the proceeds of the mines.

Mr. DUNNE. This, I believe, is the only day since we have been here, on which I have not thought we have had too much discussion. I confess that to-day I have been anxious to hear the subject before us discussed, in all its lights and in all its bearings, as it is the one great feature of the Constitution we are framing, the one great question which we have to determine, upon the determination of which depends the value, or the effect, of all our action. Because, as this subject shall be determined, so will the people of the Territory determine either to adopt or to reject this Constitution.

Now, we must remember that we are sitting here in an entirely different capacity from that of a legislative body. We are not assembled here in the character of men who are under their oaths with regard to taxation—that they shall by their votes, in establishing that taxation, do certain things, or comply with certain requirements—but we are rather to consider ourselves in the light of delegates met together for the purpose of establishing a confederation. And in that view we have, to some extent, a right to offer our compromises, one to another, in order finally to determine what shall be the fundamental principle under which we will consent to confederate ourselves, and by which we will hereafter require our general legislation to be governed. Therefore the question is not now altogether, as I consider it, an absolute, abstract question of strict legal justice between men, but it is a question as to the general policy to be pursued in the formation of our State Government. That is the view which I take of the matter. And again, under that distinction, I hold that whatever is the best policy for us to adopt, is the most strictly just to us all, and the most promotive of all our interests; for we are all interested in the success of this new, coming State. Whatever policy, as a general one, is adopted that is best for us all, is certainly just for us all. Now, on that principle of confederation to which I have alluded, and under that idea, that we meet here to offer our compromises one to another, and to endeavor to adjust matters among ourselves, and see upon what principles we can agree to act together to further our mutual interests, I deem it entirely appropriate for each member to consider the interests of his own section of country, at the same time endeavoring to harmonize those interests as far as possible, with the one leading idea of the general interest of the whole.

DUNN.

Viewing this question before us from that stand-point, I do not believe that the mines should be taxed at all. I do not think it is the best policy for us to impose any tax upon the mines. Gentlemen will say in answer to that: "Would you allow millions of capital now in San Francisco, in New York, in London, or in France, perhaps, to be represented here, and to derive benefits from our mines, and yet impose no tax upon that capital?" Certainly, I reply; I would do so, and I believe it to be good policy to do so; for what are we without that capital? What the mining interests here are to the agricultural interests, that capital is to the mining interest. Without capital, our mines are valueless. We have not, and never have had, in this Territory, the capital necessary to develop our mines, and we are, therefore, dependent for their development upon foreign capital. It has enriched us to an extent of which some members are not aware, and instead of endeavoring to levy a tax upon it, my opinion is, that we ought, as far as we can, to adopt such a liberal policy as will be calculated to call in to our aid capital from all parts of the world, for the presence of that capital, and its employment among us, will more than compensate for the loss of the small amount which might be derived from imposing a tax upon it. So much in regard to the general proposition to tax the mines, which I do not regard as being in accordance with good policy under our circumstances.

Now, with regard to the different interests; the representatives of the agricultural interest, viewing it by itself alone, tell us: "If you impose a tax which exempts all mining property, you throw the burden of supporting the Government entirely upon the agricultural interest." In reply to that, I ask, what is that interest, without the mines? Impose a tax which shall encumber the mining interest, which shall destroy it, or thwart its development, and you thereby strike a ruinous blow at the agricultural interest. Then again, with regard to the expenses of the Government; statistics have been submitted here to-day, which I had already prepared, though on a somewhat different basis in one respect, for I divided the taxable property of one county, as I considered that it was partly agricultural and partly mining, upon the basis of revenue, as found in the report of last year. I find that the taxable property of the Territory, exclusive of mining property, amounts to a little over twenty-five millions of dollars. I find that aggregate amount of taxable property, by dividing the taxable property of Lyon and Churchill Counties equally between the two interests, mining and agricultural, to stand, nineteen millions taxed to the mining communities, and six millions taxed to the agricultural communities. I do not think that the distinction is properly made, when we are told that the agricultural counties are a section by themselves in this Territory, having no interests except those which are co-extensive with the limits of the agricultural counties. I hold that the proposition, properly put, would be, that we all own these mines, and that therefore the policy of exempting them, is a policy which commends itself to all the residents of this Territory. The mines are not owned in the mining counties alone, for the people in the agricultural counties are largely interested in them; and so also, but not nearly to the same extent, persons in the mining counties are interested in the agricultural interests. Persons who have their capital invested in mining claims, also own houses and lots, and agricultural lands, which are property in those counties, and hence, by exempting the mines from taxation, they bring a heavier tax upon themselves, so far as that property is concerned. Storey County has property more exclusively in the mines than this county has, but Storey County would feel the additional tax upon any other species of property as much as this county would feel it. For that reason, I consider that we are all interested alike in this matter.

Again, if the people think there is a great discrimination in favor of mining property, and that capital invested in mining has so great an advantage over capital invested in agricultural pursuits, as they obtain money to invest, they will take advantage of that circumstance, and people in the agricultural counties will eventually come to own more and more of the mines, and will reap more and more of the benefits of that exemption.

Then with regard to the argument advanced that the people of the agricultural counties are called upon to pay a tax to support the courts

Thursday.]

JOHNSON—DUNNE.

[July 14.]

which are engaged in determining cases affecting the mining interest alone; do gentlemen reflect for a moment that the courts which adjudicate the mining interests are all situated in the mining counties, and that each county pays the expenses of its own courts? The mining counties, therefore, themselves, pay for the adjudication of mining claims. Does the court of this county have its calendar crowded with mining cases, or is that the case in the courts in the mining counties only? The only exception to this rule is in the Supreme Court, and in that court all are alike interested. Then again, independent of that fact, are not all indirectly interested in this litigation?

[Mr. CROSMAN in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman from Humboldt let me interrupt him right here? He is possibly placing me, and other members, in a false position. I have not, in my argument, attempted to classify the taxable property of the Territory by counties, but what I attempted to illustrate, was the difference in the application of the proposed rule of taxation to mining property, and to property of other descriptions. Because I think that even the figures presented by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) show this fact, that a large proportion of the property in Storey County last year, was other than mining property. I attempted, not to discriminate between these counties, as to their being mining or agricultural counties, but to show the difference in respect to taxation between mining and other property. The only classification I sought to make was in regard not to counties, but to property.

Mr. DUNNE. Well, the gentleman admits, then, that the charge made against the members from the mining counties, that they were seeking to force the burden of taxation upon the agricultural interests alone, applies with four-fold force to Storey County.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I made no accusation of the kind, I am not called upon to plead guilty or not guilty. The broader proposition I attempted to illustrate was simply this, that it was here sought to discriminate, in the matter of the burdens of Government, between different species of property. I want those burdens made equal. Whilst I was speaking, I made no allusion to the kind of property in the different counties. I am one who would be individually affected by exempting the mines, and many of my constituents would be similarly affected by it. It makes no difference whether we live in an agricultural county and have property in a mining county, or vice versa. It was the property, and not the counties, to which I referred.

Mr. DUNNE. Whilst we are referring to the speech of the gentleman from Ormsby, will he answer me one question. Did I understand the gentleman correctly to-day, as giving it as his opinion that if an accurate assessment were made of the property in the Territory, other than mining property, for the ensuing year, it would not show a basis of taxable property more than one-half as large as the assessment of last year?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; I said, in the county of Storey, the last assessment of fourteen millions of dollars, would not represent more than one-half of that amount by valuation. And I cited as an instance, the fact that a piece of property there was assessed for six thousand dollars, which to-day the gentleman who owns it would be willing to sell for five hundred dollars. At the same time I stated that the taxable property of Ormsby County probably would not be found to have depreciated a single dollar in value.

Mr. DUNNE. The gentleman admits that the assessment of property, other than mining property, would fall below twenty-five millions of dollars, in the Territory, at the present time?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not recollect that I made any estimate as to the amount of property in the Territory. I referred to Ormsby County, and I assumed that its assessable list would not fall short of that of last year; and likewise, that the property in the county of Storey which was assessed for last year at fourteen millions of dollars, the present year would not exceed seven millions of dollars. As to the assessable value in other counties, I cannot say.

Mr. DUNNE. Last year the entire Territory was assessed in the aggregate at a little over twenty-five millions of dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. In Washoe, and possibly in Douglas County, I think I may say the amount of property will not be diminished. Relative to other counties, I have no personal knowledge or acquaintance with their financial condition. I will state further in this connection, that in the estimate we made at the sitting of the Convention last year, we placed the property other than mining at twenty-five millions of dollars, and the mining property was estimated at sixty or seventy millions. We had thus a basis of taxable property of at least eighty-five millions of dollars upon which to rely for the support of the State Government. Now, if the mines are exempted, and the amount of property other than mining property is reduced in value, of course the basis for taxation is subject to reduction in the same proportion.

Mr. DUNNE. Very good. Now, as the gentleman has narrowed the question down to what I consider the true principle, so far as his position is concerned, I would like, before this question is determined, to hear him address himself distinctly to this point: whether or not it would be politic for us to exempt mining property from taxation—without raising the question of whether or not it is a matter of injustice to force a tax on a certain species of property upon us, because that is not the question before us. We are not obliged yet to levy any tax for the support of our State Government. The question is simply whether it would be politic for us, in launching out our organization as a State, to adopt that policy of taxing the mines or not. That is the reason of my opposition to a State Government. That is the reason why I introduced the resolutions I did early in the Convention, to adjourn sine die. I saw that the taxable property, aside from the mining interest, was estimated at only twenty-five millions of dollars, and believing it to be impolitic for a country like ours, dependent entirely upon the development of the mining interests, to attempt to hamper those interests, at the beginning, I looked around to see what we had to support a Government upon without doing that. I believed that it would be suicidal policy to tax the mines, and when I found that there was only twenty-five millions of taxable property other than mining property, with which to carry on the State Government, I concluded that it was unwise and impolitic in every sense, for us to attempt the organization of a State Government. That was the reason of my opposition to it, and I hope the Convention will pardon me for again introducing that subject, because I do it only to show that I have been entirely consistent.

FITCH—DUNNE—JOHNSON.

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? What does he estimate would be the expense of a State Government now?

Mr. DUNNE. Well, sir, from the experience I have had in other States, and my knowledge of the class of men who will be called upon to administer the new State Government, I cannot put it at less than three hundred thousand dollars a year.

Mr. FITCH. That would necessitate a tax of one and one-fourth per cent. for State purposes, while California raises ninety cents, I believe, on each one hundred dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. On what basis does the gentleman from Humboldt make that calculation?

Mr. DUNNE. On twenty-five millions of dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is, exclusive of mining property?

Mr. DUNNE. Yes, sir. Now will the gentleman from Storey allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FITCH. Certainly.

Mr. DUNNE. Considering the number of officers which will be necessary under a State form of Government, the necessity for erecting public buildings, and the probability of donating money to aid the Pacific Railroad, what proportion does he think our expenses would bear, as compared with the expenses of the State of California? Does he think that our expenses would be as large as were the expenses of that State in the first few years of its existence as a State?

Mr. FITCH. My answer is, that I think the State Government, aside from the erection of public buildings, and aside from the railroad, would cost, perhaps, as much as two hundred thousand dollars a year; and that will not certainly be more than twice as large as our expenses are under a territorial condition. We are not obliged to erect public buildings at the present time, as gentlemen are well aware.

Mr. DUNNE. All estimates like these, it is well known, invariably fall far short of the practical reality, as we shall find when we come to put the State Government into practical operation. We have an example of that across the mountains, in the State of California, which has averaged, in its actual expenses as a State, over a million a year.

Mr. FITCH. I think it has not averaged as large an amount as that.

Mr. DUNNE. Yes, sir; I believe the average expenditures of that State have been computed at about a million a year. Now, in regard to the question which is at present before this body for its consideration, my position is exactly the same as that of my colleague (Mr. Banks.) But as to our expenses as a State; why, there were one hundred thousand dollars appropriated by the Territorial Legislature for one single fund last year. I refer to the appropriation of a hundred thousand dollars for the Soldiers' Fund, for bounties, recruiting purposes, &c.

Mr. FITCH. The soldiers have not seen it yet, I believe.

Mr. DUNNE. Well, it is due to them, and the soldiers will get it ultimately, as they should. I say I agree entirely in regard to putting this matter into practice, with my colleague. After having stated my position on the general policy of taxing the mines at all, I say then, as there seems to be a disposition to have a State Government, whether or no—a disposition, the manifestation of which led me to suggest to the Committee on State Seal, that instead of the words "Volens et potens," we should adopt as our motto, "Nolens Volens" [merriment]—if I cannot have the principle adopted which I believe to be correct, and if there is a necessity for some action on the subject, then I will endeavor to get it as near as I can to what is right. Therefore I would innovate on this section, as it stands here, exactly as my colleague proposes, in order that I may choose the lesser of the two evils.

Now, a word in regard to the way this matter of taxation will work in that section of the country which I in part represent. We have a very large extent of mining country there. We have, I suppose, ten thousand locations of mining ground in our county, out of all of which, we have only, as yet, four or five mines that we know are mines, and for the development of which capitalists are willing to invest large amounts, for the purpose of erecting mills, putting up machinery, and carrying on all the business of a mine. Now, if the mines are to be taxed, we desire to have only such of them taxed as can afford it. We want that policy adopted which will allow us to spend money on our claims, so as to find out how many of them really are mines. We want no tax imposed upon a mine, until we have positive and indisputable evidence that a mine is there to be taxed. We can then incorporate upon our undeveloped locations, and levy assessments, and spend our last dollar, if it is wanted, in running tunnels, to discover whether or not we can make mines of them. But these claims now have a market value. Some of them are worth a dollar, some five dollars, some ten dollars, and some of them twenty dollars a foot, under the liberal policy now pursued in regard to them. But put a tax on those mines, and they will generally fall in price to almost nothing. No revenue will be realized from them, and no prospecting will be done, but the whole growth of the country will be retarded, and mining will only drive itself through by chance, if at all. New mines may possibly be discovered. In some of those claims men may concentrate their efforts, all uniting on some one claim, and expend a little cash from time to time, but carefully, now that a tax is levied, and the development of the mines will only be accomplished after years of labor, if at all. But grant us a liberal policy, let us search for our mines free from taxes, and all unnecessary expenses, until we find something of value, and then tax us. If you must tax us, wait at least until then. With this explanation of my views, I will leave the subject. As so many had already explained their views upon it, I thought that to remain silent, would look like a disposition to avoid an honest expression of my sentiments, and I have no desire to conceal them.

EARL.

Mr. EARL. I have some hope now that we may agree upon a fair and equal basis of taxation. It seems to me that the two extremes are coming nearer together. I have, heretofore, as our President will remember, proposed the taxing of the gross proceeds of the mines. I thought that the Legislature should be allowed to fix that taxation as they may see proper, and that we could arrange the matter, simply by striking out those words proposed by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Tozer) to be stricken out, although that might possibly leave it questionable as to whether or not the mines would be taxed at all. There seems at least to be a doubt in the minds of many, and therefore, to remove that doubt, I think we should insert such language as will make it clear, and leave it in such a manner that the Legislature will be placed under obligation to tax the mines, or to assess them upon a fair valuation. I believe that can be done, and yet not make the provision objectionable in regard to prospecting mines. I did not suppose that any gentleman here would propose the taxation of a prospecting mine, which has really no value at all until a ledge is struck, or at least the appearance of a ledge beyond all doubt. My proposition was, that if we should insert a provision taxing the gross proceeds, it would answer the purpose. By pursuing that course, when the act of Congress shall be put in force, we can reach the gross proceeds, in the same way that the Federal Government does, as the bullion passes through the different assay offices. The Legislature could frame an act by which we could tax that bullion for State purposes. A still better way would be, to have a government assay office, and when the bullion is passing through that office, then it could be taxed for State purposes. We could then reach the capital invested in mining, to a certain degree, because the amount paid out for labor would be returned in bullion, and we could reach that bullion and tax it. This would be a fair taxation, and I, for one, would be perfectly willing to vote for a clause of that kind.

Again, as to the other proposition for taxing all mines which are above a certain value, I think that would answer the purpose, but it appears to me that it would be more objectionable than the proposition to tax only the proceeds. If we place such language there, that the Legislature will have something which they must act upon, I have the utmost confidence that we shall be dealing justly with all portions of the Territory. We ought to endeavor at the same time to foster the agricultural interests of the State, and certainly should do nothing which may oppress that interest, any more than it should attempt to inflict a stab upon the life of the mining interest.

Now, in relation to the taxation of toll-roads, referred to in this discussion; if I am correctly informed, toll-roads are subject to a tax, levied directly upon the franchise. For county purposes, they are taxed upon the franchises, but I had an impression that for territorial purposes, they were taxed upon the proceeds. That is a case where it is easy, by a fair valuation, to reach the proceeds. But the net proceeds, as the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) has said, cannot be separated from the gross proceeds, and to impose a tax upon the net proceeds, would be to leave the matter a question of doubt and uncertainty. Let us place in our Constitution such language as beyond a doubt will reach the mines, for unquestionably they should be made to pay a portion of the expense of carrying on the State Government. I think the proposition of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) is a fair one, and I hope that no gentleman here will refuse to unite with and cooperate with the representatives of the mining districts, in a proposition of that kind. Either that proposition, or the taxation of the proceeds, would, in my judgment, be fair and just.

Now, so far as the judiciary is concerned, I hope we shall provide for a self-sustaining judiciary, if it can be done. There is a large amount of capital invested in the mines in our Territory, which is now locked up by litigation upon litigation, and it is becoming a heavy tax upon the Territory, as it will be upon the State that is to be. The Committee on the Judiciary will probably bring forward here a judiciary system which will be a self-sustaining one, and that I look to more than anything else, to relieve this Territory of the heavy burden now resting upon it. Under such a system, litigation would cost the parties litigant, of whatever interest, whether agricultural or mining, very little if any more than under the present system, while it would cost the State little or nothing.

TOZER—HAWLEY.

As I have already said, I supposed there was not an individual here, who would seriously propose to tax a prospecting mine. I might have a mine which I would refuse to sell for even five dollars a foot, or more, and still it might not be worth that amount, and possibly not worth one cent. I might spend thousands upon it, perhaps, never realizing anything. But if I do reach something of value in that mine, and prove that it is a mine beyond all question, then it should be taxed. But the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) offers a different plan, namely, that whether it is an actual mine or not, if it be worth five dollars a foot, it shall be taxed. There can be no objection to that, certainly, on the part of the agricultural interest. For one, I am willing to decide this matter upon any basis that shall give us a uniform taxation, and I hope we may be able to unite upon some basis of that kind, although I would prefer the taxation of the proceeds.

Mr. TOZER. Several days have now elapsed since this Convention, in its progress through that Constitution which we have adopted as the basis of our deliberations, reached the section now under discussion, at which time I proposed the amendment which has elicited so long a debate here to-day. Since this discussion commenced this morning, I have listened to it with great pleasure, and, I believe, with considerable profit. So much has been said, and so well said, that I find myself now with but little left to add to those arguments which have been presented by gentlemen, so much more able than myself, who have preceded me. I have sat silent during the debate, because I am not much of a talker, and I know I should not succeed very well in the attempt, if I tried to be one. But there are one or two ideas which, if the Committee will patiently bear with me, I will attempt to elucidate.

Now, in the first place, in regard to the matter of levying a tax upon the property within the borders of the new State, for the support of its government, we find that there is a wide difference of opinion as to what constitutes property. Those who advocate the side of the question which is adverse to the views I entertain, think they can discover a species of property in the mines: but for my part, I have failed and do still fail to see in the mines any property of such a nature that it can justly be subjected to taxation. Some of our mines have been described by speakers who have preceded me, as "a hole in the ground;" but, sir, they might all be characterized in that way, whether they be valuable or valueless. The Gould & Curry mine is but a hole in the ground, although rather deeper than some others, for instance, those in Lander County, in Spring Valley, in my own county or elsewhere in the Territory. But in my opinion, the Gould & Curry mine is no more a subject for taxation, legitimately and justly, than is the poorest, least productive mine in the Territory. The great difference, sir, between that species of property and the property lying in this county, or in any one of the agricultural counties, is this: A mine—a productive mine, I mean—the longer and more successfully you work it, the less valuable it becomes. Who would assert here, sir, that the Gould & Curry mine, which has been so frequently referred to to-day for illustration, is as valuable now as it was two years ago? Millions upon millions of dollars have been extracted from it, and put into circulation, adding, to that extent, to the wealth of this Territory, of this coast, and of the world; and that mine, say what you will, is, in consequence, depreciating in value. But every dollar which has been abstracted from it, and put into circulation, and every dollar which shall be abstracted from it in the future, has added, and will continue to add, so much to the value of the other species of property which surround it. Now, the farmer tills his farm, and raises his crops, this year, and next year, depending, with absolute certainty, upon the arrival of seed-time and harvest, year by year, now, and for all time to come, as long as he may live, or his children, or his children's children after him. But let the Gould & Curry, or any other mine in the Territory, be worked as thoroughly, energetically, and successfully as that mine has been, and it will be but a few short years before it will be rendered utterly worthless.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman from Storey allow me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. TOZER. I would rather not, because I am so unaccustomed to debate. I will soon be through, and then the gentleman can say what he pleases, without interrupting me.

I was about to say, sir, that the crop will not grow again, in the Comstock, or any other mine. When the present crop is once reaped, it is reaped for aye, and the Gould & Curry, and other mines, will soon be exhausted. And by the word "soon," I do not mean to-morrow, next week, or next year, but, in all probability, we will all live to see that time. Other mines as famous, and as productive, may be discovered, but those mines to which we all now allude in illustration of our debate, will then have become utterly exhausted. Four years ago, when I first settled at that point, the Comstock ledge was successfully worked immediately on the surface, but now we are mining there at a depth of four hundred and sixty-five feet, having gone down at the rate of two hundred feet a year. At the rate we are now working it out, that ledge will be exhausted in a very few years, and I think the mind of every member can readily reach that conclusion. Only a few years will elapse before those mines will be worked out to a depth beyond which human ingenuity will fail to go. Then why should the Convention insist upon singling out those mines which are now producing, which are adding to our wealth from day to day, and levying an onerous tax upon them, for the support of our State Government?

TOZER—JOHNSON.

Mr. Chairman, I do not deem it necessary to tax those mines for the support of our State Government, if it is to be an economical State Government, such as we can, and I hope will, organize under the Constitution which we are now deliberating upon. Such a Government can be supported, well supported, respectably supported, through other, and more proper, more just, more equitable means. The taxable property of this Territory is increasing, and bids fair to continue to increase in such a ratio, that there is, and will be, enough property, real, tangible, actual property, available for all the purposes of taxation, to support the State Government, without taking such intangible, fleeting property as the mines, upon which to levy a tax. And the taxes will not be more burdensome than the people of other States and Territories on the Pacific coast have borne for years. I believe that to be a fact, and I do not believe that the proposition can be successfully controverted. If such be the case, sir, I say let us foster this mining interest, which is apparently the only support of all other interests in this barren wilderness which we are now attempting to convert into a State, by the will of the people. Let us foster this interest, and remove from it the burden of taxation as far as possible. Let us, in the commencement of our State existence, levy a tax upon the net proceeds, and not upon the gross proceeds, for which some have contended; because, in many cases, I might say in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, or even nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand, the gross proceeds of mines in this Territory are absorbed in the working, and misfortune and ruin are the only net proceeds derived from them. In Storey County, with which I am most familiar, although I have traveled a good deal elsewhere in the Territory, all the mines which I am now able to call to mind that are really productive mines, are also net proceeds mines.

Mr. JOHNSON. How many of them pay taxes?

Mr. TOZER. I choose not to be catechised. I did not ask any questions of the gentleman from Ormsby when he was on the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I would not have interrupted him if I had supposed it would not have been agreeable to him.

Mr. TOZER. Well, it is a simple question, easily answered. There are eight mines there, which pay on the gross proceeds; and of these, six would be taxed, according to my amendment. The other mines, located on the justly famous Comstock ledge, are not paying mines, and it is altogether problematical whether they ever will become paying mines. Certainly the immense sums which have been expended on them have gone but a little way towards showing or indicating that they will ever become dividend-paying mines. Starting at the northern end with the Ophir mine, we have immediately adjoining that, the Central mine. Why, sir, nothing but the grossest injustice, the most flagrant wrong to the owners of that claim, who have been digging and delving these four or five years past, ever would suggest the idea of imposing a tax upon those men. Had you, or other members of this Convention, been the owners of about one hundred feet of that mine, you would perhaps more fully appreciate the force of what I say, because it would require a very wealthy man indeed to bear the taxation, in the way of assessments, which have been paid upon each one hundred feet of that mine up to this time. More than four hundred thousand dollars have been expended in the mine, and it has all been raised by self-imposed taxation upon the owners of that claim since it was discovered and located in 1859. So it is with the California, the Sides, the Best & Belcher, the White & Murphy, and the Hale & Norcross. Then come the Chollar, and the Potosi, following along the lead; mines which have been made famous by expensive litigation, and neither of which ever paid a dollar of dividends, but, on the contrary, have subjected their owners to heavy assessments. With the Chollar company I am unfortunately more particularly well acquainted, and I can say that there have been between three and four hundred thousand dollars in assessments levied and paid in, into that company alone. And for what? To put into circulation perhaps a hundred thousand dollars more, taken from the mine. It has cost the owners not less than three dollars for every dollar they have taken out and put into circulation, to add to the material wealth of the Territory, its prosperity and success, and its welfare in every respect. It is ill-timed indeed, for gentlemen who have reaped that golden harvest from my pocket, and from the pockets of others, to step in now and say: "Your burdens are not sufficiently heavy. Although your backs are well nigh broken, yet another straw must be laid on. We have reaped the benefit of your enterprise and labor, and the capital you have expended there, and now if, forsooth, we can better our condition by forming a State Government, we will levy an additional tax upon you. Your ground is held to be valuable, solely because it has cost you a high price, and you must pay the fiddler while we dance."

Continuing down that ledge, before you reach the Gold Hill mines, you come to the Ceresus, the Bullion, the Coppers & Mills, the

Thursday.]

DELONG—TOZER—MURDOCK.

[July 14.]

Fairview, the Alpha & Omega, and the Superior mines; none of which have paid the owners one dollar per foot, and the history of which is very similar to the history of those I have previously mentioned. They are seldom more than a few hundred feet below the surface, and their owners are looking with hope almost bordering on despair for the little glittering particles of the precious metals which shall proclaim the fact that at last they have surely found a mine. Then come the Gold Hill mines, a few of which have paid richly from the first. South of these is the Belcher, which within a few months has paid a small dividend. And now I have enumerated the whole of the dividend-paying mines of the Territory of Nevada.

Mr. DELONG. The Savage.

Mr. TOZER. I alluded to the Savage, I think, as one of the paying claims: if not, I intended to, at least. And yet, Mr. Chairman, the yield of these various mines, profit-paying and otherwise, has put into circulation here an enormous amount of money, day after day, week after week, and year after year, a very large proportion of which is being expended in permanent improvements in this Territory. It is being put into roads, bridges, ditches, water-works, mills, houses, stables, hotels, and the thousand and one other things which constitute the long catalogue of real and personal property. Now, if in four years we have made such rapid strides that, as gentlemen assert, and I believe correctly, we have already a taxable property outside of the mines—not outside of mining property however—of twenty-five millions of dollars, then, in a year or two longer, in the same ratio in which we are now progressing, we can entertain a confident hope, in my opinion, of doubling that amount of taxable property.

Why, then, should we stand back and hesitate about our little adventure of a State Government? Why call it an experiment? It is no experiment, so far as the amount of revenue to be derived from our property by a just and equitable rule of taxation is concerned. There is no doubt about its being sufficient to pay the current expenses of a State Government. No, sir; it is no experiment, for there is enough—plenty, and to spare—of property, which may be fairly taxed, to pay all the necessary expenses of our State Government. Let that be done, and I am content. I am in favor of the organization of a State Government, and I need not pause a moment to tell why I am in favor of it. I shall be most unequivocally opposed to the organization of a State Government, however, if the Convention in its wisdom shall decide that a clause shall be incorporated in our organic law, levying such an outrageous tax upon that kind of property which is not taxable elsewhere—in California, in Oregon, or in Mexico—for the support of that Government. No where else is such a tax as is proposed here—a tax upon real property—levied upon property in mining claims.

I had made a memorandum of a great many other points, which I wished to submit to the consideration of the Convention, but, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, most of the ground I intended to have gone over, has been already more ably occupied by others, and I will not consume further time.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am not one of those men who, as the gentleman from Humboldt, who was last on the floor (Mr. Dunne) has said, are afraid to express their views on this subject, and therefore, with the leave of the Chair and of the Convention, I will give my views, as plainly and briefly as I can.

Now, in the first place, in this article which we have been debating, as it stands, I can see nothing really objectionable, until we come down to what I call surplusage. It says that the Legislature shall provide by law for the equal taxation of all property. I would be willing to stop there, and I should think we need not say anything more. But in the opinion of some gentlemen, there is a doubt in regard to the language following:—"real and personal." If that is not enough, why not say "all other property?" And then you can add, if you please, "the rest of mankind." [Merriment.] Now I cannot conceive how any body could misconstrue the language, when we say, "all property, both personal and real, shall be taxed." I cannot see, for my life, what more we have got to do. This "mines and mining property" which is added there, looks to me, therefore, like surplusage. We might just as well have said "teams and teaming property," and "ranch and ranching property." It seems to me, I say, that it is entirely surplusage, and we had better stop there.

I have been sorry to hear some of the things which have been said to-day. Though I have listened with great interest, and I trust with much instruction to the gentlemen who have debated this question now for a day and a half, yet I have been surprised at the wide range they have taken. Some of them have come here, it seems to me, with different views from what I have in regard to our duty. Now, I voted against the adoption of the former Constitution—the Constitution which I hold in my hand—solely for the reason that I thought it was too legislative in its character. I supposed it was our duty to come here, not to legislate, but to make something that shall be to the Legislature of the State, what the chart is to the seaman—a guide and restriction, to regulate the Legislature, and keep it within certain bounds. That is the object of a Constitution, and not to legislate. I am opposed in toto to legislating here, in any shape or manner, on this subject, further than to say that the Legislature shall tax all property equally. Then I say, leave all the rest to the Legislature. Why? For this reason: that if we go on and incorporate into our organic law, a rule for the government of the Legislature, and it should turn out to be a bad rule—if it should prove to be of such a character that the people would get sick of it, and want to change it, what will we have to do? Why, sir, we shall have to come back here and hold another Constitutional Convention, to remodel this Constitution, or to make a new one; whereas, if we leave the matter to the Legislature, and they shall see fit to tax the mines, well and good. Let them have a say in the matter. Let them try it, if they please, for one year, and then if the rule works badly, the people can alter it, by sending men to the Legislature who will take such action as is called for by the wants of the people. The members of the Legislature come fresh from the people; they know what the people want, and can enact such laws as will meet those wants.

MURDOCK.

Now, the long talks which have been had here, in relation to the value of real estate, and the value of the mines, I have sat and listened to with a great deal of interest. Sir, I was one of the early miners of California. In the course of one of my prospecting tours, in the year 1853, I came over through the mountains until I got to the northern end of Lake Bigler, or Lake Tahoe, as it is now called, and from there I was driven out by the Indians, together with the rest of my party. We prospected there until the Indians shot us full of arrows, and then we left. [Laughter.] I remember that at one time I camped with Livingstone and Kinkead, on the very property which is now owned by my friend here from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant.) And what was that property worth then? Dr. King lived at that time up here in the cañon. And what was that property worth there? I ask gentlemen just to compare its value in 1853 with what it is worth now; and if it is worth more now than it was then, I ask what has made it worth more now? Who would have come here to live, and build up this Territory, if the energetic prospector had not come here first and found the "oro" here? I say that is what has made the property which we now have here. And ought not these prospectors to be encouraged? I do not say that they should not be taxed, when they are able to pay. I do not say that they should not pay their proportion of the revenue to be raised for the support of the State Government, in proportion as they are protected by the State Government, when they have anything to be taxed upon. And I know they are protected by the Government. But I hold this to be the fact—or it is my experience, at all events—that all this valuable property in the Territory is, and has been made what it is, by the active energy of the prospector.

Foreigners have come here with money, to develop our mines, to a little extent, but that is not a drop in the bucket, compared with what it will be, if they are properly encouraged. Old as I am, I believe I shall live to see the day when Virginia City will be a third rate mining town. Now, I represent Churchill County, which is partly an agricultural county, and the agriculture of that county depends wholly on the mines to the east of us. As to whether our agricultural lands shall be valuable or not, depends altogether upon the development of those mines. Hundreds of men are there now, hard at work, living on pork and beans. They come here for their supplies, and they go to the mountains for lumber, and they are working hard to develop the mines. And for what? They are finding rock that pays well, even on the top, and their hopes are sanguine. Now, will you go and assess them, and put a stop to their energy? If you put a tax on their enterprises, or if you assess their claims for what they imagine them to be worth, they will have to abandon those claims. I have ground to-day which I would not sell for five dollars a foot, but if I should sell it, then there is the money, and you can tax me on that. I am really willing to be taxed on what I have got, but I do not want to be taxed because I come up here to Carson or Virginia and blow a little, perhaps, about the value of my claims. [Laughter.] I do not want you to tax me until I know I have got it; but if any of you will go and buy me out, I will agree to pay the taxes for you, if there should be a tax levied on those claims. [Laughter.]

This is the reason I want the words "mines and mining property" stricken out; not because in themselves they amount to anything. I do not ask you to strike out those words because they are objectionable, in my opinion, but I consider them as mere surplusage. As I said before, you might as well add, "all teams and teaming property," and "all ranches and ranching property," and so on with everything else. The words do not add one jot or tittle to the real force of the language. I say mines are not property, until they are proven to be property. My anticipations and hopes are not property, because you cannot make them available. A, B, and C cannot sell their hopes and anticipations, and get the cash for them; and, consequently, they are not property, not being worth anything in the market. My hopes may be high, but they are not property, under the law.

Now, just as soon as the mines pay, I am willing to have them pay taxes. What is it, as I asked before, that has made property valuable in this Territory? What has made Washoe Valley valuable? What has made the mills, built by capitalists, capable of paying those taxes, which they are willing to pay on all the actual property they have? Capitalists come up here and invest the money out of their pockets, and their investments have been remunerative. Everybody else has made money here, while the only losers have been the miners. Yes, Mr. Chairman, they are the losers; they form an exception to the general rule. They are putting money into circulation, and spending hundreds of thousands of dollars, and they get nothing. My friend from Washoe here (Mr. Sturtevant) well knows that I have spent my money freely, hundreds of dollars of it, for feeding my mules and oxen when I was hauling rock from Virginia over there, and that too, for feed raised upon land which I could have had five or six years ago for nothing; and not only that land, but all the land that joins it. (Laughter.)

KINKEAD—FITCH.

[July 14.

Now, suppose when I go back home to my constituents, and they say, "Well, Murdock; have you got a mining clause?" I answer, "Yes, we have." Then they will say, "Very well; away goes your Constitution"—and I would help them. [Laughter.] We do not come here to legislate, and say what shall be, or what shall not be taxed, because what is right this year, may not be right next year. But let the Legislature impose a tax, if they please, coming fresh from the people, and I will not say a word. And when they find that it works badly, (which I think they very soon would)—when they find that it checks the prosperity of the country—they can repeal it. If it checks the energies of those who are engaged in mining, as it certainly would do, by stopping the operations of the prospectors, what effect will it have? Why, it will lessen the value of the property of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) and the property of every other man who raises a cabbage in this Territory. You put burdens on the mines in the eastern range, which are still undeveloped, and just in that proportion you make yourselves poorer. That is what I believe will be the effect. I cannot see the difference between the mining and the agricultural interests, in that respect. When business is good in the mines, business is good with the agriculturalists; and just as the mines pay and flourish, just in that proportion the whole country will prosper, and just in that proportion we will be able to carry on our State Government.

My opinion is, that if we have a self-sustaining judiciary—if we say that we will let them that dance pay the fiddler—we shall get along without any trouble. The clients pay these lawyers who get their high fees; and I say, let the clients pay the judges, too. I do not care how much you leave to the Legislature which is to come after us, because I do not believe that wisdom is going to die with this body. There will be men as wise as we are, and as well qualified, sent here to legislate, and they will be sent here by the people expressly to legislate, and for nothing else. With the expression of these views, which I have offered because gentlemen desired to have everybody express their views, I am willing to stand before the Convention. I may be in error; but, right or wrong, those are the principles I advocate.

Mr. KINKEAD. I presume, Mr. President, that the debate upon this question is about closed. The principles involved have been ably and thoroughly discussed, and that part of the subject I am willing to leave where it now stands. I rise at this time for the purpose merely of stating a few facts and presenting a few figures to show the probable cost of a State Government, and the basis upon which we propose to support it, as those matters may have some bearing upon the question we are considering.

The State Constitutional Convention which assembled here last fall had a Finance Committee, composed—with perhaps a single exception (myself)—of very able gentlemen, and it was their particular province to examine this very question. They canvassed this part of their duties thoroughly, and arrived at the conclusion that the lowest sum for which an economical State Government could be supported was three hundred thousand dollars a year. My own opinion on this subject has undergone no change since then, and gentlemen will find, I think, when they come to try the experiment, that the actual figures will go over rather than under that amount. In addition to that sum, we must provide for the indebtedness of the Territory, amounting now to about two hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars, and which, probably, by the time we get the State Government into operation, will reach the amount of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It is true that a large proportion of this indebtedness is bonded, and probably the bonds could be met at maturity, with the present and prospective Territorial revenue; still, the interest and part of the principal must be paid the first year, amounting very nearly to fifty thousand dollars. Thus we have three hundred and fifty thousand dollars to provide for in the first year of our State existence—the lowest amount, in my opinion, on which we can possibly conduct a State Government. Now then, to meet that amount of expenditure, what have we to rely upon?

Mr. FITCH. Will the gentleman give us the items?

Mr. KINKEAD. If the gentleman will wait on me to-morrow, I will do so.

Mr. FITCH. I would like the items now, for the information of the Convention.

Mr. KINKEAD. I stated that proposition as the result of the labors of the Finance Committee of the former Convention, of which the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) was a member, though as he was sick during the latter part of the Convention, I am not sure whether he remained until the labors of the committee were concluded.

Mr. FITCH. But was not that estimate based upon the hypothesis that the State was to be compelled to support a system of District Courts and District Judges?

Mr. KINKEAD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITCH. That is ruled out, now, by our proposed judicial system.

Mr. KINKEAD. Well, I suppose it amounts to the same thing; if our system makes the county expenses higher, the taxation will be the same.

Thursday.]

NOURSE.

[July 14.

Now what have we, to meet this expenditure? for we must look the whole thing in the face. We have an assessment-roll, amounting last year to twenty-five and a half millions of dollars, assessed on all the property in the Territory, exclusive of the mines. Of this amount, over fourteen millions of dollars are assessed in Storey County, and all agree that the assessment in that county has been excessive in the extreme. I do not go as far as my colleague, (Mr. Johnson,) who thought that the property in Storey County would not realize more than half what it was assessed for, but I think no one will dispute that it was assessed at least four millions higher than it should have been. In other counties the assessment was fully as high as it will probably be this year, and, sir, I do not expect that the aggregate amount of property in the Territory, to be assessed this year, exclusive of the mines, will exceed twenty millions. But taking the basis of twenty-five and a half millions of dollars—and I do not suppose it can be any more than that this year, certainly; I do not suppose any gentleman on this floor is so sanguine of our prosperity in the immediate future as to entertain the idea that our property will be likely to exceed the amount of the assessment of last year—what will be the result of our calculations? We have a gross revenue, at the present rate of taxation for Territorial purposes, to wit: one-half of one per cent., of nearly one hundred and twenty-eight thousand dollars. Of this amount, up to this time, there has been paid into the treasury about eighty-three thousand dollars, leaving the large sum of forty-five thousand dollars delinquent, and consumed in the expenses of collection. It is very easy to calculate what it would cost to raise four times the amount of last year's revenue on the same property. It would involve a tax of two per cent. for State purposes alone, to which, if you add your County, City and Federal taxes, you have in truth a "burden grievous to be borne." I simply desired to present these facts, not to comment upon them at any length at this time, as I am anxious to have this question disposed of speedily.

Now, we must learn wisdom from the past, and I simply submit this statement for the consideration of the Convention. I think, myself, that in a year or two, there will be a larger amount of other property liable to taxation. But what I want to get at, is simply this idea, that we have not property enough, aside from the mines, to sustain a State Government without extreme and onerous taxation. It seems to me, therefore, that the question is narrowed down to this: either we must tax the mines, or we must bankrupt the State Government, at its very outset.

Mr. NOURSE. I am aware that I have taken up more than my share of the time of the Convention, but I endeavor not to speak unless I really have something to say. I am appalled,

I confess, at finding from the statements of two or three gentlemen here, what a ruinous business this mining is. Why, sir, if it be so surely ruinous to all who engage in it, that only six mines in the Territory are paying anything, and all the rest are not paying, nor likely to pay, it seems to me that it would be the part of wisdom and humanity for us to put a fence around our ledges, and by absolute prohibition, keep men from rushing in, headlong, to their certain destruction. Shall we be doing wisely, by refraining from imposing any taxation on the mines, to encourage men thus to plunge into certain ruin, and loss of property? It really seems to me that the argument of these gentlemen goes a little too far. I do not know how far those who use such an argument actually mean it—though I am sure they would not say what they do unless they believed it. I do not know, indeed, how far their zeal in argument may have brought them to this view of the state of things—but it is generally supposed and believed, that the business of mining is what is going to make Nevada rich, and it certainly will not do that, if those who are engaged in it are always going to lose money by it; and that is all there is about that.

Now is it, in fact, going to make any perceptible difference in the amount of bullion extracted from the earth, whether a tax is levied on the mines or not? Gentlemen talk as if it were to be taken for granted that if you levy a tax upon mining property as you do on everything else, it is going to put a stop to all mining and prospecting. Is that reasonable? Here is a tax, say of two and a half, or even three per cent., to be imposed upon the mines. So far as I can judge, men do not go into operations of any kind in this country with an idea of making anything like six per cent. per annum in the way of profit. On the contrary, if their business is considered good for anything, it must yield from three to five per cent. per month; and does anybody believe for one moment that a tax of only two and a half or three per cent.—not per month, but per annum—is going to make any difference in the amount of mining carried on? I do not believe there will be a single mine the less, that is worth anything, in which mining operations will be carried on in this Territory. I do not believe it will make the difference of a single mine, whether the mines are taxed or not taxed. I believe the burden will be so light—for it will not be heavy if it is shared equally by all—that the miners will not notice it, except as their attention may be called to it by politicians, who may desire to make a hobby of it, as a means of getting into power and place. If the miners were let alone by the politicians, does anybody believe that the taxation of mining property, as other property is taxed, would make any difference in the amount of mining? I certainly do not believe it.

Now, it is proposed that we shall not tax any mine which has a value of under five dollars per foot. As a practical matter, I do not care a copper for that, and I complain of it only as an abandonment of the sound political principle, that all property shall be taxed alike. And it is an abandonment of moral principle, too, because it is unjustly taking from one class all the burdens which should be borne by that class in fair proportion, and placing them upon another class. Still, as a practical matter, it is very trivial. The taxation of mines worth less than five dollars per foot, does not amount to anything, and therefore, I say, it seems to me that gentlemen should not ask us, who think it is an abandonment of principle, to make that concession for so trifling a benefit as it would bring them. It will save a slight burden upon some of those gentlemen's constituents—those who have invested in cheap mining ground—but when we do that, we abandon the principle of just and equal taxation. Why, sir, it was for just such a slight thing as that, that our revolution was begun and carried on. The American people did not care for the three-pence a pound tax on tea, but they would not abandon the principle of "no taxation without representation." It is just so here. We who believe that upon principle all property should be taxed alike, feel that we should not be asked to abandon that principle, when in doing so, we do not help anybody to any appreciable extent. Now, as a matter of principle, we all start out on the same general ground, that all property is to be taxed alike; for if I understand the argument of gentlemen, it is not as a matter of right, but as a matter of policy, that they argue for its exemption.

Mr. BANKS. That is not my argument.

Mr. DELONG. It is not mine.

Mr. NOURSE. I understand them to say, that by refraining from taxing the mines, we should encourage them, and so make the State wealthy. I think I state the argument fairly, as it has been presented here. Gentlemen say, if you impose a tax on the mines, you thereby discourage mining, and by not imposing a tax on the mines, you encourage mining—that is what I understand gentlemen to argue—and that thus you increase the wealth of the community. They do not put it upon principle at all, for the ground of principle is, that all property which is protected by the Government, should bear its share in supporting the Government. But these gentlemen say that the mining interest, which is the great interest of the Territory, and upon which the Territory depends almost wholly, should not be taxed. They say that it is not desirable that you should tax that species of property, because, by not taxing it, you encourage the development of the mines, and so add to the wealth of the Territory. They say the mines make all the wealth there is in the Territory, and I admit all that. No gentleman can go beyond my appreciation of the importance of the mines, and the mining interest. I understand perfectly, that the ranches, and the quartz mills, and everything else, would be good for nothing without them. But let us see how this doctrine would work, by referring to other States and communities. The City of Chicago would have been good for nothing without the farming country back of it. Her railroads now reach half a dozen other States, making them all tributary to her wealth and prosperity; but in the first place, I say, but for the farms of Illinois, there would have been no Chicago. Those farms built up her stores, her hotels, her warehouses, and everything there is in Chicago. Yet who ever affirmed, or dreamed of affirming, that those farms in Illinois should be exempt from taxation, because they had made Chicago; or that the buildings, and other property in Chicago, should constitute the whole taxable property in the State of Illinois? So it is if you go into New England. Take the City of Manchester, New Hampshire, for instance, built up entirely by manufactures. That city would be nothing without them. Those manufacturers have employed laborers, as our mines have here, but in much greater numbers. They have paid out immense sums of money, and they have built the town; and yet, what manufacturer ever claimed that his property in the manufactory should not be taxed? So much for that argument.

Now, the eloquent gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Chapin) thinks he sees a parallel for the policy which he seeks to establish and pursue, in the fact that Massachusetts does not tax the whales that her whalers hunt after, or the oil which they are seeking for, until it gets into port. Well, I do not know by what authority Massachusetts could tax the whales in the Pacific Ocean. She might as well undertake to tax real estate in the Sandwich Islands. I do not know by what authority she could tax the oil until it does get into port, because until then, nobody knows that there is any such oil. And the fact, instead of being such an illustration of this policy as the gentleman claims, seems to me only a matter of mere honesty. They do not tax the whales, and the oil, because they have no right to tax it.

But the gentleman from Churchill County, behind me, (Mr. Murdock,) says he is opposed to putting in "mines and mining property," because it is surplusage. He says, when you say "property," that is all that is necessary. Now, there is something more than the mere question of taxation of the mines that arises here, and that is one point to which I wish to call attention in this connection, for it seems to me that that is involved, as much as the taxing of the mines. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Tozer) is not before the Convention at this time, but the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) is before the Convention; and that provides for the taxation of not only real and personal property, but also of possessory claims and rights

JOHNSON—NOURSE.

[July 14

Now, without such a provision, what is there that can be taxed? There are in this Territory a few ranches, perhaps, that have been surveyed by Government, and are occupied by owners who have the title in fee, and that is all the property to which anybody has a title in fee. All other titles are possessory; and of the fourteen millions of property in Storey County, I think probably four millions are personal property, and probably about ten millions are real estate; and of all that property, scarcely a dollar's worth is owned in fee. It is all possessory property; and if the arguments of some gentlemen be sound, that because of the language of the Enabling Act property of the United States cannot be subjected to taxation, then those houses and stores in Virginia City, partaking of the realty, would escape. They certainly are not personal property. They cannot be taxed as real property, according to that doctrine, because the fee is in the United States, and they cannot be taxed as personal property because they are not personal, but are fixed and annexed to the realty. And if you do not adopt this provision, which includes possessory rights, under the doctrine contended for by the other side of the House you cannot tax that fourteen millions of surface property in Storey County—not a rod of it. You not only throw out all mines and mining property, but all other property, except that to which the title in fee has been granted by the Government. It may be said—I do not know but it is correct—that possessory rights in lands are not taxable, because of a provision in the Enabling Act that it shall not be taxed for five years, but I do not think there is such a provision.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is not.

Mr. NOURSE. Well, I thought there was not. But I say, unless you include in your constitutional provision, such language as will make it sure that you can tax possessory rights, it leaves the State Government to be paid for and supported by the owners of the few ranches which have been entered at the United States land office, not amounting altogether to two millions of dollars in value. That is where it would leave us.

Now, the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) puts this matter at rest by his amendment. It suits me exactly. I am not particular about the exact language, however. I do not lay as much stress as he does on the use of that word "claims." I should be willing to have it modified so as to state only that all property, possessions, and possessory rights shall be taxed. A man may have a clear possessory right to a mine, for instance, of which he has been unjustly deprived. I would not object to allowing it to read "property possessions and possessory rights;" and when you get that idea in, I do not care by what particular word or phrase, I am perfectly satisfied.

Now we come to another question, and that is one which has been twisted and turned into every imaginable shape, in this debate. It seems to me that gentlemen are not consistent in regard to it. In one part of their argument, they say that the mines pay for everything—that if a man raises a cabbage, the miner pays him for it, and pays all his taxes too—that ultimately, everything comes out of the miner. Then what is the objection to directly taxing the mines. If there are twenty millions, say, of agricultural property, and sixty millions of mining property in the Territory, you have to tax the twenty millions at the rate of one and a half per cent., in order to raise three hundred thousand dollars, or two per cent., making the allowance necessary for the cost of collection, and for the non-collections; and there would be four hundred thousand dollars for the miners to pay, if they have to pay it all, according to this argument. Now, are they any worse off, if they add their property to the assessment, and make it eighty millions of dollars, paying taxes at the rate of one half of one per cent. on that, instead of two per cent. on the twenty millions? What is the difference? I do not know why it is objected to, unless there is some "gum-game" about it—unless men are to have wool pulled over their eyes—unless gentlemen wish to be enabled to go back to their mining constituencies and say: "We got you clear from taxation!" when they really did no such thing. If they admit that the miners have got to pay the taxes in the end, I do not see but that the miners may as well nominally pay their share of taxation, as to pay it really, and get no credit for it. No more money is necessary to be raised whether the tax is levied on twenty millions or on eighty millions.

But there is another feature of this case, which has not been brought out quite as boldly as it ought to be. It is not merely a State matter, but a county matter also. And here let me say that, elected as I am by the people of Washoe County as their representative, I do not believe that I am bound to vote simply for their particular interests, regardless of what may be right. I do not believe they ever expected that of me; and if they did, they are woefully mistaken in their man, that is all. Now, we are legislating for county expenses, as well as for State expenses, and I take an interest not only in Washoe, but also in Storey County. The representation on this floor from the latter county has so prepossessed me in its favor, that I cannot help it. [Merriment.] I do not want to see the people of Storey County dealt unjustly by. Why, the assessor of Storey County tells us here, that he has assessed four millions of personal property in that county, owned as mines are owned. It was not assessed as real property, nor as possessions, but only as gross proceeds. Of course, the stocks held by individuals must have been assessed also, if the assessor did his duty, as the presumption of law is he did, and we must presume that if any gentleman in Virginia City had stock in their safes, they were assessed for it. That would be personal property, and therefore liable to assessment; and of course no Virginia gentleman would swear falsely when put on his oath. That property, then, must be estimated with the other property in Storey County, and it is variously estimated from six to eight millions of dollars. We will put it at the lowest figure, for our calculation. All the interest which the Storey County people have in the mines, must be included with the personal property of the county, which would take in, therefore, all the stocks, the dry goods, the groceries, horses, carriages—everything in the way of personal property. Suppose that half of that amount of personal property is in stocks; then we see that a very large proportion of the personal property owned by the Storey County people does not pay a cent towards the expenses of Storey County, and yet, as has been said repeatedly here, the time of the District Court is taken up by those large mining cases, in respect to ledges owned by men living abroad—non-residents in the Territory. They are protected there by law, at the expense of the people of Virginia. And most of the time of Judge Davenport, the City Recorder, is taken up, I believe, in investigating those “smoking-out” cases, and bringing in men for assault and battery in connection with them.

DELONG—NOURSE—EARL.

Mr. DELONG. Let me correct the gentleman. That is a mistake: the reports show that the Recorder's time is mostly taken up with the cases of gentlemen from the country, who have come into the city to get drunk. [Laughter.]

Mr. NOURSE. Well, we know the papers always tell the truth, and the papers show that those “smoking-out” scrapes are what chiefly occupy his time; the rest of it is taken up with cases of assault and battery. They are about all under-ground cases of a similar nature. Gentlemen will admit, I suppose, that these cases take up much of the time of the court.

Mr. EARL. But the Recorder's Court is a self-sustaining court; and not only that, but it pays a considerable amount into the county treasury.

Mr. NOURSE. So much the better for the county treasury. Any other information from Storey County will be gratefully received and noted. [Laughter.]

As I was about to say when I was interrupted, these stockholders in the mines, are not paying anything towards the expenses of the county of Storey. They are getting rich from it, I think, notwithstanding the fearful stories we have heard about the non-productiveness of the mines. They are certainly getting dividends, month after month; they are enjoying the protection of the courts, and they are paying nothing whatever towards the county expenses, except it may be what they may pay in the way of fines when they get into that condition which the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has suggested, and that would certainly not amount to a very large sum in the aggregate. Now I protest against the injustice of that arrangement. It is not a question between the mining counties and the cow counties, but it is a question between the poor, honest miner, who digs with his pick in the mines, and those rich stockholders and shareholders—those wealthy men. I say they should be made to pay for the protection they receive.

Now I wish to pay my respects for a moment to this talk about the Constitution being rejected. I did not want to say anything about that, but when they tell us about the miners coming down forty-horse power against the Constitution because they are not exempted from taxation, if it were any where else than here, I should say it sounds like bosh. I want to know who are the voters of Storey County? Are the only voters there to be those who are to pay the heavy taxes, if the Constitution is adopted? I take it the working-men constitute a majority of the voters in Storey County, and will they have to pay a cent of this tax on the mines? Is it not simply the owner, and not the working-man, who will be taxed? And the owner will not pay his workmen one cent less wages on that account. The standard of labor is not regulated by that. The Gould & Curry Company is not going to work to figure the matter up, and cut down their operatives' wages so much per man, in order to meet this tax. It will not make a difference of a single cent with the working-man. I do not know how much the voters of Storey County may be misled by demagogues, who would make them believe they are wronged by this policy; but if the case is fairly presented to them, does any gentleman believe that a majority of the people in Storey County is going to be led to vote against this Constitution because under it the wealthy men who have property there will have to pay taxes on that property?

All this argument about not taxing the mines because we want to encourage their development, is nonsense. The argument is, that you must not tax any man who is trying to make money, for fear he will stop making it. If an eastern manufacturer goes into a factory and makes money there, he does it for himself, for his own benefit, and not pro bono publico. And the miners in this Territory, with all due respect, go into that business also for themselves. Do people in the East, when the manufacturer, who is undoubtedly benefiting the community, begins to make money for himself, stand and hold their breath, and say: “Do not tax him, or he will stop his work”? Let these miners make money for themselves if they please, but are they to be exempted from taxation merely because, while making themselves rich, they happen to make others rich also, or to advance the general interests of the community? The argument would be good and sound if it were proposed to levy an extra tax. If, under a system such as the United States Government has adopted, of taxing incomes, and so on, we proposed to add to the property tax another tax upon the proceeds of the mines, then gentlemen might with justice come in and say: "This is a wretched policy; you are certainly discouraging this interest which is helping to build us up." But when it is simply proposed to treat this kind of property as we do every other kind of property, there can be no soundness in the argument, that in so doing we are discouraging the progress of the miners with their work.

DELONG—NOURSE.

I have but a word more to offer. The sum of the whole matter, Mr. Chairman, is, that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) carefully includes all kinds of property, and the reason why the words "all possessory claims" are put in, is because of gentlemen like the gentleman on my right, (Mr. DeLong,) and others, having claimed that the possessory rights to these mines are not property, and that if that word "property" alone is used, they will not be subject to taxation under it. And that practically it might be a matter which would be likely to give trouble, without those words, is abundantly evidenced by the fact, that, under a similar provision adopted in the California Constitution, the mines have gone untaxed from that day to this. Although they have plenty of mines like ours, yet none, even of their quartz leads, are taxed. Now this amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby simply proposes to cover all sorts of property. It says: "property, possessory rights, and claims."

Some of the gentlemen on the other side come in here and ask that the mines be exempted from taxation altogether; but others, more reasonable in their demands, say they do not ask that. They say: "We are willing that the heavy mines shall be taxed, but we do ask you to exempt those which have a value under five dollars a foot." In regard to that, as I said before, although practically it is so small a matter that I do not care for it, yet it is a matter of principle, and would be of little practical benefit to anybody. If we are beaten in the matter of principle in the abstract, I should not object seriously to that, in the concrete. But why should not we add to that, that a claim to land out here in the sage-brush, worth not more than five dollars per acre, shall be exempted also from taxation? A man plows his little ditch around his land, after he clears off the sage-brush, plants his patch, and expects to make something by its cultivation; and if we should give him an inducement not to enter his land in the United States Land Office, and purchase it from the government, I do not know but we should be all the wealthier for keeping the money in the Territory. And why is it not just as reasonable that farming property shall be exempted so long as it has but little value, as that mining property should be, as long as that has but little value? I do not know how it would look to me on further deliberation, but it seems to me now that if it is only desired to levy taxes on property, I might be willing to incorporate a provision here that a given amount of property, of any and every kind, shall be exempted from taxation. I think possibly that might do. Then, if we exempt, say five hundred dollars, the man who has a hundred feet at five dollars a foot, in a mining claim, would be exempt. But on principle we cannot exempt one kind of property, unless we do another. I do not think I would object to making an exemption of a small amount of property, for if a man is poor he nevertheless pays his poll-taxes. It does not strike me now as being objectionable, but it does strike me that to exempt a small amount of a certain kind of property, and not of another kind, would be as objectionable, on principle, as it would be to exempt one kind of property entirely. My great hope is that this Constitution, in this respect as well as every other, will be founded on the broad principles of right and justice and equity, with just as little reference to how others may view our action as we can possibly feel justified in getting along with. I certainly think—I have just as much confidence in the people as that—that our chances with the people for the adoption of the Constitution, and I say it in all seriousness, will be far better if we make it right, if we make it just, if we make it equal in its bearing upon all interests, than if we do not. I think there will be a better chance, by far, if we do that, than there will be if we attempt to pander to the interests or the prejudices of any particular class. I do believe that the miners are not so selfish as their defenders on this floor would have us believe they are. I do believe that the miners, as a general rule, would not object, if you present the question nakedly: "Are you willing to pay taxes upon the cash value of your mines—not what a man may say he will give you, knowing that you would not sell for any price, but upon its market value—just as a horse is assessed which the owner would not sell perhaps for three times its value?" I think that the miners will be found just as willing as other men are to bear their share of the burdens, when the matter is fairly presented to them. They are willing to pay their just proportion, and no more, of taxes on their mining property.

MR. DELONG. I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman who spoke last, though I had not intended to say anything more on this subject. That gentleman, it seems to me, has reserved his sarcasms and his misrepresentations of the argument on our side to the close of the discussion, just before the vote is to be taken, and I do not feel, for one, that it is my duty, or my right, to allow the question to come to a vote now, misrepresented as I have undoubtedly been, by the remarks of the gentleman, without some reply. The gentleman from Washoe is exceedingly caustic in his argument. He is a good pleader, presenting his views in a reasonable and plausible manner.

MR. NOURSE (in his seat.) Thank you.

Mr. DELONG (proceeding.) But for some reason his judgment fails to perceive the point which we strenuously urge, or for some reason he is unwilling to present our arguments in their true light. Now it is not our argument that the individual who works in the Gould & Curry mine, or any other mine, or the man who owns no stock, will be injured by taxing the mines, and on that account be induced to vote against the Constitution, so as to avoid that taxation, because it is reasonable, as the gentleman urges, that if a man owns no property he has no tax to pay on property. That is not what the poor miners object to. Their objection is this: The mines are developed by a certain system. That system is, first, incorporation. In the first place, there is the formation of a company, and then that company is incorporated. The next step is, that the company levies assessments upon the individual members, and those members are induced to pay their assessments by the hope held out to them of the discovery of a remunerative mine. And those men find, as we have all found, to our bitter sorrow, who have engaged in the business, that in nine cases out of ten the enterprise fails to pay. And from day to day and week to week, as time rolls over this people and this land, we find it harder and harder to induce non-residents, or even resident share-holders, to pay their assessments on stock in the undeveloped mines. Add to that burden the burden of taxation, and many men still paying their money to develop the mines, still paying the reward of the laborer, who is worthy of his hire, will be induced to quit the business, and thus the field of labor will be contracted. There is where the objection of the poor man comes in. It is not the tax in itself, but its tendency to check the speculative feeling of the people, and make them less willing to adventure their money in this kind of enterprises, than they would be if we were to foster and encourage them.

Mr. FITCH. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question? Suppose the most desperate case that could be imagined, of a man prospecting for a mere hope. Suppose a man were working upon a ledge, running a tunnel, or sinking a shaft, with no signs whatever of its ever turning out to be of any value: do you suppose that in such a case, if a man were willing to expend a hundred thousand dollars in running his tunnel, or sinking his shaft, he would be deterred because there was to be a five-dollar tax imposed upon the mine, after the tunnel was run or the shaft was down?

Mr. DELONG. I understand all that, and I am going to deal in facts. Now in nine cases out of ten, men engage in prospecting not so much with the hope or expectation of being so fortunate as to discover a valuable mine, which will make their fortunes immediately, as with the hope of establishing the fact that a mine exists. If they can obtain such evidence of the existence of a mine as to cause their claim to be marketable, or valuable, they have obtained what they sought, and immediately their stock goes into the market. They sell some of it, holding on to the rest, and that is the way the business goes on. Now if you tax such a mine upon its market value, if you let the idea go out among the men who buy and sell stocks in these "wild-cat" claims—who deal in the thousands of mining claims which are bolstered up in that way, by men who are willing to take their chances—if you give out that all these mining claims in the market have got to pay taxes according to their market value, I tell you that nine out of ten of the men now engaged in the business will quit developing the mines. The man who now frequently invests a few spare dollars in "wild-cat" stocks, will quit dabbling in them.

And speaking of "wild-cat" mines—why, sir? every mine in this Territory was a "wild-cat", in the outset. The Gould & Curry was a "wild-cat" claim, and the Ophir, too. It is only by "wild-cat" that the country has been developed at all. Now the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) tries to throw a sarcasm upon the argument in relation to the non-productiveness of the mines. He asks, if they do not produce anything, how is the country to become great?

Mr. STURTEVANT. Did I understand the gentleman from Storey to say that the Ophir mine was a "wild-cat" claim?

Mr. DELONG. The Ophir mine was in the first place only surface diggings. It had a surface ledge, and when it was first discovered men did not think it was good for anything, and therefore it was "wild-cat." That was the first discovery of the famous Comstock lead. Around the location, on the immediate surface, the decomposed rock and earth had got mixed with silver and gold. They found at length a little of the decomposed quartz, which was rich in gold and silver, and that was the beginning of the discovery of what is now so famous as the Comstock lead.

My colleague (Mr. Tozer) spoke the truth when he said that the mines, with a few exceptions, did not pay. The gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) asks, if that is the case, why we should not fence the mines in, and keep men out of them. Had the gentleman lived in California as long as I have,—had he lived in a mining country, and learned the history of a mining community,—he would have learned an important fact. He would have learned this in California: that although that State has had the richest placer mines ever known in the history of the world, yet from her earliest history down to the present day the poorest class of men in California has been the miners. Notwithstanding the fostering care which the State has thrown around them, by never taxing them, and by allowing them the largest liberty of making their own rules and regulations, the miners of California have been and are now the poorest class of men within the borders of the State. And they will so continue to be, as long as California continues to be a mining country. Notwithstanding, sir, that the vast wealth acquired by the labors of the miners has poured in a constant stream out of that State, to enrich the world, a stream that has reached and gladdened the hearth-stone of perhaps every man in the United States of America, to a greater or less extent, and has expanded beyond our own land, spreading a rich tribute over all the fields and in all the cities of Europe; notwithstanding that every month has seen one, and often two, steamers sailing from San Francisco, from the year 1850 until now in 1864, laden with from one million to two millions of dollars in the precious metals, the results of the labors of this class of men, still they have themselves remained poor men; while the farmer, the manufacturer, the merchant, and men in every branch of trade have grown rich. Other men are now living in their fine houses along the coasts, on the banks of the rivers, and in the valleys of that State, while the miners are still delving and toiling. That is the history of every mining community, and that is the history of our community here, like the rest. It is true that in our community, individuals have made rapid fortunes by investing in the mines, and selling; but what man has ever made his fortune by buying and retaining mining stocks, except perhaps in a few of the dividend-paying mines? But the difficulty is in the cost of producing results. Why, sir, the Chollar mine has taken from its share-holders, from its organization down to the present time, forty-eight dollars a foot in assessments, and what has become of the money? The gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) complains here of the capitalists of San Francisco, and of California, and the capitalists abroad, who do nothing, he says, to build up the Territory. But who paid that forty-eight dollars a foot to develop the Chollar mine? The share-holders are principally residents of California. What has become of that money of theirs? It has been paid out to the operatives here. It has been paid to the farmer for the products he has taken to the city of Virginia, to feed the laboring men working in the Chollar mine. It has been paid to the mill-owners for crushing quartz; it has been paid to the teamster for hauling lumber; it has been paid to the laboring-man and the mechanic; it has been paid for improving the streets, and for erecting buildings. That money has been dispersed throughout the community, and although the mine has never paid a dollar, and has cost its owners forty-eight dollars a foot, yet it has enriched and gladdened the people and built up the community. And that is the history of nearly every non-paying mine. Notwithstanding that they are non-paying, and a heavy burden to their owners, yet they are the basis of the prosperity of our cities and the wealth of our people. That is our answer to the complaint in regard to foreign capitalists.

JOHNSON—DELONG.

Now these gentlemen in their arguments have entirely failed to meet one or two propositions, which were expressed in a plain and sensible manner by the gentleman from Churchill (Mr. Murdock.) They have not met the proposition advanced by me, and reiterated by him, that a mine is not property until it is discovered, and developed, and brought into existence as a remunerative mine. The gentleman who was last on the floor, (Mr. Nourse,) attempted to perpetrate some wit at the expense of my colleague (Mr. Chapin,) because of his comparison in regard to whalemen, but I insist that that comparison is a correct and, true one, and that it places this matter in a proper light. When the whaler leaves the dock, there is no doubt or question but that if you will, you may tax the rigging, and the ship, and its entire outfit, and the owners must pay it; but if you were to impose a tax upon the whaleman for the oil, because he has got a right to go and catch a whale if he can find it, men would say your-action was stupid and foolish. So here a man starts a tunnel or a shaft, hundreds of feet from where the mine is supposed to be, and he is willing to pay a tax on all the outfit he has, and after he has found a ledge there, if he ever can find it, he is willing to pay a tax on what he finds, as the whaleman is willing to be taxed after he has found a whale. But the whaleman would not be willing to be taxed for the whales which he may not find in the ocean, and the miner is not willing to be taxed for the ledge which may not exist. If it is there he will find it, and as soon as he can find the ledge, and take the precious metals from it, he is willing to be taxed on what he has found. I say he should not be taxed until then, any more than the whale and the oil are taxed until the whale is caught, and the oil introduced, and made property among men, that can be rendered available—that can be seen and used. But if the views of the gentleman from Washoe, more wise than all the rest of us, are correct, and we are incorrect, if indeed mines are property, then I say the gentleman has not met that proposition laid down by the gentleman from Churchill, in a plain but unanswerable manner, when he asks if they are property, then why should we employ any language in regard to them, in this fundamental law, more than to say that all property, both real and personal, shall be taxed in this State.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion here, as it embraces a proposition contained in my amendment? It is simply this, that this species of property is one which we are prohibited from taxing by the Enabling Act. We are prohibited from taxing it as property, because the fee is in the United States; but we are not prohibited if we provide for the taxation of possessory rights.

Mr. DELONG. I do not understand the Enabling Act to require such action. That Enabling Act, if it permits us to tax the mines at all, permits us to tax them as property, and not by any other name. We are prohibited from taxing the Government property, that is all. On the other hand, if you are prohibited from taxing the lands of the government by that Enabling Act, and these lands still remain the lands of the government, how could any language be put into the Constitution by which you could tax it in another way?

JOHNSON—DELONG—MASON.

[July 14.

Mr. JOHNSON. We have the right to tax the possessory claim of the individual.

Mr. DELONG. To tax the possessory claim of the individual? Well, I think I have heard the eloquent gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) argue, and I think I heard it argued, too, by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) that a possessory right is property. If so, it is covered by the original proposition, in this provision—that all property shall be taxed.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, Sir. The Organic Act says that all property of the government shall be exempt from taxation, and this amendment is to avoid the legal proposition involved in that language, and to render certain and distinct the language of our Constitution. We say that the possessory right or claim shall be taxed, and we say that, in order to prevent any cavil as to what we mean.

Mr. DELONG. Is a possessory claim property?

Mr. JOHNSON. It may be declared so, unless there be something inhibitory to prevent it. The Constitution of the State, or the law of the State, for certain purposes, may declare the possessory claim to be property—it may be so declared by the Legislature—but if the question involves a construction of the Enabling Act, and if the Enabling Act shall be construed as inhibiting it, unless it be specified in the Constitution itself that possessory claims shall be property, such claims cannot be taxed as property. We therefore propose to put such words into our Constitutional provision as shall define what we mean; that the right of the individual to the property of the United States—the possessory claim, or the right to hold and use such property—shall be taxed.

Mr. MASON. Does the Enabling Act inhibit the people of the State, or the Legislature of the State, from taxing its own people, or only from taxing the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it inhibits us either from taxing the people of the State, or the people of the United States, which is the same thing; nor that it inhibits us from taxing the property held by them. On the contrary, it provides that all property shall be taxed equally. And as to persons, we propose to authorize the Legislature to impose a personal, or poll-tax of four dollars a head.

Mr. MASON. But does it forbid the taxation of the property of the United States, though it may be held as property by the people of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. I take the position that we are not inhibited from taxing the property of the people of the United States, but the property owned by the United States cannot be taxed—that is, the property of the United States Government in the Territory of Nevada. The Enabling Act says that the property of the United States—not the property of the people of the United States, as individuals, but the property of the United States—shall not be taxed.

Mr. DELONG. The gentleman's explanation has reduced his side of the question to such a clear proposition that I can only say, to me it is as clear as mud.

Mr. JOHNSON. No doubt.

Mr. DELONG. He starts out by saying that this property, known as mining property, which he is so desirous of reaching, is property belonging to the United States. He says that the Enabling Act, under which we are framing our Constitution, prohibits us from taxing any property of the United States within our borders. Then, I ask him, where he gets the right to tax this property, and he says—"I want to tax the possessory claim to the property." Then I ask him, "What is that possessory claim? Is it property?" And he replies, "Yes, it is." Then I want to know, when the Constitution says all property, real and personal, shall be taxed equally, why that does not cover the whole ground, and he says it does not cover the whole ground. That is a proposition which I cannot see through.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did not the gentleman admit to-day, that according to this Enabling Act, under the proposition offered by his colleague, (Mr. Tozer), this species of property could not be taxed?

Mr. DELONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well; that is enough.

Mr. DELONG. Then my explanation comes in that, after all, you cannot tax it unless it is property. Even with the words "possessory rights" included you cannot tax it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then why does the gentleman object to the use of those words?

Mr. DELONG. I object, first, because that clause being in the Constitution makes it objectionable to the people, who do not all view it as I do; and secondly, I object to allowing the Legislature, proceeding under that mining clause, to tax that property, until we can go and have our views passed upon by the judiciary, which will require a year or more, and during all that time men, both here and abroad, would be discouraged on account of the idea that there is to be an onerous taxation of the mines. That would bear very heavily on the top of the heavy assessments which are made upon the shareholders. Those are my reasons. It is now a very late hour in the evening, and I have not time to travel over the whole ground, but I do insist upon this, that the mines are the property of the United States Government within our limits, and as such we have no right to tax them, because the Enabling Act says we shall not tax the property of the United States within our limits. Then on the other hand, if the gentleman from Ormsby asserts that a mining claim is property, I say that the language already used covers it, and it is not necessary to say any thing more. If it is not property then you have no right to tax it, and you ought not to put the clause in. These are my propositions, and I insist that they are correct; and I insist further that there is no good or valid objection in the world to the amendment of my colleague (Mr. Tozer) to strike out the words "including mines and mining property," except on this hypothesis.

NOURSE—DELONG—BROSNAN.

My friend from Churchill (Mr. Murdock) laid down a proposition which I think is unanswerable, namely: Why in the world should you engraft into the Constitution a requirement which within twelve months time every man in the community may become convinced is unwise; and yet, if you have put into your fundamental law, you cannot alter it as you could a mere act of the Legislature? If you put such a requirement in here, it is put in for all time, for it would require the lapse of years, and the cooperation of successive Legislatures, as well as of the people, to amend your Constitution so as to remove the provision, if it be found to operate badly. The gentleman from Churchill asks, why not leave this matter to the next Legislature, that Legislature which is to assemble under this Constitution, and which will be authorized and required to assess all the property that is to be assessed? Why are you not willing to do that? The only answer is, the supposition that the Legislature will be recreant to duty—that it will not do what you say is its bounden duty to do? Are we to presume that those who come here after us, to frame laws under the Constitution we are now making, are going to be unwise or dishonest? If so, let us do all the legislation that is necessary to be done in this Constitution, and then we need not have any Legislature. But if we have faith in them, if we think that wisdom will not die out with us, but that others will live hereafter who will know as much as we do, that there will be others fit to be legislators, possessing as much wisdom and as much honesty as we possess, let us leave them power to do something, and not incorporate it all into our Constitution, and thus tie their hands together.

Now I say that this proposition of the gentleman from Churchill has not been answered by any gentleman on this "cabbage-plot" side of the question. They insist that we must put in here that objectionable language, so as to aim a direct blow at the mining interest. It looks like a studied insult to those who represent that interest here. They do not say that the stock of the merchant shall be taxed, or that a man's house shall be taxed, or that a man's farm shall be taxed, but they say all these are included in the term property. They argue with one breath that the mine is property, and in the next breath tell us that the words "all property, real and personal," do not include a mine. If there is any consistency in that I fail to see it. It is either property or it is not property. If it is not property, you have not a right to tax it; and if it is property, then you take it in when you say that all property, both real and personal, shall be taxed. By that language you get all the property in the State. For, can the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) tell me, after reading all the learned commentators who have ever written on law, of any kind of property which is not real, nor personal?

Mr. NOURSE. I will tell the gentleman a term for that kind of property which is neither real nor personal; it is "chattel-real."

Mr. DELONG. But what constitutes a chattel-real? Blackstone includes it under the head of real property; it is one branch of real property. You may have a mountain of granite, for example, and that is real estate; but anything less than absolute ownership of that may be a chattel-real. If it is only a contingent interest in that mountain of granite—

Mr. BROSNAN. A lease, for instance; what would you call that?

Mr. DELONG. Is not that realty? If not, it is personalty, because all property is of two kinds, real or personal, and the plainest designation of the dividing line between the two kinds is, that real property is all kinds of property which in its nature is fixed and immovable. All property which is movable, which the owner can transport with him, or which can be led or driven away, is personal property. The division is simply between that which is movable and that which is immovable.

Mr. NOURSE. There is the term for years; is that moveable property?

Mr. DELONG. It is immovable property, and therefore real property, because it is an interest in that property which is immovable. It is a chattel-real, but that is only one branch of real property; that is all it is. Can the gentleman pretend to deny that? And now I ask the gentleman this question: Your Constitution says "All property, both real and personal, shall be taxed, including mines and mining property." Now if that does not include all kinds of property, why do you not also say "chattels real?"

Mr. NOURSE. I did not frame the provision, and I support the proposition of the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson,) because it meets that very difficulty. It provides for the taxation of that property, which, like a lease for a term of years, is neither the one nor the other—neither personalty nor realty—and it is so laid down by all the writers, Blackstone included. The gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) lays much stress upon the word "real." He says that is real property, which is in fact neither real property nor personal property. Suppose a piece of land to which I have the right of possession for a term of years, under a lease, belongs to the gentleman from Storey—that is real property owned by him, but the lease for several years which I may have is a chattel-real. Now my right to that land is just the same as the right of possession to a quartz ledge. It is neither real property nor personal property. It is not personal property, because I cannot transport it with me; it is not real property, because the United States owns the fee. It is mixed property; it is a chattel-real; it is a description of property which was not described in the old Constitution, and I want to have it described in this Constitution which we are framing.

DELONG—NOURSE.

Mr. DELONG. Then how singular it is that every State in the Union, including the State of California, and the United States Government itself, and even the proposed State of Nevada, according to the Constitution adopted by the Convention of last year, has deemed it sufficient to provide that "all property, both real and personal," shall be taxed! How strange it is that the State governments of all the States in the Union have proceeded through years past to levy a tax, and to collect it, upon all property, under a Constitutional provision, reciting only that all property, both real and personal, should be taxed! How singular it is that men who owned these interests, which the gentleman calls chattels real, have submitted to be taxed under such a Constitutional provision, and that the framers of this document, which constitutes the basis of our action, should have thought they could reach, with the terms "real and personal property," every kind and description of property, except the mines, and then put them in as the last thing that could be thought of or guessed at, that by any possible means, or by any conceivable dodge, could escape taxation, under this clause. We know that other States have had the same kinds of property that we have. We know they have the same interests in California. And yet, it is left for us, in this debate, to make this great discovery. And even here, until this evening no man has raised the question that every lease is not subject to taxation as real estate. Being an interest in real property it amounts to a realty. I do not propose to carry the argument further on this proposition. It is evident that the only idea with the gentleman who introduced this amendment, and certainly the only idea advanced, either by him or by the gentleman from Washoe—although the latter gentleman has made three arguments on the subject—the only reason given by the supporters of this amendment, why it should pass, until this moment, has been that it was necessary to catch the mines. It was never before intimated that in this country there existed a species of property called "chattels-real," which such a Constitutional provision would not reach. It is the first time that that argument has been advanced in favor of the passage of this amendment. I leave the Convention to judge how much strength there is in the assumption which the gentleman from Washoe makes, in order to escape from the argument of the gentleman from Churchill—the argument that, if the mines really are property, then if we sustain the amendment of my colleague (Mr. Tozer) we take that property in, and the balance of the section is altogether superfluous. Now that proposition is here, and cannot be escaped from. But if the gentleman does think there is some species of property known as chattels real, or some species of property known as mixed property, which is property partaking of both personalty and realty, and which is not reached by the language as it stands, then we will be willing to say, after striking out the words "mines and mining property," that you may insert "chattels real and mixed." You shall have an opportunity to cover that whole objection, if that is what you are trying to reach by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson). I will even consent to have it read, after striking out "mines and mining property," "all real, personal and mixed property, and chattels real shall be subject to taxation;" and if that covers all kinds of property you have got the mines in, if they are property, without the further amendment which you wish to make, and which looks to me like an invidious distinction, and an insult to the people we represent and the interests which we are standing here to defend.

Now the gentleman says it is easy enough for us to protect ourselves—that if the State has not the right to tax the mines the amendment will do no harm, because we can go to the Supreme Court and upset the whole thing. That is all very fine, of course; but I say this, that if it is right that the mines should be taxed as property, then unless you do tax them you cannot tax any other property. If the Legislature acts as infamously as you seem to think it will, then if the mines are property, and you put in a provision here that all property, all mixed property, and also all chattels-real, shall be subject to equal appraisement and taxation—if you put that in, and the Legislature that meets next year fails to do its duty, and does not provide that mining claims shall be taxed, then you can come to the Supreme Court and say—"May it please the Court, my client is a farmer; the Legislature has failed to do its whole duty; it has taxed my client's farm, and let the mines go free." And the Supreme Court will say that that is unconstitutional, for they must find, according to the gentleman's argument, that the mines are property, and inasmuch as all property must be taxed equally, therefore the mines should have been taxed, as well as your client's farm.

Mr. NOURSE. But that would set aside the whole tax for that year. In that way you compel us to set aside the tax levy of the whole State, for an entire year, for the purpose of getting this question settled; whereas, if it is left for you to bring the question before the Court, the only effect upon you is to relieve you from taxation, while the decision would leave the balance of the assessment to stand.

Mr. DELONG. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the whole assessment must stand or fall

Thursday,]

JOHNSON—DELONG.

[July 14.]

as an entirety, before the Supreme Court. The whole assessment is either constitutional or unconstitutional. If that is the point urged before the Supreme Court, and it is decided unconstitutional, for any reason, then the whole assessment for the whole State falls.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, no!

Mr. DELONG. Well, sir, I think so, certainly. The Legislature, we will say, have passed a Revenue Act, in which it is provided that all property within the limits of the State of Nevada shall be assessed at such a valuation, and that a tax of so much per cent. shall be levied upon it. Then they say that among the property so assessed, upon which that tax shall be levied, shall be included mines and mining property. Very well; the Assessor proceeds, in pursuance of his duty, to assess the mining claims; the miner refuses to pay the tax, and commences his suit, or resists the collection of the tax and the case is carried up, and decided by the Supreme Court. Now what do they decide? They decide not merely that the miner cannot be taxed, if that is the result of the litigation, but that the tax itself as a whole is unconstitutional, because it covers what you have no right to touch and could not tax—because it is assessed upon that which is not within the province of the Legislature to assess. It matters not who takes the question to the Supreme Court—whether it be the miner or the farmer. If the law is allowed to stand in part, it stands as a whole; or if it is made to fall in part, it falls as a whole. The decision must operate the same, and it makes no difference whether the farmer or the miner goes to the Supreme Court, for in either event the result must be the same. It does not destroy the effect of the law, if the farmer goes to the Supreme Court because the mines are not included, any more than it destroys the effect of the law if the miner goes there because the mines are included; it does not make a particle of difference. I insist that the decision, if the farmer should take the case up, would be quite as effectual and binding a decision as if the miner should take it up. In either case the decision would go to the entirety of the matter, and it would not stop with the effect of the law on the particular property in question, for that would leave a Revenue Act unjustly taxing other species of property, and it would, for the best of reasons in the world, have to be adjudged void as to other property. Otherwise it would leave property to be taxed without discrimination, and without regard to the amount which should be levied on other species of property, such as teams, farms and houses; and the Court would be bound to hold the whole statute to be either good or bad. If there has ever been any other decision I have not seen nor read it, and I do not know of it, although I may be in error in respect to that.

taxed. It is just as improper to designate mines and mining property in that way, as it would be to designate farming property only. We ought to say that all property shall be taxed alike, and when we have said that then we should leave it to the Courts to determine what is property—not only what is the property of my constituents, but also what is the property of yours. I do not care about following all the make-weight arguments of gentlemen who have come up here, and in the face of figures which they do not meet, and which they cannot dispute, assert that we are asking for a State Government under a Constitution by which our constituents will escape taxation. The gentlemen from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) says the mining community now fails to pay its fair share of the expenses; but that is not the case, and the figures show that the mining community does pay its full proportion. Out of twenty-five millions of dollars of assessable property in this Territory the miners now pay taxes on twenty-one millions. It is twenty-one millions of dollars against four millions of dollars. We only ask not to be discriminated against unjustly or unfairly.

Mr. JOHNSON. The difficulty is this: We do not say that you do not pay taxes on more property than we do, but that you desire to escape payment on a part of what you have. You pay on more property than we, because you have more, but you are not willing to pay on all you possess, whilst you insist that we must pay on all we have. Now if these words in my amendment do not cover all the property we own or hold, then I suggest that you supply the words that will. But at the same time we ask that the language shall be so framed as to embrace all the property you have, whether it be twenty-five millions or fifty millions.

Mr. DELONG. All the gentleman has said does not affect the proposition. We are not trying to avoid any tax which we now pay, and we are now paying taxes on twenty-one millions, while you are paying only on four millions. But you desire, if we go into a State Government, to increase our assessable property four-fold, while yours is not to be increased at all. You say to the community which pays taxes upon twenty-one millions of dollars, "You trouble the government more than we do for your protection; you go to the Courts more than we do, and you ought to increase your taxation." Our reply is, that we do not go into the Courts any more than we need to go there, and you have just as good a right to go there as we have. We do not desire to go into Court if we can get along without it. No man enjoys litigation for its own sake. We are troubled in regard to litigation it is true, but we are not asking for a State Government any more than you are. Who petitions Congress for it, or seeks for it? Is it the mining communities that are petitioning Congress? Have they ever asked Congress to pass an Enabling Act for the formation of a State Constitution? No, sir. It is the Federal Government itself which proposes it. Congress of its own accord passed that Enabling Act, and said to the people of this Territory, "We need in Congress the services of your representatives. We need members of Congress from other free States. We would like to set before the civilized world an example, and a lesson, and teach the nations of the earth this fact, that while all Europe is clamoring that the experiment of free government is a failure—that the United States of America, which have so long challenged the admiration of the world, is now decaying and toppling to ruin—we are able to show them that, so far from going down to ruin, so far from approaching the sunset of our glory and greatness, new States are actually being added to the Union, in the very midst of a war of rebellion more formidable than any century of time has ever before witnessed." It is not of our asking, but it is at the call of the government that we meet you here as equals. We say, take what we have got and tax it, under the same classification as you tax all other property, and we are willing to assume our share of the burdens, and step as a sister star into the constellation of the nation's glory, supporting as best we may the honors and the dignity of a State. That is our reply. We do not ask you to pay any more than we pay. We speak for twenty-one millions of property, and we say we are willing to be taxed on that—the same kind of property which you have. We ask in fairness and justice that those words which we say are words of pointed insult to the men of this country who own in the mines, shall be stricken from this fundamental law, and the whole matter left to the Legislature which is to be elected hereafter by the people.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. FITCH. I suppose that the debate on this subject is nearly exhausted. I think we might take a vote now, and report the article back to the Convention in Committee of the Whole. If it is left as an open question for another day, it may consume an indefinite amount of time in further discussion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the gentleman from Ormsby will withdraw his motion.

Mr. GIBSON. Very well, sir, I withdraw it. Mr. STURTEVANT. There is one matter to which I should like to call the attention of the Convention.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will suggest, with the gentleman's permission, that if the vote be taken now it is not a finality, for I intend to have the eyes and noses on my amendment. There is no necessity, therefore, for taking the vote to-night.

Mr. DELONG. I agreed to send word to my colleague, (Mr. Tozer,) when the vote was to be taken, but I will try to get some one to go for him.

Mr. GIBSON. He has my colleague (Mr. Kinhead) with him, so that it would be a tie anyhow.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is nothing to be gained by taking the vote at this late hour.

Mr. GIBSON. I renew my motion that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. FITCH. No, no! Let us report it back.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. "Let us have a vote."

The question was taken on Mr. Gibson's motion to rise and report progress, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. STURTEVANT. This question, Mr. Chairman, is not by any means a new question to me. It is something which I have been hearing talked about, more or less, the last four years, or nearly that length of time. The subject has been torn all to pieces in my presence, many and many a time, although it assumes, at present, a little different aspect from any in which I have ever before seen it, in consequence of the provisions of our Enabling Act. But the main question, by all appearances, is about the same thing. Now Congress has, by its act, enabled us to form a State Constitution, and we are here for that purpose. So far as I am concerned, I am here in part to represent the people of Washoe County. I am in no wise afraid but what I can speak just about what they mean. In the first place, that county asks that there shall be a State Government, provided they are not to be taxed to death in order to support it. The people of Washoe County are perfectly willing, if the mining community is willing to join with them, to answer to that appeal from the General Government, which has been so nobly set forth by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong.) But if the mining community are not willing to keep their end up, I do not think the people of Washoe County are willing to stand the whole burden themselves, nor even to stand their share of it, if you exempt altogether that portion of our property called the mines.

There has been a tremendous hob-bobble kicked up here [laughter] in regard to what constitutes a mine. Now, sir, we have some mines in Washoe County—not of much account, perhaps; but then we say very little about them. Now we also have confidence in the people, and we think they can pick out one man among them, (at least they can in Washoe,) with brains enough to judge of the difference between a hole in the ground and a mine; and I am satisfied that other counties have equally as elegant men, and as capable of judging of that difference. I do not assume the responsibility of saying whether a mine is property or is not. Whether it is or not is a legal question, and that "lets me out." [Laughter.] I am perfectly willing to leave that to the legal fraternity, though, I am happy to say, that I do not hear with their ears, nor see with their eyes. Now this thing of a mine being assessed ought to be a simple matter. It is not to be supposed that the assessor will go around among the mountains, and wherever he finds a man digging a hole, decide at once whether it is a mine or not, and assess it accordingly. He is supposed, in order to come to some definite conclusion, to have evidence of the facts, and to act in accordance with the oath of office which he takes.

It has also been asserted by my friend from the cow county of Churchhill, (Mr. Murock,) that if it had not been for the industry and perseverance of the prospectors, probably there would never have been any mines here at all. I perfectly agree with that view of it, but I ask who they were who first discovered the Ophir mine? The first mining of any consequence was at Gold Hill. A few days before that discovery, (perhaps gentlemen are not aware of that fact,) I happened to be there—therefore what I say is good evidence. [Laughter.] The notorious Ophir mine, I believe, was first found by Mr. Comstock and Mr. Manuel Penrod, a rancher. Mr. Penrod has owned also quite heavy interests in different mines in the Territory, although I believe that gentleman himself nevertheless favors the idea of the mines helping to support the Government. Now there has been a good deal said here also, very erroneously, I believe, about these “cabbage patches,” and the rich men who own the “cabbage patches.” My own experience and observation is, that what little they do make, when they make anything by their cabbages, they lay out in the mines, and notwithstanding that, they are willing to be taxed on their mining property as well as on their cabbage property. I think I am safe in saying, too, that there are just as heavy owners of mines in Washoe County as there are in Storey County, and I do not know but more so; and I am pleased to say that they are all perfectly willing to pay taxes on their property. There is one question here—I refer to this idea of sustaining the General Government—which has been very ably and eloquently presented. Gentlemen have sifted the whole thing down to a patriotic idea, but I am sorry to say that they are, in my opinion, less patriotic in the way of helping to support a State Government than they should be.

Now, in my opinion, this whole question stands precisely like this: If you are willing to have a State Government, it is all right, provided you will come and help us to sustain it; if you are not willing to do that, by the way of allowing the mines to be taxed, just say so, and engraft it here into this article, and that effectually kills the instrument. That is my idea of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose, in conformity with the rules, the first vote will be on the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer.) I will make the point of order that this is the first question.

Mr. DELONG. I understand the ruling of the Chair to be, that a motion to amend takes preference of a motion to strike out.

Mr. NOURSE. That is, when it is a motion to strike out the whole section.

Mr. DELONG. The motion to strike out is subordinate to a motion to perfect the language to be stricken out. I submit that a motion to strike out, and add, is perfecting the section, while a motion to strike out, and not to add, is not to perfect but to destroy it. Therefore the question comes first on the motion of the gentleman from Ormsby.

Mr. NOURSE. The gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) is more nearly correct than is usual for him. The amendment of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) is a motion to strike out only two or three words. The gentleman would be exactly correct if the motion had been to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. DELONG. If I am not mistaken, the question has been stated a dozen times to-day on the amendment of the gentlemen from Ormsby. The first question was on the amendment of my colleague, and upon that the gentleman from Ormsby moved to amend by substituting his amendment.

Mr. WARWICK. When I took the floor, my attention was called distinctly to the fact that the question before the House was on the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby, and I spoke to that question. So did the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) and every other member, from the moment I entered the Convention up to this time, has been specially addressing himself to the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am indifferent as to which amendment is to be first determined, but to preserve that uniformity of proceeding which has characterized this Convention hitherto, I think the point of order should be held to be well taken. It matters not to what the remarks of gentlemen have been addressed; I do not think that can weigh aught, for the debate has taken a very wide range, as is allowable in Committee of the Whole, where gentlemen are expected and permitted to address themselves to the whole subject matter, with a wider latitude than is desirable in the Convention proper. I need go no further than the speech of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong,) himself, to show that the debate has had as much to do with the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Tozer) as it has with mine. But that has nothing to do with the question. It is one merely of parliamentary usage, under our rules, and I repeat that the position I take now is in conformity with the previous ruling of the Chair. The vote should be first taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, as that proposed to strike out but a part of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The former ruling has been that when a motion was made to strike out, the Convention had a right to perfect the language before taking the vote on striking it out.

Mr. JOHNSON. Suppose my amendment prevails, how stands the amendment of the gentleman from Storey? There is no language left to strike out, as he proposes to strike out, and his amendment falls of itself. There can be no vote upon it.

DELONG—WARWICK—FITCH—NOURSE—BANKS—DUNNE.

[July 15.

Mr. DELONG. None would be necessary. The action of the Convention does away with his motion. That is always the effect of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold, according to the former ruling, that the vote must first be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Tozer). The Chair now so decides, adhering strictly to the former ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DELONG. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I will state as the ground of my appeal, that an amendment to an amendment must be put first.

Mr. WARWICK. Suppose both an amendment and a substitute were offered, would the Chair still entertain a motion to amend? It has been repeatedly ruled in this Convention that there can be only an amendment to an amendment. I think the question must be put on the amendment to the amendment before you can put it on the amendment.

The question was taken, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? Upon a division, the vote was—ayes, 13; noes, 14. So the decision of the Chair was not sustained.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment proposed by Mr. Johnson, and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 11; noes, 18. So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was next taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Tozer, to strike out the words "including mines and mining property," and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 17; noes, 10. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the committee rise, report the article back to the house as amended, and recommend its passage.

Mr. NOURSE. I have an amendment which I should like an opportunity to offer, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion.

Mr. FITCH. I shall not withdraw it, because the gentleman can offer his amendment in the Convention, by way of special instructions.

The question was taken on Mr. Fitch's motion that the committee rise and report, and it was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

[The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair,]

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article X, had made an amendment thereto, and had instructed him to report the same to the Convention and ask the concurrence of the Convention in the amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. I move that the Convention now adjourn.

Mr. DELONG. I hope we shall first agree to adopt the report of the committee.

Mr. BANKS. Oh, I hope not, now.

The question was taken on Mr. Nourse's motion, and upon a division, it was agreed to—ayes, 17; noes, not counted.

Accordingly, at 11 eleven o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

ELEVENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 15, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, A. M., and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and all the members responded except the following: Messrs. Ball, Crawford, Frizzell, Haines, Jones, Morse, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Wellington, and Williams. Present, 28; absent, 11.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. RILEY.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DUNNE. I rise to another question of privilege. I regret very much to do so, or to intrude these questions upon the Convention, and I would not, were it not that I wish to preserve my consistency, at least upon the main point which I have at heart. It is only for that reason that I beg to be allowed again to call this question up. Yesterday morning I desired to explain myself in regard to a report made in one of the newspapers, and the position I held in regard to the effect on the Constitution and its adoption which that report would be likely to have, if it were allowed to stand uncorrected. I stated that the effect of that report would be prejudicial to the Union party, as it would show that action had been taken by the members of the Union party tending to proscribe those who were opposed to them in political faith; and incidentally I called the attention of the friends of the Constitution to the fact that such a report would also interfere with the adoption of the Constitution. I said that while I was opposed to the adoption of the Constitution, I did not wish to aid in defeating it by unfair means; but I did not take the position, and I do not wish it to go before the people of my county, that I have weakened on the proposition I started in on. I do not wish it to go before the people of my county that I am afraid that a certain influence will be used to defeat the Constitution, when I say only that I am unwilling to defeat it by unfair means. I did not wish to make that correction in order that the Constitution might have a better chance of adoption, but I wished to make it simply that the action of the Union party might be properly represented, and that capital should not be made, out of a misrepresentation, against the Union party. And as to the defeat of the Constitution, I simply said I did not wish to have any unfair argument used against it, nor any unfair influence exerted. I never did gain anything yet by attempting to correct a newspaper report, and my experience has been such that I think I will never interfere with the reporters again, unless it is a case of life and death.

TAXATION.

The PRESIDENT stated the question before the Convention to be the Article on Taxation, with the amendment, reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Friday.]

NOURSE—DELONG—CROSMAN—TOZER—FITCH.

[July 15.]

Mr. NOURSE. I do not know that it is in order, but I should like to have this matter, which we discussed so fully last night, passed by for another day. There is enough other work to keep us busy until we have time to consult together a little, and see if we cannot get it into a shape that it will not create a division in the Convention. Let the asperities of feeling created by debate pass away, and the members have time to think about it and talk it over. If it is in order, I move that the consideration of the report be postponed till to-morrow.

Mr. DELONG. I hope the gentlemen will permit the report as made to be adopted, and then let it go on file. Then any amendment will after that be in order. I want to test the sense of the Convention on adopting the report; it may be that after striking out those words it will not be adopted. I think we had better adopt the report and place the article on file, subject to such other amendments, under instructions, as gentlemen may see fit to offer hereafter.

Mr. CROSMAN. I am not in favor at this time of adopting the report, therefore I shall move to recommit it to the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT. If there be any amendments they can be considered when the question of the report of the Committee is considered; that is, unless the Convention determine otherwise. The question now before the Convention is on the motion of the gentleman from Washoe, which is in effect to make the article a special order for to-morrow.

Mr. NOURSE. I will move that it be made the special order for ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. CROSMAN. I have no particular objection to its taking that course, but I would ask for information, what would be the effect of the adoption of the report of the Committee?

The PRESIDENT. If the report is adopted there can be no further action except upon recommitment with instructions, but pending the adoption of the report, amendments would be in order.

Mr. CROSMAN. How large a vote would it require, after the adoption of the report, to throw it back into the Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT. Only a majority.

Mr. DELONG. If it be the pleasure of the Convention to make this matter a special order for a future day, I trust the injustice will not be done my county of making that day to-morrow, when so many of our delegation have got to leave and go home. If we are going to make it a special order at all I hope we shall set it for Monday at two o'clock, when perhaps the Convention will be full. I will move as an amendment to make it the special order for Monday at two o'clock, P. M.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will second the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. My desire is that the greatest number of members possible shall be present when the subject is acted upon.

Mr. TOZER. I do not know as the Convention will be any better prepared to-morrow, or at any other time, to take action than it is at present. Certainly we have devoted a large portion of our time to this discussion. The whole of yesterday, to say nothing of the previous occasion when it was taken up, was devoted to a full, fair, and thorough consideration of the question, and I really hope that the action of the Convention this morning will not be such as to throw us on the back track, so that we shall have to go over the whole work again. I think we had better adopt the report of the Committee at this time, and then let it come up on the file, like other business.

Mr. FITCH. I concur with the view of my colleague (Mr. Tozer). I hope that we shall take this matter up, and finish it now, one way or another. We have spent a day and a half in the debate, and have pretty much exhausted the subject, and now if we postpone the question we shall have all that to go over again.

Mr. NOURSE. There is one argument I suppose in favor of taking it up at once, and that is, that so far as relates to some of the members, perhaps it is known how they are now, but we do not know how it will be with them to-morrow, judging from former developments. The reason why it seems to me desirable that a little time should be taken to look over the matter, and consult about it, is that it is certainly a matter on which no little feeling has been developed by the discussion. I do not myself desire, and I presume no one here does desire, to gain a mere triumph. I suppose what we all want is to make a Constitution which shall be just in itself, and at the same time not containing within itself any elements of weakness. We desire, if possible, to avoid creating prejudice against any of the provisions which we have been discussing. In the course of our discussion—and it has certainly been a heated discussion—members may have been led into undue earnestness, and may have manifested perhaps some pride of opinion; and it would be better, I think, to take a little time to talk it over, and try to get a general understanding, so as to meet if possible on a common ground.

Mr. DELONG. I desire to accomplish the same end as the gentleman from Washoe does, but I think we had better adopt the report of the committee now. We can afterwards, if desired, make any further amendments, either by striking out or inserting.

Mr. NOURSE. I expect that those words, "including mines and mining property," will be stricken out, and I do not wish to retain them at all, but I do not want the section left as it would then stand. I do not desire to adopt any language which will be offensive, by alluding to a special class of property by name, but at the same time I do not want to leave the language in such a way that it will not cover that class of property. As to this postponement, I have not much legislative experience, and I am disposed to fear the Greeks bringing gifts. But if it is proposed merely to let it go on file to-day, and take no further action, I have no objection.

Mr. DELONG. That is my understanding, and it is what I am willing to agree to, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. FITCH. In view of the fact that if we postpone the question for a day or two it may be possible for gentlemen of a high order of ability to advance arguments which will induce men to change their minds about it, possibly it may be well to lay the matter over; but I, for one, however, confess that I do not really think that kind of ability exists here to a great extent.

Mr. BANKS. I recognize the propriety of some little delay in this matter; but I think the time proposed is too long, and I therefore move that it be postponed until two o'clock to-day. That gives all the time requisite, if members only desire the time to confer together, and think the matter over. I do not like the section as it is now, and therefore I do not wish to vote to adopt the report of the committee. If we put it over till two o'clock, with the amendments still pending, we shall have all the opportunity to amend that is necessary, and will avoid the seeming inconsistency of adopting a thing which we do not fully approve.

Mr. CHAPIN. My friend from Humboldt has spoken nearly the words I was going to utter myself. We worked until a very late hour last night, and most of us did not rise early this morning, and hence we have had little opportunity for consultation. The recess at noon to-day will give us an opportunity for that. Let us defer the matter till the afternoon, and I think we can then come to a vote, and without any more long speeches. I trust; while if we defer it to a later period we run a great hazard on that score. Let us take it up this afternoon and dispose of it. I think we all want it agreed upon, and fixed, in such a manner as to be just as satisfactory to all as it is possible to make it. I confess that I would like to see some amendments, but I think we can come to an agreement that will be quite satisfactory, if we postpone it till this afternoon.

Mr. NOURSE. I will agree to that.

Mr. COLLINS. For one I am anxious to see this question brought to a final decision, as soon as is consistent with its full examination and understanding by the members of the Convention, but the importance of the subject I think is such that we should not be deterred from its full investigation by any intimations in regard to either long or short speeches. The gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) has intimated that much feeling exists on the subject. I do not see why there should be much feeling. I certainly should be a very unreasonable being if I insisted on this Convention adopting precisely my views, and I think that any man must be a very inconsistent and a very unfair and unjust man, who should expect that this Convention is to adopt his peculiar views entirely. Here we are with a diversity of sentiment and opinion, and the only way we can possibly arrive at anything like a fair understanding and a just conclusion, is to pour into the common treasury of thought our several views and opinions, and then we shall have the basis of a just compromise. I have my own especial views, but I do not feel disposed to insist that this Convention shall adopt them; and let the Convention adopt whatever views it may, it will not lessen my earnestness for the organization of a State Government.

Our minds are now fresh with the arguments which have just been urged on every side—for this is more than a two-sided question; it is more than a triangular question, for there are four or five, and possibly six different sets of opinions. The questions discussed are familiar to all of us, and at what time shall we be better prepared to act upon them than now? When I say "now," however, I mean at some time to-day. I second most heartily the views of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks,) and I second his motion that the subject be postponed until this afternoon at two o'clock, in order that we may then have a final disposition of the question, before it goes on the general file. I do hope that gentlemen will not entertain any strong feelings here, as though they thought that the interests of their constituents were going to be sacrificed if any particular views shall be adopted or rejected.

Mr. DELONG. Whether we make it two o'clock to-day, or any other time, the question first will be on concurring in the report of the committee. Let us do that now, and then make it the special order for any time you please hereafter. Then any new proposition which gentlemen choose to make can be discussed. But why are not we as ready as we can be? Why are not we prepared now?

Mr. COLLINS. I am not prepared to concur in that report, and I think many others are not who sympathize with me. I would like an opportunity for a conference as to what terms we may agree upon.

Mr. DELONG. We can do that afterwards—after we concur in the report.

Mr. COLLINS. I prefer doing it before we concur.

[Mr. Fitch in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I am indifferent in regard to the postponement, but I only propose to speak to this distinctive matter, that if we consider the report at this time and adopt it, then the only way, as I understand it, in which an amendment can be reached, will be by recommitment to the Committee of the Whole, or to a special committee, with special instructions. The adoption of the report, therefore, involves the necessity of such recommitment, if it is to be amended. Now we know, as remarked by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) that there are more than two sides of the question; that there are, in fact, four or five different views to be taken of it; and the probabilities are that before final action, these different views will be in some way brought to the notice of the Convention. Now my view is this, that to obviate the necessity of the matter being recommitted to the Committee of the Whole, or otherwise, it would be better that the consideration of the report should be reserved until the time when we propose to dispose of it finally. If that time be this morning, let us dispose of the whole matter now; but if it is the sense of the Convention to defer it to a future day, or to a future hour of the day, let us not proceed further with the consideration of the report now, entailing labor on the officers of the Convention that would be needless. We can, in the way I suggest, save time and trouble, that is all. I do not propose to postpone it a minute later. I am entirely indifferent whether it be considered this morning, or at a future hour of the day, or at a future day; but if it is to be considered this morning, then I say let us go on and finish up the whole matter, and not consider it in part and leave it unfinished.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

Mr. TOZER. I only urged the adoption, or the consideration of the report of the committee, at this time, because I thought it would be economy of time to take that course. When this matter comes up again, I greatly fear the whole range of argument will have to be gone over again, and a great deal more time consumed on the question; whereas, if the report of the committee is adopted, and the matter placed on the general file, as is done with other business, it then comes up in the regular routine of action adopted by the Convention. Then, sir, any amendments desired to be proposed can be put in the shape of special instructions and referred to the Committee of the Whole, or to a special committee of three or more, and in that way the matter will be greatly simplified, and the final disposition of the subject accelerated. Certainly the action of the Convention, or of the Committee of the Whole, has not gone to show that there is any disposition on the part of the majority to stifle discussion, or to do anything unfair in the premises.

Mr. FITCH. If we concur in the report of the Committee of the Whole, will amendments then be in order?

The PRESIDENT. I cannot see how they would be in order. My impression is that if you concur in the report you would have to reconsider before you could amend, but I would like to hear the opinions of members upon that point.

Mr. FITCH. If we could not amend after concurring in the report, we could before concurring in it.

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir; I think so.

Mr. FITCH. Then we can amend the report now.

The PRESIDENT. First the question is upon concurring in the report, and that proposition is open for amendment.

Mr. FITCH. Is it open then for amendment now?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir; but not however until the question of postponement is decided. When that is disposed of, if the Convention shall have refused to postpone, it will be open for amendment.

Mr. FITCH. I suggest that we had better adopt the plan of proposing the amendments before concurring in the report of the Committee. That at once throws the amendments into the Convention and saves the necessity of referring to a committee, with special instructions to make amendments.

Mr. CROSMAN. I think that has been the previous ruling of the Chair, and it was for that reason that I asked the question as to whether the report could be amended before it was adopted. For that reason I think it had better be postponed.

The PRESIDENT. I cannot call to my recollection the occasion when this question was decided, or when the question has ever before been raised in this Convention.

Mr. BANKS. There is one very serious objection to the adoption of the report of the Committee, and I would not further consume the time of the Convention but that I foresee that difficulty. If we adopt the report, and then make it a special order for a future time, we are liable to place ourselves in a position where trouble may ensue. We have adopted Jefferson's Manual, and under those rules, which we must adhere to unless they are suspended by a two-thirds vote, I find that a subject is not to be committed for the matter or body thereof. That is of course a rule which governs us, and the attention of the Chair should be called to it. The Chair will be compelled to rule, if a general amendment is offered, that the Article should not be committed, for undoubtedly he must rule according to the Manual which we have adopted as our guide. Suppose some gentleman raises this point, when you propose to recommit the Article to a special committee with instructions to amend in respect to the matter or the body of the Article—it will then require a two-thirds vote in order to pursue that course, although it is the course we have been pursuing, to amend a report by recommitment for the matter or the body thereof.

The PRESIDENT. I think the rule has been strictly adhered to. I think the practice has invariably been to recommit, with instructions to amend a certain portion and not the whole bill.

Mr. BANKS. The meaning of the Manual will be further elucidated by reading the paragraph following that to which I have referred:

"When an essential provision has been omitted, rather than erase the bill, and render it suspicious, they add a clause on a separate paper, engrossed, and called a rider, which is read and put to the question three times."

It must not be in the matter or body thereof that the amendment is moved, but of the nature of a proviso or explanation. I have called attention to this rule, lest some gentleman, on the third reading, should raise this point. The Article is now in a shape in which we can postpone it to the time we desire to consider it, and then we can take it up, and amend it freely, without any restriction. I hope the motion to postpone until two o'clock will prevail, leaving it in the precise position it occupies now.

Friday.]

NOURSE—DELONG—HAWLEY—FITCH.

Mr. NOURSE. I will accept the amendment to postpone it until two o'clock.

The PRESIDENT. I understand the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) to move its postponement until Monday.

Mr. DELONG. I withdraw that motion.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone the subject until two o'clock to-day, and it was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer this resolution :

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourn, on Saturday, July 16th, it adjourn until Monday, July 18th, at two o'clock, P. M."

I do not know what position other members may take, or whether they will be able to attend in sufficient numbers on Monday morning to go on with the business, but I have received a notice from one of my clients which renders my absence absolutely necessary. I merely offer the resolution, and if it be adopted very well, and if not I shall be compelled to ask leave of absence from the Convention.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

MUNICIPAL AND OTHER CORPORATIONS.

Mr. FITCH. I understand the report on Article VIII is in rather a peculiar position. It was ordered engrossed, and then retained by the Secretary at the request of the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick.)

The PRESIDENT. The position of that article is anomalous certainly, but it seems to me that it must be regarded as on the general file, since it has been ordered engrossed by the Convention.

The Convention proceeded to the consideration of Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations, the question being on the the third reading of the article.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. FITCH. I have an amendment to offer to Section 9, but I understand it is proposed to offer an amendment to Section 6. I would inquire whether it would be proper to wait for the disposition of the amendment to Section 6—whether the article is to be considered section by section?

The PRESIDENT. It has been reported from the Committee of the Whole, and the report adopted. The only way to amend it is by recommitting it with instructions.

Mr. FITCH. I move, then, to recommit the section to a special committee, with instructions to strike out all after the word " purposes " in the fifth line of the printed copy, and insert the following :

" Provided, That the State may provide for the payment of the interest upon bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars for a length of time not exceeding twenty years, at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad across the Sierra Nevada Mountains; but no law to provide for the payment of interest as aforesaid shall be effective unless sanctioned by a vote of the people."

The question was stated on the adoption of the instructions.

Mr. FITCH. I will detain the Convention but a very few minutes. I have offered the amendment on the hypothesis that it is the desire of a majority of this Convention to extend aid, or rather to permit the Legislature of this State to extend aid, to a railroad which shall connect this State with the navigable waters of California. The pending proposition, or rather the section as it would stand if it were not amended, would provide that the State may issue its own bonds to such railroad company, to be expended at the rate of fifty thousand dollars per mile, as the road progresses in this State: but this amendment proposes, not to give the bonds of the State, but to pay the interest on the bonds of the company for twenty years, in place of giving the principal sum outright. Now, as was explained in a manner satisfactory to me at least, by the President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, two days ago in this Convention, the incorporation of a section into the Constitution stating that the Legislature may issue bonds to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, to the company which should first complete a railroad to the State line, would be an injury rather than a benefit, and would retard rather than advance the construction of the only road that ever can, or that is ever likely to connect this State with the navigable waters of California. It was stated then—and it is a matter which came very properly before the Convention—that if we say we will give that amount to the railroad which shall first reach the State line, we thereby imply that there is more than one road likely to fulfil such condition—that there are two or more such roads which are striving to reach the State line—and that such statement to a certain extent would throw a doubt upon the resources, a doubt upon the intentions, and a doubt upon the capacity of the managers of the only road which can reach the State line. To the extent that we do that, we do something towards depreciating the credit of the bonds of that company in foreign countries, in the Atlantic States, and in those money markets where men have but limited means of information in regard to such subjects as the intentions and the resources of railroad companies in these mountains; and just to that extent we place a leverage in the hands of parties who are interested in retarding that road, and thereby assist them

Friday.]

DE LONG—FITCH.

to do so. Now, as every member is probably aware, there are parties who are certainly deeply interested in retarding the progress of any road to be built, running from the navigable waters of California to the State line. There are three expensive toll-roads connecting us at present with California, and their profits would be decreased and almost utterly destroyed by the completion of the railroad. There are three or four stage lines, carrying passengers on those routes, and their profits would be decreased, and their business almost destroyed by the railroad. Then there are two steamship lines running between San Francisco and New York, and their profits and business are decreased, necessarily, with every mile of railroad which is constructed between the Missouri and Sacramento rivers. Now, sir, I do not wish to censure those institutions. Their interests are at stake, and we all know that it is human nature to regard one's individual interests before the general good of the community. But while I do not wish to charge evil purposes—a want of patriotism, for instance—upon those who are attempting to retard the construction of the railroad between here and the navigable waters of California, while I do not desire to censure those interested for striving to retard it by every means in their power—and one great means to that end would certainly be to injure the credit of the Central Pacific Railroad Company;—yet, at the same time, I do not wish to allow the interests of those corporations or associations or individuals to so far come in conflict with the general good as to retard the progress of that great work which is so very material to the necessities, and so dear to the hearts of this people. So much for that.

Now upon the hypothesis that it is the intention of this Convention to allow the Legislature to aid a road to be built between the navigable waters of California and the State line, I lay it down as an incontrovertible proposition that that aid should be extended, if at all, to the only road that can be built. Gentlemen have said—I do not know as it has been said in the Convention, but it has outside—that there is another road likely to be built, and that we are doing injustice to that other road, by mentioning the name of the Central Pacific Railroad. I do not think that careful investigation will justify such a conclusion. What is the progress of the Central Pacific road? The company have completed their road out of Sacramento a distance of thirty-one miles, and have the iron and rolling stock for a considerable distance further, while this alleged competing line have only graded a few miles out of Folsom, and there is no company even organized to build any road on that route farther than Placerville. There is not only no thorough survey, but no organization, I repeat, to build any road this side of Placerville; and I do not think there ever will be, for the reason that they would be required, under the general statute of California, to pay in ten per cent. upon the capital required for the construction of the road, before the organization of the company, and that would come to nearly or quite a million of dollars—an amount which men would probably not care to invest in a most unprofitable game of brag.

Now, sir, without debating the question as to whether or not the aid of the General Government to the Central Pacific Railroad was wisely extended, or as to whether or not they have selected the best route for their road, we know this fact, that the Government of the United States has given to the Central Pacific Railroad Company forty-eight thousand dollars a mile, that the county of San Francisco has voted six hundred thousand dollars, that the county of Placer has given two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, that the county of Sacramento has given three hundred thousand dollars, and that the State of California has not only given ten thousand dollars per mile, but in addition to that gives the interest, at seven per cent. per annum, upon the company's bonds for a million and a half of dollars. That is the aid which has already been extended and secured to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Now I put it to the common sense of the Convention if there is any other road which is likely to secure such aid, or if there is any other road which will probably secure as large an amount of aid from the United States Government. It is not likely, I think all will concede, that anything of the kind will be secured to any other road. This road has the start, and it is not likely that any other road will ever be built across the mountains, and if we extend any aid at all to any road, it follows of course that we should give it to the only road which is likely to be built, for we should offer our aid where it will be likely to be of some value. If we do not do that, at least we should not take such action as will imply that there is more than one road, and to that extent, in foreign markets, in New York, in London, in Paris, wherever they have to go to negotiate their bonds, raise a doubt against them, because these capitalists have not the means of investigation, and if they find a statement in the organic law of our State implying a doubt in regard to that road, it would certainly be apt to injure the credit of the road.

Now I have some statistics here which I wish to present very briefly.

Mr. DE LONG. Oh, do not draw them, for heaven's sake.

Mr. FITCH. I will not detain the Convention long. It is, we are informed, one hundred and forty-four miles to the State line from Sacramento, and where the mountains are practically crossed, near O'Neill's, on the Truckee, is forty miles from the summit. The cost of construction of these one hundred and forty-four miles of railroad is estimated at about fourteen millions of dollars. The company about to build that road has aid already granted as follows:—

Friday.]

BROSNAN—FITCH—NOURSE—GIBSON.

By United States Government $48,000 per mile, 144 miles.....	$6,912,000
By State of California $10,000 per mile, 144 miles.....	1,440,000
By counties of San Francisco, Sacramento and Placerville.....	1,150,000
Making a total of.....	$9,502,000

That is the total amount which has already been donated to this road which is to cost four-teen millions of dollars for its construction to that point. Now, how is it proposed to raise the other five millions?

Mr. BROSNAN. Is not the aid of the United States Government $96,000 per mile?

Mr. FITCH. No, sir; it is $48,000 per mile.

Mr. NOURSE. Is not the company authorized to make a first mortgage for $48,000 a mile, which, as a lien, comes in ahead of the government bonds?

Mr. FITCH. That is what I am coming to. The government aid of $48,000 per mile is almost a donation, as it is only a second mortgage. Now the company is authorized to raise the money to complete the road by its first mortgage to the amount of $48,000 per mile, permitted by the General Government, and that, if negotiated, will suffice to complete the road. Then the State of California proposes to pay the interest upon a million and a half of those first mortgage bonds, and if the State of Nevada concludes to pay the interest on three millions more, that will leave the company only to pay the interest upon five hundred thousand, and it will enable them to devote the entire earnings of the road to its construction beyond or to that line. Therefore it is deemed best for the State of Nevada to give the interest upon those three millions to this road, rather than issue her own bonds; and the company will then have the means of giving all the bonds, save half a million, a market value which they otherwise would not have, because the interest would be paid by corporations, or by States, rather, outside of the railroad company itself; and in that way we would be extending very great and effectual aid to the company, the calculation being that after it has reached the State line, the appropriation by Congress of $32,000 per mile, added to the earnings of the road, and the power to make the first mortgage bonds, will be sufficient to construct the road without further aid, because then they will have passed the most expensive portion of the route.

Now, Mr. President, whether this road can be built to the State line without the aid of Nevada or not, whether the aid of Nevada would expedite the progress of the road or not, whether this two hundred and ten thousand dollars of interest a year can ever be afforded by the people or not, whether it would be policy for the State to give that amount or not, and whether the tax would be onerous and oppressive to the people or not, are all matters which I do not propose to discuss, because I do not regard them as being properly before this Convention for its consideration. We have no power to grant the aid to the road. We cannot, or certainly should not say that the Legislature shall give it, or that the people shall indorse the action of the Legislature. We certainly have no right whatever to say that. But it is simply proposed in this section as it will be amended, if my motion prevails, to give the people of Nevada a right to extend that aid—to give the people the power to grant it, through the Legislature, if they wish to do it, and if the people indorse it. We simply give them the power to lend that aid. We throw the door open, and allow them to give it if the people demand it, but not otherwise.

I should be possessed of a great deal more of arrogance and conceit than I should care to entertain, or to have attributed to me, if I should say, in my representative capacity here, that the people of Nevada never shall grant any aid to the Pacific Railroad, whether they want to or not. I think we have no legitimate power to say that. I think it is more proper for us to say that the Legislature may do what they deem best for the people. For us to shut the door, and lock it in their faces; for us to say "Whether the people are willing or not, we say you shall not grant any aid to the Pacific Railroad"—I would regard as a high piece of presumption. Sir, without referring to what my action as a citizen might be, without saying whether I would or would not indorse the action of the Legislature extending this aid—for that is not the question—I hold my duty to be to allow the people either to aid it or not to aid it, as they shall decide when the question shall be presented. There our duty ceases, and anything beyond that in my judgment would be sheer arrogance.

With all due respect to the members of this Convention, I think that the members of the State Legislatures of 1865, 1867, or 1869, those who will come after us, those who will represent, better than we possibly can, the condition of Nevada at that period of time—five, seven, or it may be ten years hence—will be far better able to judge than we are now of the capacity of this people to endure that amount of taxation. And, sir, they will be better able to judge of the will of the people to give that amount, and the necessity of granting it, than we can possibly be. I say, then, that since they can better judge of these questions than we can, we should leave them to their judgment, and I am in favor of this amendment, giving to them an opportunity to exercise their judgment. It is still restricted by the Constitution. Instead of an absolute donation of three millions, we ask only that the Legislature shall be permitted to give the interest on three millions for twenty years.

Mr. GIBSON. That would amount to four millions and two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. NOURSE. That is just what it amounts to.

Mr. FITCH. Gentlemen can calculate it at their leisure. Instead of giving both principal and interest, we propose to pay the interest only; always provided that the Legislature grant it, and the people indorse their action. And I say it will be arrogating an amount of wisdom, as to the power, and the energy, and the resources of our State in the future, which we do not possess, and which, not being prophets, nor the sons of prophets, we cannot possess, to say that the people shall not grant this aid, whether they are able or not, or willing or not.

Before taking my seat, as I shall not speak again on this subject, I desire to say in conclusion that I express here my belief, my expectation, and my hope that the Legislature, being so empowered, will grant, either all of this aid, or such portion of it as may be necessary at the time, to help along the Pacific Railroad, and that the people will indorse their action, and be able to do so without any serious inconvenience to themselves; and that by so doing they will materially aid the railroad. I should be very sorry, in the future of Nevada, when this great road shall be finished across the mountains, when the traveler shall start from Sacramento in the morning, dine at Reese River, breakfast at Salt Lake, and watch the lengthening shadows of that day as they decline along the valley of the Platte—I should be sorry, I say, after the consummation of this mighty work, which will be the boast of the nineteenth century, the pride and glory of the age, a work grander than the aqueducts of Rome, more stupendous than the pyramids of Egypt, more wonderful than the Sphinx in the desert sands. I should be sorry if it should be said in that future time that such a work had been commenced and carried through at a time when the nation was struggling in the throes of a civil war, and that in the community which was most benefited by it, the community which was raised from a state of comparative indigence to wealth by that road, the community which had been increased so greatly in power, wealth and potency by that road, their representatives assembled to frame a fundamental law, to frame a law which was to last from generation to generation, a law which was to guide the legislation of the State throughout future ages, had absolutely declared that the people of Nevada, whether they wished it or not, should not be allowed to aid that road in the hour of its direst necessity.

Mr. DELONG. Since I voted before on this proposition I have had some new light, afforded by the appearance on this floor of his excellency, ex-Governor Stanford of California, the President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. I took pleasure in asking various questions of that gentleman, in order to satisfy my own mind, and the minds of others, upon the various questions involved in this matter, and I have come to exactly this conclusion, that as a whole people, or as a State, we stand by the side of the Pacific Railroad enterprise like a “wild cat” mine by the side of the Gould and Curry. According to Governor Stanford's own showing, if we give this aid it would not help the road a pin, yet he would like it, because it would be an indorsement of the enterprise, that is all. While it would distress us terribly to raise the amount, it would scarcely help the railroad at all. That is evident by the gentleman's own admissions.

Why, sir, let us look at the present condition of this enterprise. They have built thirty-one miles of their road, and got it in running order, and every thing paid for; and yet in order to accomplish that they have not received a dollar from the national or State government, or of the county aid, or any thing else. They have done all that out of their own contributions. Very well. They have got thirty-one out of the one hundred and forty-four miles already built, and paid for, and on which they are entitled to execute a first mortgage of thirty-six thousand dollars per mile, and that they are about to execute. Then the United States Government comes in with its aid of thirty-six thousand dollars per mile.

Mr. NOURSE. Forty-eight thousand dollars per mile.

Mr. DELONG. That is the road in the mountains.

Mr. NOURSE. But the lower figure is only for seven miles, and then the mountain part begins.

Mr. DELONG. I may be astray to the extent of a few figures, but an approximation is all I care about. Suppose it is thirty-six thousand dollars per mile which they are entitled to from the General Government, with the right to execute a first mortgage for the same amount, then I make it ninety-eight thousand dollars per mile which they are entitled to raise by their own first mortgage, and the United States aid. That gives them a fund of three millions and thirty-eight thousand dollars, according to my figures. They have got that amount then as assets in hand, now, and when they get that one hundred and forty-four miles done which is to be finished, that will bring them in over eleven millions more. Then you have got to add to all that the two hundred and fifty thousand from Placer county, the three hundred thousand from Sacramento County, and the six hundred, or four hundred thousand, as the case may be, from San Francisco, besides the one million four hundred and forty thousand dollars which the State of California gives at the rate of ten thousand dollars a mile. That is what they have to look to, with thirty-one miles of the road already completed, and then, in addition, they have from the General Government a grant of twelve thousand eight hundred acres of land per mile, making for the one hundred and forty-four miles, one million eight hundred and forty-three thousand two hundred acres.

Mr. FITCH. One of the gentleman's most important items—the interest paid by California—is not a donation; it is based upon the hypothesis that they will negotiate the bonds. It aids them simply in negotiating the first mortgage, and amounts to nothing if they do not negotiate the bonds.

DELONG—FITCH—EARL—NOURSE.

[July 15.

Mr. DELONG. But Governor Stanford, the President, says they will negotiate them.

Mr. FITCH. California then pays the interest on a million and a half of the first mortgage bonds as soon as that amount is negotiated, and no more.

Mr. DELONG. Governor Stanford said they intended to negotiate those bonds now. At any rate, they have only one hundred and thirteen miles of road to build, which is estimated to cost them fourteen millions of dollars to build, and they show assets of sixteen millions of dollars, according to their own statements—two millions more than they want, if Governor Stanford's estimates are properly stated. As I make it, these are the assets, upon which they have to rely, resulting from the munificent aid which has already been granted to this enterprise:

California State aid, $10,000 per mile, 144 miles,	$1,440,000
California interest, 7 per cent., twenty years,	1,500,000
First mortgage, $48,000 per mile,	6,912,000
United States Government bonds, $48,000 per mile,	6,912,000
San Francisco subscription,	600,000
Sacramento subscription,	300,000
Placer subscription,	250,000
12,800 acres land per mile, 144 miles, 1,843,200 acres, say at $2 per acre,	3,686,400
Total amount of aid given,	$21,600,400

Now, in the face of all this, how can they ask poor, little, old, sage-brush Nevada to burden herself by giving more aid, when it would be of little or no practical benefit to the road?

Mr. FITCH. Those sixteen millions, which the gentleman said were available assets for building the road, are all the time based upon the hypothesis that the company will negotiate the bonds of the Government at par, and that is not by any means probable.

Mr. DELONG. Does the gentleman think there will be any difficulty in negotiating them, when the road thus far is entirely paid for, and they are secured by the Government and by the State? If so, he troubles himself about them more than Governor Stanford does, who does not doubt but that they will be eagerly grabbed at by anybody who has the money.

Now while we anxiously desire to see this road speeding forward, yet, when we consider the magnificent support it has already obtained, the munificent donations which it has received, and when you hear the President of that road, on this floor, make a recount of the resources it has, so abundant that it appears we could not add strength to the enterprise even by giving everything we have—perfectly plethoric with fullness, and wealth, and happiness—when we hear that, and think that we are a little sage-brush, young people, actually hesitating about starting out on our march as a State Government, for fear we cannot pay the ordinary expenses of that State Government from year to year, although we do all we can to economise and reduce the expenses—when we consider our position, and feel and know that this aid will not do that road any appreciable good, or hurry its construction perhaps a single week, I say we should hesitate a long time before we place on ourselves, on our constituents, on those who are to come after us, this mortgage on their resources to the extent of two hundred and ten thousand dollars a year, to be paid out of the pockets of the people, in addition to the burdens of the State Government.

Mr. EARL. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question? Does this amendment propose that we shall place this mortgage on the people, or simply that we shall give the Legislature power to do so, if in their judgment it is expedient?

Mr. DELONG. It is no matter whether we do it or the Legislature does it; it will be a mortgage on the people in the end if we adopt this provision.

Mr. EARL. No, sir; they will have to let the people pass upon it first.

Mr. NOURSE. But it will be insisted that the people did pass upon it when the Constitution was adopted.

Mr. DELONG. I understand that. I understand that we cannot adopt a Constitution until it is ratified by the people. And I understand that when they have ratified it, all the provisions of the Constitution, either requiring or empowering the Legislature to grant this aid, will become operative. I understand all that. But I say if our action means anything, it means this: We frame a Constitution by which we permit the people to do this thing with a hope and expectation that they will do it, and I say we should hesitate before we do anything or say anything about it in this fundamental law. And I say that whatever we do is done as an entirety, and when it is submitted to the people, you compel men to vote for what they may regard as an unwelcome tax, or to vote against the Constitution in its entirety. I say that this debt of over four millions of dollars which we have to contract to give this aid, in the way that gentlemen propose to give it, is more than the people can bear, or are warranted in assuming. Why, the President of the railroad company told us at the very first, that he had rather we would not give them anything than to give them what we offered—which was fifty thousand dollars per mile for every mile of railroad built within our limits, to the extent of three millions of dollars—couple it with the condition which we had imposed. Now did you ever before hear of a railroad company so independent, and so rich, that they could come upon the floor of a Constitutional Convention like this, assembled in this chamber, and tell that body "We would rather you would keep your three millions of dollars than to give it to us coupled with the conditions upon which we have to take it—the condition that we shall be the first to get here, and that if we are not the first it shall be given to another road." Imagine the condition of a railroad which refuses three millions of dollars, with the same trifling consideration, with as much nonchalance, as a man might refuse to take a drink with a gentleman who should ask him. I say it is preposterous. And I say if the aid be granted that is asked for, it will not hasten the completion of the road one day, while it will burden our State with an immense debt. And if you incorporate that provision into your Constitution, it will call for and receive at the hands of the people more earnest opposition to the entire instrument, than any other clause which you have yet incorporated, or which you can possibly think of putting into it. Poor men, struggling here to build up a State in the sand, in the bosom of the desert, cannot consent to lend or give to a railroad company which has more money now than it needs. They will not voluntarily tax themselves to the extent of four millions of dollars in order to donate it freely to that railroad company.

WARWICK—DELONG—EARL.

Mr. WARWICK. Mr. President, I am really astonished that a gentleman usually so ingenious and honest in the declaration of his opinions should have arrayed before this Convention an accumulation of figures which only serve to mystify rather than clear the subject, and should have made declarations on the floor of this Convention altogether calculated to mislead. The gentleman from Storey did in his wisdom put the question to the President of the Pacific Railroad the other day whether he would or would not rather have the State aid under certain conditions, and what was his reply? He stated that if it were granted under certain conditions it would be but slight advantage to the railroad company, but under no conditions did he undertake to repudiate the aid if we should see fit to grant it.

Mr. DELONG. Did he not say that he would rather not have any thing than to have it in the shape in which we offered it, or coupled with that condition?

Mr. WARWICK. I did not so understand him.

Mr. EARL. The answer of Governor Stanford was to this effect, that if we were to give the aid in that form it would intimate that there was another road, a practicable road, in progress—that it would seem from the manner in which we proposed to give that aid, to show that there was a doubt, as to the practicability, or that there was some competition. But he did not say that they would refuse the gift.

Mr. WARWICK. Satisfied with the explanation of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Earl.) I shall proceed. The President of the Pacific Railroad Company did not address himself to the subject as though we were a legislative body, deciding the matter for the people of Nevada, nor as though a bill making the appropriation were before the Convention, and we were about to declare whether we would or would not grant the aid which some of us desire that the people, and the people only, shall decide upon. Gentlemen speak here as though we were about to put our hands into our pockets and scatter three millions of dollars to the winds, without any sort of recompense or return for it. Now what is the real situation of the question before the Convention? Here we are, isolated from the great channels and marts of commerce, deriving all our supplies from the borders of another State, by means of routes of communication troublesome and expensive, paying a tax of three millions and a half of dollars since the commencement of our existence as a Territory for the single article of freights alone, and over half a million of dollars in that time for passages. Now does any gentleman deny the proposition that such a line of communication as we are desiring to aid would naturally lessen the cost of everything we consume, and would at the same time not merely reduce but almost actually abrogate and destroy the time required in crossing these mountains? At the present time a day and a half or two days is required, at the least, for that transit, and by this line of communication it would be reduced to less than half a day. Now is it not an axiom with the American people that time is money? Do we not work day and night in extracting the gold and silver from our mines? Why then should we submit, if we can avoid it, to lose our time in crossing the mountains when we can have a line of communication which will materially lessen that time so much, to say nothing of the decreased expense? I say the amount of the aid which we propose to lend—not if we say so, but if the majority of the people of the State shall endorse our action, or the action which we empower our Legislature to take—will be returned to the State in less than two years.

The bonds of the State, it is proposed, shall run for twenty years. Now, sir, are we to be looking always at the present time, at the present condition of our State, and never at its future development? Are we not to look at and learn a lesson from what has been done during the past four years, during which time towns and cities have sprung up, and millions of dollars have been invested by capitalists within our limits? Are we still to look at the present and never at the past or the future? I am astonished that the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) coming from California, a gentleman whose whole life has been spent in new communities, should speak like one who has just been awakened from a Rip Van Winkle sleep, and expects to find every thing unchanged, just as it was when he sunk into his long slumber fifty years ago. It is to him, and to such as he, that we should naturally look to advance our progress, to help on these great works of improvement, to assist in the development of this State in the future. Of all the stupendous works contemplated in the present age, not one so commends itself to the judgment, to the wisdom, and to the kindly consideration of statesmen, whose handiwork will be engraven upon this Constitution, which if it shall be adopted I hope shall live when we are dust and ashes, as this Pacific Railroad enterprise.

I say there is no work which should commend itself more to our kindly consideration than that which is now under consideration in this body. And why? Is it alone, or chiefly for the aggrandizement of our sister State, lying beyond our western border? Not at all. I contend that it is for our own benefit, for our own aggrandizement. We are asked to invest a small amount of capital, but with the hope of a speedy return. Suppose a man living upon a plain has a spring of water in the mountain behind his house? It is a long and weary task to travel up that mountain, and bear down from day to day the little supply of water, and nature would soon be exhausted by that labor. But by the appliances of science he conducts the stream to his door, where he, and his children, and his flocks and herds, are daily refreshed, with but little cost and an immense saving of time and labor. So it is with us. It is not that we are giving this road anything. We say merely that we will lend our credit, if the people indorse the proposition. And I wish that in treating this question, the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) would be ingenuous enough to admit that we are not legislating here, nor imposing any new burden upon the people. We are doing nothing of the kind. We only leave the door open so that the people in their wisdom may decide hereafter whether it is better for them or not that this great national work shall be constructed.

In what situation do we leave this matter, provided we strike this article from the Constitution altogether? It will then require a vote of two-thirds of the Legislature, and the lapse of two years of time, in order to amend the Constitution, so as to place in it the very provision which we are now seeking to incorporate—for I presume we shall adopt that which is the usual and customary rule in regard to amendments of the Constitution. We propose only to insert a provision here, not that the people shall lend this aid, but that they may do so if they find that their interests require it. I do sincerely hope that every gentleman, in addressing himself to this question, will be honest and ingenuous enough not to assert that we are about to inflict on the people a heavy burden, when all we do is merely to leave the pathway open. We do not wish to say that this little body of thirty-nine, who have come up here to represent the people of this Territory in Convention, possess all the wisdom and intelligence not only that there is in the Territory now, but that may exist within our limits perhaps for thirty years to come. We do not wish it to go out that this little body of thirty-nine men have said, "We knew that it was a great national work, and that you needed it because your mines could not be opened without it; we knew that the moment it should be constructed your transportation would be cheaper, and all the expenses of living would be cheaper, and all the kindly harmonizing influences and associations of your childhood would be brought nearer to you, yet we refused to allow you to aid it." We do not wish to say, "We shut the doors in your faces, when you demanded that we should let you in."

I appeal to gentlemen here, if there is any yearning in their hearts towards the old homes away towards the rising sun, where they sported and played in childhood's happy hours, not to do this thing. Do we never hope to see those homes again? We have already incorporated into our Constitution a provision which prevents the Supreme Judge from leaving the State, for a longer period than ninety days at a time, though he holds his office for ten years, and although that may seem to be a stern, yet it is a wise provision. But, sir, though the excitement and rush of business and pleasure may obscure and dim the feeling for a time, the old and hallowed affections never die, even in the hardest hearts, and they may one day lead us back toward our childhood's homes. Here, then, is a means by which in a week or a fortnight we can be enabled to see those homes again. But aside from all this sentiment is the practical consideration of the development of the State itself.

Mr. DELONG. I want to ask the gentleman from Lander a question. Is he a candidate for Supreme Judge?

Mr. WARWICK. No, sir; but I hope one day to assist in elevating the gentleman from Storey to that honorable position. I know his aspirations, and I know the wisdom, the judgment, the intelligence, and the sagacity of the gentlemen, which I think entitle him to that high position, provided it is not filled by a better man.

Mr. DELONG. I accept the amendment.

Mr. WARWICK. All I ask of the opponents of this measure is, that in addressing themselves to its consideration they will strictly confine themselves to the fact—not that it is a burden which we are imposing upon the people, but that we simply leave it to the people to decide, and do not undertake to decide for them, in advance, upon a measure of such great and general importance.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish merely to explain how I shall vote, and to give my reasons. You, Mr. President, and every other member of the former Convention, will recollect that I was a warm advocate in that Convention of the Pacific Railroad, and of an appropriation for it. But, like the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong,) I have changed my views, and for the same reasons, namely, the statements of the President of that road. Mr. Stanford stated the cost of the road, I believe at about fourteen millions of dollars.

The PRESIDENT. I think it was fifteen or twenty millions.

Friday,]

KENNEDY—NOURSE—FITCH—DELONG.

[July 15.]

Mr. KENNEDY. Well; fifteen or twenty millions. I considered that that was the cost from the commencement to the completion of the road. Now what are the assets of the company? My figures are rather larger than those of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong.)

We have first, an appropriation from the State of California of ten thousand dollars per mile, for the one hundred and forty-four miles, which is the estimated distance, amounting to one million, four hundred and forty thousand dollars. Then I estimate the guarantee, or rather the payment by the State of California, of seven per cent. on one million and a half of the company's bonds, for twenty years, at one million, five hundred thousand dollars, though it will really come to more than that. Then they have their first mortgage of forty-eight thousand dollars per mile, making six millions, nine hundred and twelve thousand dollars. Then there are Government bonds, amounting to six millions, nine hundred and twelve thousand dollars more. Then there are the appropriation by San Francisco of six hundred thousand dollars, of Placer County, two hundred and fifty thousand, and of Sacramento County, three hundred thousand dollars. And lastly, there is the appropriation by Congress of twelve thousand, eight hundred acres of land per mile, which, I think, at a very low estimate, will certainly be worth two dollars per acre, making a total for the land of three millions, six hundred and eighty six thousand four hundred dollars. That makes altogether an aggregate amount of twenty-one millions, six hundred thousand, and four hundred dollars, besides which they have, according to their own statement, thirty-one miles of railroad already made and paid for. Now if the entire road is going to cost but fourteen millions or sixteen millions, there are from five to seven millions over; and even if you put it at twenty millions, then there are more than a million and a half of dollars already, over and above the cost, to go back into the pockets of the stockholders. They have all this land from the Government; they have the road for thirty-one miles, completed and paid for, and the rolling stock for a distance of sixty miles paid for.

Mr. NOURSE (in his seat.) And the iron.

Mr. KENNEDY. And the iron, and everything ready for the track. Now I do say that a railroad which is in circumstances like these should not receive aid from this Territory to the amount of three millions of dollars, when every one knows that the real question in our coming canvass will be whether we shall or shall not be able to pay the expenses of a State Government.

Mr. FITCH. Is the gentlemen under the impression that with that showing, if it could be made, the Legislature would be foolish enough to grant the aid?

Mr. DeLONG. They might be as foolish as that, if we are.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now a word as to this idea of leaving it to the Legislature. I know, young as I am, something of human nature, and I know that a powerful corporation, like this Pacific Railroad Company, will be able to influence the Legislature, and the people, sufficiently to carry the appropriation through. Now that I suppose all men are corrupt—I say nothing of the kind—but they will use their money to employ persons to place their views before the Legislature, and before the people, in such a light as to make it appear that it would be favorable to the interests of the State to make this appropriation, and there will be no person employed on the other side whose business it will be to show the fallacy of their arguments. I contend that we are capable and competent to judge of this matter, and I believe that we should decide it.

Not only that, but I know the sentiments of my constituents on this subject. I know that during the campaign upon the old Constitution this provision was strongly opposed. Although it was guarded by requiring a vote of two-thirds of the Legislature, and a subsequent vote of the people, yet it was considered that by placing it there it was made absolutely certain that the money would be appropriated. I know that every calculation of expenditures made by the opponents of the former Constitution, was made to include the three hundred thousand dollars of interest on the three millions of bonds that was to be paid every year. That was the calculation in our county, and the people believed it was a correct calculation. Now I am willing to take the chance of my constituents indorsing my action in opposing any appropriation whatever for the Pacific Railroad under the circumstances as they exist.

And here is another point: suppose we authorize the appropriation under all these guards and restrictions—the appropriation cannot be made before the Legislature meets, in January next; they certainly will have to take time to think over and discuss the matter before voting upon it, and the action of the Legislature cannot be ratified by the people, (allowing the shortest possible time,) under one year from now. But Governor Stanford said that he had no doubt the railroad would be completed inside of three years without the aid of Nevada, and he could not give any estimate of how much that aid would hasten the time of its completion, even if the appropriation were made in the manner he wished to have it made.

Mr. DeLONG. Did not he say he did not know that it would shorten the time any?

Mr. KENNEDY. No; I think he said he did not know how much it would shorten the time. Now if the road will be completed without our aid, or if our aid will only hasten its completion a few months, I say let us wait for it those few months, rather than saddle upon the people of the State a tax of two hundred and ten thousand dollars every year. If our bonds were worth the three millions—if they would actually aid the company to the extent of three millions of dollars—then perhaps I might be willing to lend that aid, because it would assist the road materially; but, as has been stated, under the most favorable circumstances that we can hope for, our bonds to the amount of three millions will probably not be worth more than one million in the market, and so we would have to pay three millions of dollars, while the company would receive the benefit of only one million, from our liberality. I am not willing to sacrifice the people's money in that way.

COLLINS.

Now, sir, my action in voting on the various measures coming before the Convention will be guided in some degree by policy. Whenever I can vote for an article or section in the Constitution in a form which, although it may not exactly suit me, I believe will satisfy the great mass of the people, without violating any principle, I am willing to put it in that shape, and I believe that the striking out of this whole clause in regard to an appropriation to the Pacific Railroad will meet the views of my constituents, when I can make such a showing as this in regard to it, and upon such good authority. I have no doubt of that whatever.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not think the question now before this body is whether the Legislature shall give three millions, or one million, nor whether it shall loan the credit of the State to the extent of three millions, or one million. The question is not whether or not the Pacific Railroad will be constructed under its present management, so as to strike the line of this Territory or State within three years. The question is not whether the views Governor Stanford expressed on this floor the other day—which certainly did not make a very favorable impression in behalf of his claim on the State—were correct or not, nor whether this road will be completed in one, two or three years, nor whether the present management will be able to carry it through with the aid which Congress has given, and the donations and loans which have been made by the State, and the several county organizations of California. But the real question before us is this: we propose here to frame a Constitution which shall tie up the State, and its Legislature, in regard to the amount of debt which may be contracted in the future, and in doing that shall we say, with our present knowledge of the subject, that the people, and the Legislature of the State, shall not, after calm deliberation, after examining all the facts which the Legislature may have before it, three years, or ten years from this time, even if that Legislature shall come to the deliberate conclusion, in view of all the circumstances then existing, that the State ought to give this railroad company some assistance, be permitted to take that action? It is proposed that we shall not allow them to submit the question to the people—that the people shall not be allowed to have a vote upon the question. I ask is this body disposed to tie up in that manner that legislative body which is to represent the people in the future, in regard to a great national work like this? I think gentlemen do not comprehend the advantages, the importance, and the grandeur of this great national work. We who live here at the base of the mountains can get our lumber, our timber, and all our freights, brought to us at a small expense compared with what they cost the people who live in Humboldt and Lander counties, and hence we may not feel the pressure as they do; but if I were a delegate from Lander County or Humboldt County I should certainly press upon the Convention the importance of this question to my constituents, with all the energy and all the skill I could command.

For one I have very little faith in the opinion of Gov. Stanford, or of the members of the Board of Managers, or even of the Civil Engineer who made up the estimates in regard to the cost and the time necessary to build this railroad. I have been too long interested in and acquainted with railroad movements to have much confidence in anybody's estimates. I rely rather upon practical results, as they are developed day by day. How often are we deceived by similar estimates of mining operations. For instance, we have a tunnel of a certain distance to run, and an engineer estimates that it will cost such an amount and can be completed within say six months; but we find in practice, notwithstanding the most careful estimates, that both the time and the expense may be doubled and in some cases quadrupled. It has been found that works of this nature would take six years to complete, and cost two hundred thousand dollars, which but a few years ago were estimated upon at about six months time and ten thousand dollars. Why, sir, this very railroad company, even in getting as far as Newcastle, has met with untold obstacles. Instead of mere soil or gravel they have had to cut through beds of cement, and a kind of rock as hard as iron, upsetting all calculations of the engineers. Instead of costing thirty or forty cents per yard for excavation, it has cost them perhaps ten dollars. If they have encountered such obstacles even on the level plains of the Sacramento Valley, where one would suppose that the earth could have been shoveled up and removed without the use of a pick, what may not they encounter in the mountains? In crossing those plains, only eight or ten inches down, they struck a hard pan which nothing but the pick could break up, and they had to spread over acres and acres of land on either side of the road in order to get material to make their embankments. That was something which had never entered into the calculations of the engineers. And as they cross the Sierra Nevada Mountains, which are practically a terra incognita to the engineers and the management, how do we know but they will find the hardest of rocks, perhaps of the iron stone, and trap types? How do we know but that instead of thirty cents it will cost them perhaps thirty dollars per yard for excavations?

Friday.]

COLLINS—DELONG.

[July 15.]

I remember once driving a shaft, on which an engineer had estimated the cost at three dollars and a half per foot, but after I had driven it down about fourteen feet it cost me thirty-six dollars a foot. That exemplifies the uncertainty of an engineer's statements, whenever he goes down further than the eye can reach.

Now I remember when Mr. Crocker, who is now a contractor, but was then one of the managers of this railroad company, came to Virginia, and endeavored to interest me and others in this movement. He wanted me to take the books, and obtain subscriptions to the stock of the company in Virginia. I told him that where money was loaned out at from five to ten per cent. per month it was useless to attempt it, but he was hopeful about it and thought we could raise a million of money there. He went away not with the money in his pocket, but "with a flea in his ear." But what I was going to say in that connection is, that at that time the calculation was that this road would reach a point within fifty miles of Virginia inside of three years. I asked him "Have not you some doubt though about getting the money?" "Oh no," he said, "we can raise all the money we want in California." Now is Gov. Stanford's judgment any better at this time than Mr. Crocker's was then? He thought the road would reach within 50 miles of Virginia in three years, but two and a half years have elapsed, and the road has only been completed thirty-one miles from the starting-point, notwithstanding all the subsidies which have been granted by the United States, and California, from which they have not yet been able to obtain any money.

The Government of the United States has been very liberal, but its liberality does not build the road. It will donate forty-eight thousand dollars per mile from a point eight miles this side of Sacramento, and sixteen thousand dollars per mile from Sacramento to that point, so that when gentlemen reckon the forty-eight thousand dollars per mile of the first mortgage which they are authorized to make, and the forty-eight thousand dollars per mile of the aid from the United States government to follow that, they must count it from that point, eight miles this side of Sacramento. Now I ask, taking this forty-eight thousand dollars per mile of the first mortgage bonds, and the government subsidy for an equal amount of bonds, how much money do you suppose they will realize? And remember that the road must be built with money, not with bonds. They have not yet been able to realize anything. And why? Why, sir, the distinguished gentlemen from Sacramento, Gov. Stanford, in conversation with me last night, said if they had had money sufficient the road would have been completed to-day a distance of sixty miles, instead of only thirty-one miles, and I have no doubt of it. I should not be surprised if the present courageous and hopeful management of this gigantic enterprise should fall beneath its pressure, and that it should pass into other hands to secure its completion.

They may find their means incompetent to carry the road through. It may exhaust all their resources, and the expense be so much greater than they had ever anticipated that they will be forced to give it up. That has been the history of many railroads. The first party undertaking the railroad lost money by it. Then the second party came in and lost by it, and then the third party went in, and perhaps by the very "skin of his teeth," was able to weather the cape, and complete the road. And we should not be surprised if this enterprise should have the same history. I tell you, Mr. President, it is a gigantic undertaking, which may well appal the hearts of the most energetic and hopeful. I am pleased to find that there are men in our country so hopeful and so energetic that they are willing to risk their all in prosecuting this work. They are laying a foundation, which will have the effect of encouraging others to invest their all in it, and then a third party may come in, and ultimately this great and grand work of all the centuries shall be completed. And, Mr. President, just in proportion as the expense and the difficulties to be surmounted threaten to delay that great work, just in that proportion do I, for one, feel bound to encourage everybody to enter into it, and give it aid. We are too poor to delay the work. If we make no provision for it here the day may come when this Constitution will have to be altered by reason of the pressure upon the State for the want of that railroad, so that the people may give their votes to aid in its construction. I hope therefore that we shall not undertake to pronounce to-day in regard to the future. I hope that we shall not decide that our knowledge is so great, that we are so wise, that our minds penetrate so deeply into the future, that we know more than those who are to come after us ever can know, and therefore we tie up their hands, and say that they shall not expend their own money for their own benefit, or for the benefit of the State. I ask gentlemen who propose to do this thing to pause and reflect. If you are going to make a prohibition, and that is the specific question before us, I ask you to pause ere you put down the brakes to arrest the momentum of the people in favor of this grand work of the future. Do not believe every enthusiastic man who comes before you, or whom you meet in the street, or who has an interest in the completion of this work, and thinks that it is going to be done in such or such a time, or at such or such an estimated cost. I told the Convention the other day that I thought it would take six or eight years at least to build the road, and now after all that has been said upon this subject, I really believe it will take ten very long years to bring that railroad here, with all the aid which the company can bring to bear in advancing it.

Mr. DELONG. Do I understand that my colleague believes so now?

Friday,]

COLLINS—EARL—KENNEDY—DELONG.

[July 15.

Mr. COLLINS. I believe so now. I have had, I think, as much experience in railroad matters as Mr. Stanford has. I know as well what has been the history of other railroads, and the difficulties which they have had to encounter and overcome. I know that whole armies of stockholders have lost their all by them, and that other armies following have been ruined also, and at last they have had to apply to State Legislatures to complete such works. I ask gentlemen, therefore, to pause ere they place their hands upon this work, or take such action that if the people in the future ever do want to take hold and complete the work, they will have to change our action of to-day to enable them to do it.

Mr. EARL. I am one of those who favored the clause leaving to the people, or rather to the Legislature, subject to the sanction of the people, the right to donate or to pay the interest on these bonds. The proposition of my colleague (Mr. Fitch) now is, that the interest only shall be paid by the State. The opposition to that proposition is certainly ingenious, and the facts and figures presented in opposition to it are certainly very ingeniously arrayed. If it would not be regarded as saying almost too much, I would say that it savors of toll road opposition; at all events, it looks to me so. It seems to me strange that the younger portion of our representation here should oppose a measure like this, and certainly their opposition is not in accordance with what we generally imagine to be the young America style.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will state right here that I do not know three gentlemen in California who have anything to do with this railroad one way or the other.

Mr. DELONG. I do not know of anybody who is opposed to the railroad unless it be the keepers of toll gates.

Mr. EARL. I think these gentlemen must have been talking with those parties then, very lately, and must have become impregnated with their sentiments. Now, sir, is this the only wise body which is ever to assemble in this legislative hall? That is the question. Are we to legislate in this instrument, and say that the people shall not do this, and that, and the other thing? I consider that we are here only to establish the landmarks. The Legislatures which are to succeed us can tell better in future times what the necessities of the State require, than we can tell now. I had no doubt that my friend from Minnesota (Mr. Nourse) would oppose this measure—no doubt of it at all. But, sir, this is a matter of great importance, and one that is not to be made light of. We propose only to leave it to the Legislature, if they please, to pay the interest on these bonds, or if they think that would be the wiser course, to let it alone. Whatever they may do about it will be all right. Cannot we trust to our future Legislatures? Will not they know what are the interests of the people better than we do? Suppose, as has been suggested by my colleague, (Mr. Collins,) the construction of the road is retarded, which is almost invariably the case in such enterprises—suppose after they reach a certain point they are compelled to abandon it for want of means. Will not the aid of the State then be an advantage? These are the facts before us for our consideration. I was glad to hear Governor Stanford express the sanguine hopes which he entertained. I say there is no good reason why we should not donate this amount, or at least leave the Legislature to donate it as we have proposed to do.

I am opposed to leaving it indefinite as to the road which is to receive the aid, from the fact that that would be raising a doubt as to the ability of this company to carry the work forward, and in that way it would be aiding the opposition to the road. We ought to take hold, if we do take hold at all, of one road. If there were two railroads in progress, both asking our aid, with equal advantages, which in point of fact is not the case, still I would say that the State should take hold of one, and not of both, because it is certain that only one road will ever be built. As I remarked the other day, I should not be willing to restrict the road to the expenditure of money within the State. I would go beyond Snow Tent to meet them, and aid them to reach the State line, and then the road will be a paying institution. From that point forward, with the aid they already have, the road will be built beyond any question. Once it gets that far, there will be help afforded within this State, by stock subscriptions. It would be demonstrated then that investments in the enterprise would be paying investments, and men with money would come forward liberally. Once the road reaches our State line I would consider it an accomplished fact, for then the great obstructions will all have been overcome.

Now, sir, in relation to this enormous sum of two hundred and ten thousand dollars a year which we would have to pay for interest, if the Legislature provides for the payment of the interest on the full amount of bonds—one gentleman has said it would amount to the enormous sum of four millions of dollars, but we do not provide that the Legislature shall pay interest on three millions, nor on one million, nor on one hundred dollars. We leave that entirely to those who are to come after us. They may restrict it to one thousand, or one million, or any other sum, or give nothing at all, just as they shall judge to be best. We do not legislate, nor do we say what the Legislature shall, or shall not do. Will gentlemen adopt such a narrow and contracted view as to refuse to leave the future of our State untrammelled? There are, as I said before, others in the State whose wisdom is as great as ours, and who, I hope and believe, will know what is for the interest of the State better than we do. How is this money to be paid? Not necessarily in gold pieces, as some gentlemen seem to think. If the Government currency should stand as it is,

Friday,]

EARL—McCLINTON—NOURSE.

or even in a much better position, the expense to the people will not be great. If we authorize the Legislature to grant this aid they may grant it in the currency of the country, and that would decrease the amount, in the present condition of the currency, nearly one half. But, as one gentleman who preceded me has said, this aid cannot be given within one year from this time at the least. We are not proposing now to issue the bonds, but only to authorize the Legislature to pay the interest on bonds of the railroad company, and those payments would be made gradually. We would be making payments from year to year, and not launching out at once into a large expenditure. While we were making the payments from time to time, we should be receiving all the time more and more of the benefits to be derived from the railroad. Even when the road reaches Dutch Flat, who doubts that it will be of enormous value to this community, and if we can get it to Crystal Peak, or even nearly to that point, it will be worth more to the State than the interest on this whole three millions of dollars. I hope the Convention will be controlled by liberal views and not by the narrow, contracted views of those who are interested in toll-roads and other interests which must necessarily go down whenever the railroad is built. There are no doubt large interests in this Territory represented by those who have invested their money in toll-roads. Such institutions are now a necessity to us, but that is nevertheless no reason why we should endeavor to check this work which is of so much importance to our whole community.

I indulge the hope, and have for months past, that we shall have the railroad here inside of three years. I think it may be done, notwithstanding the difficulties to be overcome, and I hope it will be done, even in less time. I notice that, as I was reported the other day, I was made to say that there was sufficient freight in Storey County alone to build the road over the mountains. I think I did not so state. My idea was that there was sufficient freight there to pay for building a road from Virginia to Washoe. It is well known that we are paying enormous and ruinous amounts of money, for freights. A large proportion of the wealth extracted from our mines in Storey County goes in that way. But if the road is once built it will immediately check that expenditure, and this will be an enormous advantage to us. See, too, what a vast benefit it will be to Humboldt County, and the Reese River region, and the other remote portions of the Territory! We should look not only to the interests of this immediate vicinity, but to the interests of Humboldt and Reese River, as well. Lumber is now worth there four hundred dollars a thousand—just think of that!—while we get it here for forty or fifty dollars a thousand. We do not feel the want of a railroad as they do, and I think if I lived in that portion of the Territory I should feel almost indignant at those gentlemen who wish to restrict and hamper the progress of this great work.

Mr. McCLINTON. I feel somewhat "narrow and contracted," as the gentleman last on the floor says, particularly about the financial regions, and I would certainly oppose, in this Convention, anything that should contemplate the immediate appropriation, by the first Legislature, under our State Constitution, or any action by them that should necessitate the immediate payment by the people of any such amount as two hundred and ten thousand dollars a year, in interest upon the bonds of this State. I would oppose the issuance of the bonds of the State, or any other action that should require that payment to be made, for the reason that we have scarcely sufficient resources at the present time, even to support a State Government, and to raise an annual tax for the first years of our life as a new State of two hundred and ten thousand dollars, or any considerable portion of that amount, in addition to the State expenses, would be an impossibility. The question with us simply is, "To be or not to be." Are we to be taxed more than we can bear, more than we can possibly raise, for this object, or are we to adopt such a course of policy, and incorporate such a provision into this Constitution, as will leave it in our power to aid the construction of this road to the extent of our ability, and at such times as we shall be able to do it without injuring the credit of the State? I am in favor, I want it distinctly understood, of aiding this road to the extent of our ability, and the only question is, are we able to do it or are we not? I do not believe we are able at the present time, in addition to sustaining the expenses of a State Government, to pay annually two hundred and ten thousand dollars. It will be as much as we can do to support our State Government, even upon the most economical basis on which we can frame this fundamental law. I think this section, as it was first proposed to be amended, would be amply sufficient. I believe we need go no further, even for the sake of an indorsement of the road. I should have no objection to making the section apply to the Central Pacific Railroad by name, and if we do that it will certainly be an ample indorsement of the road. If that will be of any benefit to the Company, or any aid to them in negotiating their bonds in the money markets of New York, or London, or Paris, I am willing they should have the benefit of that indorsement. But I am not willing to provide that we shall pledge ourselves to give any direct and immediate aid to the road, when I cannot see that we have the resources to meet the demands which may be made against us.

Mr. NOURSE. I should hardly have troubled the Convention upon this matter now, as many things which I should like to have said have been anticipated by gentlemen who have spoken before me, but that the novel views of the gentlemen from Storey behind me (Mr.

Friday.]

TOZER—NOURSE—WARWICK.

[July 15.

Earl) are so absolutely startling on one point that they seem to call for some reply. I refer to his announcement that wisdom is not to die with this Convention. [Laughter.] I think that has not been suggested before, and we should hardly be just to ourselves if we did not consider that startling fact. Now I think on the whole the gentleman is probably right. I think on the whole that there will be Legislatures hereafter as wise as this Convention is. I presume there have been in other States Legislatures quite as wise as the Conventions which framed their several State Constitutions. And yet, Mr. President, in every Constitution that ever was framed, the great work has been to restrict the power of the Legislature.

Mr. TOZER [interrupting.] I hope the discussion will be confined by the President closely to the question before the Convention. If it is allowed to take so wide a range as it has taken heretofore, it will prevent us from completing our labors before next fall.

Mr. NOURSE. I hope so too. Does the gentleman see any symptoms to the contrary in my remarks? [Laughter.] I think I have not wandered from the question.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) to recommit with instructions. The Chair hopes the gentleman from Washoe will confine himself to that.

Mr. NOURSE. The gentleman will, if he knows himself.

The PRESIDENT. There is a latitude of debate allowed in Committee of the Whole, which is not permitted by the rules in the Convention.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not ask any latitude; I ask simply the privilege of meeting the question on the ground of the objections which have been raised. The objection urged is, that by the article as it now stands, we prohibit the Legislature from doing so and so, and that the Legislature is likely to be as wise as we are; and it is upon the propriety of so restricting the Legislature that I am speaking now, or about to proceed to speak. Does the gentleman from Storey make any objection to that? If so, I do not think it makes the slightest difference.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. NOURSE. Now, sir, is it or is it not the province of the Constitution to restrict or tie up the Legislature in any respect? If not, what do you mean in this first article by providing that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever?" Are not the Legislature to be as wise as we? Why not let them fix it all up by passing laws establishing the right of trial by jury, without our interfering with it. Why provide that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State?" Is not the Legislature to come after us going to be as wise as we? We provide that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended except in certain specified cases, but is not the Legislature to come after us likely to be as wise as we? Is wisdom to die with us? Why not leave all these things with the Legislature? We do not leave them with the Legislature because the province of a Constitution is to restrict legislative powers, which otherwise would be unlimited. And we propose to restrict the power of the State to incur debts, which would otherwise be unlimited. Is not that done by every State constitution in the United States? When we do this we do not assume any unwarranted powers or prerogatives. We put in the Constitution what we think is a wise and judicious restriction, upon the people, and upon the Legislature, and if the people do not like it they will reject it. We do not determine the matter absolutely. It goes from us as a simple recommendation, and the people are to adopt the Constitution or to reject it as they please. No one assumes to settle the matter until the people shall vote on the Constitution.

Now there is another original point, which was made by the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) and that is that railroads are a benefit, and tend to develop the resources of a country. I do not know, however, as that is altogether original.

Mr. WARWICK. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman a moment.

Mr. NOURSE. I would rather not give way.

Mr. WARWICK. The gentleman shall not place me in a false position.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Washoe declines to yield the floor.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not think I have misrepresented the gentleman in any respect. I think that no man is more enthusiastically desirous of seeing a railroad constructed across these Sierras, or of seeing a railroad built in this Territory, and through this Territory, than I am. We are all in favor of that, and we must be fools, or worse than fools, if we do not desire it. And it is simply upon the question, whether this action, or proposed action, if it shall prevail—if we reject this amendment by which we refuse to restrict the Legislature—will or will not hinder the railroad in its construction, that we are to argue this matter.

Now I am opposed, as I was in the first place, to all grants of aid by the State, because I believe the State is, or will be, in no condition to make such grants. I believe it will not help the railroad at all to make any grant. I was overruled in that view, however, and there was a clause adopted which seemed to meet the approbation of a majority of the Convention, allowing the State to lend its aid, within our own limits. Now an attempt is made to change that provision, and to make the aid of the State take the form of an absolute payment of interest, instead of a loan. I think the clause as it stands does not state whether it shall be a loan

FITCH—NOURSE.

or a gift. If I recollect rightly, under that provision the Legislature would have the power either to lend or to donate money to the railroad company, to be expended in the State. As I understand it, it is now proposed that instead of that the State shall pay for twenty years the interest, at seven per cent. on the bonds of the company for three millions of dollars, to be expended wherever the company pleases.

I need not go through all the figures which gentlemen have presented here; I do not want to take up the time of the Convention in that way, but I wish to say a few words upon the propriety and necessity of the State's making this donation. Gentlemen say that the State should pay the interest on those bonds, because it will strengthen the railroad company in the market, and it is upon that theory that the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) is moved and advocated. This aid, then, it is proposed, shall take the form of the payment of the interest upon the first mortgage bonds of the company. Now these first mortgage bonds, to the extent of forty-eight thousand dollars a mile, except for the first seven or eight miles, are to be based on the whole property of the road, of which the thirty-one miles now built, without any aid whatever, constitutes a part, as well as the money laid out in addition for the iron and rolling stock for sixty miles more. Then the road has the subsequent aid of the United States to fall back upon, to the amount of forty-eight thousand dollars a mile in the bonds of the United States. Am I not correct? I wish to look at this matter just as if I were a capitalist—which is not a supposable case, perhaps—and application were made to me to loan money on a building already partly built. Good progress has been made on the building, and I am asked to loan, say ten thousand dollars upon it, with full and ample security that besides the work already done, ten thousand dollars more shall be expended upon that building, after my money is laid out. Can there be any better security than that? Now if this donation of interest gives credit to the bonds, it is to that extent a help to the road; but can the strength which they already have be increased? What more can be asked, when the railroad company has thirty-one miles already completed, and the whole of the rolling stock and iron for sixty miles provided, with forty-eight thousand dollars per mile from the Government of the United States in prospect, to say nothing of the liberal donations of land, and the aid from the State of California, and the various counties in that State, nor of the paying business which is to be carried on over that road from the very first, and in regard to which, we are told that the freight business alone pays twelve millions of dollars a year.

Mr. FITCH. That is the freight business with teams; the prices will be reduced by the railroad.

Mr. NOURSE. I know—but if that is the rate now, if with teams hauling all our freight it amounts to twelve millions a year, will not the amount of freight be increased when it is brought by the railroad, so as to make the business larger in the aggregate? The railroad may reduce the rates of freight, from two and a half, and sometimes ten cents a pound, the prices now paid, to a cent a pound, and the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) will testify to the fact that the amount of freight to be transported will multiply and increase ten-fold. That is the experience of every railroad. While the railroad will reduce the prices of freight only one-fourth on the cost per pound, yet the aggregate amount will certainly increase ten-fold. But suppose the freight only increases in amount in the same ratio as it is reduced in price, still will not the business of the road pay when it will be doing a freight business amounting to twelve millions per annum? The experience of railroads all the world over is, that fifty per cent. of the gross amount received for freight is net profit. But suppose it takes on this road three-fourths of the receipts for freights to pay expenses. There is no reason, certainly, why we should estimate it higher than that, although gentlemen say that it is going to be a hard road to run because it has heavy grades, of a hundred and five feet to the mile, and sharp curves of five hundred feet radius. It may be that for these reasons the cost of running the road will be greater; but by fixing the price at one cent per pound they will receive an enormous price for freight, as compared with the rates of railroads in the east, and therefore it seems to me that the proportion between the gross receipts and the net profits will be about what they are on the eastern roads. At any rate, they will have a net profit of four or five millions of dollars a year, and that, too, upon a road which is not to cost more than fifteen or twenty millions.

Now with such a showing as to the profits of the road, with such a security for this one mortgage, with the other loans and donations on the top of that, with the payment of the interest on one million and a half by the State of California for twenty years, when the road is completed for thirty-one miles, and all the land given by the United States, and the agreement by the United States to pay that large amount per mile, with the interest on the loan absolutely a gift, can it be possible that this poor little State can add one particle of credit to the bonds of the company in any money market in the world? Will not their credit be established surely without our aid, or our guarantee? I believe that our guarantee, even if it were perfectly good, would not help the road at all; and with our guarantee, so doubtful in its character as it necessarily must be, can there be any question that it would be a mere form, which would be of no service whatever to the railroad? And if it is proposed that instead of a guarantee, we are to go on and absolutely pay this interest, then comes up the other fact that the resources of the railroad company, as has been abundantly shown, are ample to build the road without our aid, while we are in fact utterly unable to donate anything to that company. It seems to me that in any view, whether it be to help the road by a gift outright, or with a view to giving credit to the bonds of the company, we should be merely going through a farce if we were to make this donation.

But then gentlemen say, "Why not let the Legislature do it? Why not leave it to the discretion of the Legislature?" Because we are here, as I have stated already, to restrict the Legislature. That is the object of a State Constitution. We are opposed to giving it, and if we can learn anything by experience we know that if it is allowed to be done by the Legislature, it will be done. I cannot call to mind, in all the long list of cases where there has been referred to the people of a State a proposition to loan the State credit to an enterprise of this kind, one single instance where the people have voted it down. There may be some cases in counties where it comes home to people's pockets more directly, and where they are better able to realize it—there may be some cases like that where such questions have been voted down—but I do not know of any, and I never heard of any that I now recollect of; while on the other hand I do know of many cases where such questions have been carried.

Under these circumstances I protest against the discredit sought to be cast by the advocates of this amendment upon the President of this railroad company. One of two things is true—either those railroad men are competent, or they ought not to be trusted. I am disposed to believe that Governor Stanford is reliable, and that his associates are reliable, and I protest against the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) attempting to cast discredit upon Governor Stanford's statements and conclusions here. I think, upon more mature reflection, that the vote of thanks which was passed to him, and which I thought at the time was absurd, was amply due to him. I think we ought to be grateful to him, and I think we should trust to his statements. He knows best in relation to the condition of the railroad, and relying upon his showing, I say that that company is infinitely better able to pay the interest on our bonds than we are to pay the interest on theirs.

Mr. WARWICK. I rise to a question of privilege. I believe since the assembling of this Convention, there has been no gentleman on this floor who in his communications with his fellow members has exercised more courtesy than I have. On all occasions I have avoided that low scurrility and contemptible personality which is calculated to provoke retort. On no occasion, during debate, however exciting the matter, or however interested I might have been, have I ever indulged, I think, in any personal allusion which could possibly hurt the feelings of anybody. Neither have I attempted to place anybody in a false position by misstating his language or misrepresenting him in any particular. But the gentleman who preceded me, (Mr. Nourse,) did take occasion to represent me as having employed language which I never did use.

Mr. NOURSE. If the gentleman will allow me—I did not pretend to say precisely what was the language of the gentleman. I stated only what I understood to be the substance of his remarks, and I stated that that was what I understood. But if the gentleman did not say, or thinks he did not say, what I understood him to say, then I certainly have no comment to make upon it, and I will cheerfully withdraw any comment I may have made. I will leave it to him to say whether I did not state that that was what I understood him to say—that is, to argue, or to give reasons to show why railroads are desirable. That is certainly what I understood.

Mr. WARWICK. Sir, it is not so much the gentleman's matter as his manner—not addressed to me alone, but to others. Scarcely ever does he rise here to speak but that in a dictatorial and offensive manner he wounds the feelings of some gentleman.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Lander is transgressing his question of privilege by making reference to any offense the gentleman from Washoe may have given to other members.

Mr. WARWICK. It is not alone on this occasion—and I will confine it to myself entirely—but on an occasion previously, the gentleman used such language that I felt as if I could scarcely keep my seat.

Mr. NOURSE. I call for specifications—or rather, I call the gentleman to order. I do not wish to be assailed in this manner.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Lander is transcending the privileges of debate, in referring to a general matter of complaint without specifications. He cannot be permitted to arraign the general conduct of a member.

Mr. WARWICK. Well, inasmuch as it bears upon this particular matter—and I will merely refer to matters personal to myself—I only take occasion to request that that gentleman, when he undertakes to reply to me, will confine himself to facts, lest I be compelled to use stronger language in regard to him than I have used this morning.

Mr. NOURSE. I call the gentleman to order. I am not here to be bullied and threatened, and I ask the Chair if it is to be allowed?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Lander has transcended the bounds of good order, as he must be aware. He will endeavor to confine himself within the bounds of legitimacy in his arguments or remarks.

Mr. WARWICK. Then I will come to order, but I have to say that although I have been in

CHAPIN—NOURSE—DUNNE.

[July 15.]

two legislative bodies, and passed through several heated debates, I do not know as I ever was placed in such a position as the gentleman from Washoe attempted to place me in this morning.

Mr. CHAPIN. Mr. President, I propose to occupy only a moment of the time of the Convention.

Mr. NOURSE [interrupting.] I wish to say a word in response to the gentleman from Lander, if the gentleman from Storey will allow me.

Mr. CHAPIN. Certainly.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to say that towards the gentleman from Lander I have entertained and do entertain none but the kindest feelings, and I do not know a gentleman on the floor towards whom I do not entertain such feelings. And I challenge any man in this Convention to point out one discourteous word of mine towards that gentleman, or any other. But a gentleman, and his arguments, are two very different things, and I claim the privilege, as other gentlemen claim it, when an argument, or what is put forth as such, seems to me to be absurd, unreasonable or illogical, to attack it in those respects. I claim the right and privilege, and if I cannot have it I do not want to be here, to place such an argument in its proper light. I submit to the Convention whether I have not taken that course, and if gentlemen use arguments which in their nature are susceptible to ridicule the fault is not mine. If there is any fault of manner in me that seems to be disrespectful to that gentleman, or to any other gentleman, I am sorry for it. I know that frequently men have faults of style, of which they are not themselves aware. Now I have been charged here, from day to day, with being actuated by motives which, as often as I disavowed them, were nevertheless charged upon me again. But when I was assailed as to my motives, when I was charged with interested motives in relation to toll-roads, I did not fling back in return "railroad influence!" Have I charged railroad influence upon any man? Have I made a single disrespectful allusion to the gentleman from Lander, or any other gentleman, that he should take offense at? If so, I have not been aware of it. I claim the right, however, and it seems to me that if you deny that you had better give up all discussion, to speak of the arguments of gentlemen in the manner they seem to me to deserve. In regard to gentlemen themselves, it is a very different matter. I have taunted no man and indulged in no flings against any man intentionally.

Mr. CHAPIN. If these personal matters are done with, I will proceed. It seems to me that the views of gentlemen have changed somewhat, since the statements which Governor Stanford made here the other day, and I am free to confess, for myself, that if I had as full confidence as some gentlemen seem to have in the realization of all the funds necessary to be provided for the prosecution of this great work,

I doubt very much whether I would vote to aid it, if the question were now to be referred to the people, for such an appropriation as we propose here to authorize. But I agree with my colleague from Storey (Mr. Fitch) that there is a great deal of doubt cast over the question whether or not those expectations will be realized. I do not believe it. And now I simply want to state that I believe sincerely we cannot afford to put into the Constitution here a clause which shall prohibit the people from ever rendering any aid to the Pacific Railroad, if they wish to do it. The amount specified here I know seems to be large, but that can be modified before it is submitted to the people, if we put in no imperative language, providing that it shall be so much, and no more. But even in regard to this amount of two hundred and ten thousand dollars a year, though a large amount, yet we must remember that there are other large figures which we are now compelled to face, month after month, and year after year, and there is no escape for us. Why, sir, that two hundred and ten thousand dollars will barely pay our teamsters' wages for one month. It is estimated that we have three thousand teamsters now engaged in bringing our freights and supplies across the mountains, and if you estimate their wages at an average of seventy dollars per month it just covers this amount of two hundred and ten thousand dollars. That is what we are paying out every month instead of every year. Sir, I say it is beyond all question that we cannot afford to continue to pay the immense sums which we are now paying for freights, and therefore I want to leave the question to the wisdom of the Legislature hereafter. Let them decide it, when they see how the great work progresses; and if it does not progress, if they see they are likely to be disappointed as to its completion, if there is failure on the right hand and on the left, and no prospect of any company providing us with this great work of necessity without our aid, why, sir, I say do not tie up the hands of the people, so that they cannot come in and render that aid. I say we cannot afford to do it. Leave the question open, and leave the people free to act when that necessity which knows no law begins to press upon them. Leave it open to the Legislature, and then, if a few years hence they see fit to make the appropriation to the amount of the trifling sum which we are now paying for teamsters' wages from month to month, let them do so. I say do not tie up their hands.

Mr. DUNNE. As this is an important question, I will state the reasons why I support the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch.) But first, one word in regard to the argument of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) which I think proves more for our side than any argument he would have been willing to make if he had reflected a moment. He says the universal experience has been that the people of a State always adopt any proposition for granting aid to a railroad enterprise. I ask if that is not the best argument in the world that the people are in favor of granting such aid, and if they are in favor of it, why should they not have the right to grant it? It is because I believe in leaving some liberty to the people that I would favor this amendment. There are ample restrictions and safeguards thrown around it which will prevent the granting of any aid injudiciously.

FITCH—TOZER.

[July 15.

Many have thought that the declarations made here by Governor Stanford, the President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, were very unwise and injudicious concerning the interest of that railroad; but I know the Governor very well, and have the highest appreciation of his financial ability and skill, and I believe that the position he assumed here was a masterly stroke of policy. His company is now on the eve of negotiating a loan of five millions of dollars, and what greater guarantee of credit could there be, or in what way could he bolster up the credit of that company, if it needed it, more than by the almost unheard-of course of coming before such a body as this constitutional Convention and saying: "Gentlemen, we are not anxious for your three millions." From the aid of this State they could derive no practical benefit for a year, or perhaps eighteen months to come, but by taking that position they give a credit to their bonds which is of more advantage to them than any aid which they could hope to derive from us. What gentleman is there here who, if he contemplated taking an interest in this road, would not do it much more willingly after having that assurance than before, and much more willingly than he would with all the guarantees and assurances of the new State without it?

The argument that the Legislature is easily influenced to grant franchises and special privileges, does not apply to the Legislature which is to come after us in this case, because a mere majority of a quorum is not sufficient. We require, in the first place, a majority of the whole number elected, then upon that is the veto power of the Governor, which it would require a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to overcome. And upon that again is the veto power of the people, which will require a majority of the people of the State to approve the law. Now, I say, if a majority of the people, after a fair discussion of the question, come to the conclusion that it is for their interest to grant this aid, they should have the right to grant it.

The hopes of the managers of this railroad may prove to be fallacious, or it may be that the whole project will fall through in the terrible crisis which our nation is now undergoing. If such an event should happen, if this company should become embarrassed and unable to proceed, what would be our position if we do not adopt this provision? We should find ourselves with our hands tied, and no way left open by which we could extend aid to that enterprise, which is to us of such vital importance. Therefore, in view of all possible contingencies, I think the people should have the power intrusted to them to grant this aid if they find it necessary.

Mr. FITCH. Inasmuch as the hour of two o'clock this afternoon has been assigned for the consideration of the subject of the taxation of the mines, and it is now nearly twelve o'clock, I suggest that we come to a vote on this question.

Mr. TOZER. I have but a word or two to say, and will detain the Convention only a moment. After a lengthy discussion of this question a day or two since, upon the same clause, and after a full and perfect interchange of sentiments and arguments in relation to the subject, this Convention came fully to the conclusion to grant this aid, or rather to authorize the people of this State to pay their money, if they should desire to do so, in aid of the construction of the Pacific Railroad. We stand, therefore, in my judgment, committed to that policy. But, sir, since that time Governor Stanford, the President of that road, has appeared before us, and has cast, as it seems to me, some light on this subject. In view of that new light it now appears desirable, to some of us at least, that our action on the subject should be changed, and that the section which we then adopted should be somewhat altered, amended, and corrected. I think, for one, that the action which we then took was such as would be calculated more to injure than to advance the interests of the first and only road likely to be built, or likely ever to aid in advancing our interests. Such being the case, sir, I would only say briefly further that I shall favor the motion of my colleague, (Mr. Fitch,) and I really hope that this Convention, without arguing or discussing this question to any greater length, will at once come to a vote, and let the section be referred to the committee with directions to amend it in accordance with the written instructions, and then let the Convention pass upon it, and have done with the subject. I do not believe, Mr. President, that any further argument in this case, either from myself or from those who are much more able to intelligently and wisely argue the question, will add anything whatever to the intelligence and understanding of this Convention on the subject. I think, sir, that we are as well prepared now, or will be as well prepared immediately on receiving the report of the committee to be appointed, to take a vote upon the question involved, as we would be if the members of the Convention should again and again express the identical opinions which they have expressed so often heretofore, upon the general policy of railroads, and upon the advantages of railroads, and upon the policy of the people of this State granting, under this constitutional provision, their aid to the construction of this particular railroad. I think I can safely say that if such questions as this are to be considered, and reconsidered, by the Convention, and the Committee of the Whole, months instead of weeks must elapse before our labors can be brought to a close, and I shall insist by every means I can employ, within the bounds of parliamentary usage, that all this debate shall be cut short. Gentlemen have spoken well, but the subject is exhausted, and further debate is useless.

Mr. BROSNAN. I desire to ask a question. In case of the issuance of these bonds, or the authorizing of their issuance, if this railroad company should fail absolutely, as suggested or expressed by my colleague, (Mr. Collins,) to complete this work, or if another company succeeding them should fail to do so, in what condition would the State be placed? Would not the State be still liable to pay the money to the holders of the bonds?

Mr. TOZER. It seems to me that if the Legislature, and the people indorsing their action, should grant the aid, and the railroad company should then fail to fulfil its part of the contract, the State could then refuse to fulfil her part, and in that event we should have to pay only the interest on the bonds already issued.

Mr. BROSNAN. But what is the legal liability of the State in that respect?

Mr. TOZER. The gentleman can tell better than I can. I should not think the State would be bound to pay any further than bonds had been already executed. It seems to me that is the common-sense view of the case. As to the policy of this Constitutional Convention authorizing the people of the State to vote on this question, I have not the least doubt in the world. I hope the provision will be made in some way authorizing the people, in the future, to vote upon it, and to grant this aid, if in their judgment it seems best.

Mr. PARKER. Inasmuch as our clock is stopped I move the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is hardly necessary.

Mr. FITCH. I should like to offer an amendment which I think will be readily accepted. It is to add at the end of the amendment which I have heretofore proposed, the following: "Nor until said road shall have been completed and in running order for a distance of sixty miles eastward from Sacramento."

Mr. CROSMAN. I suggest that there should be a provision for a special election when it is submitted to the people.

Mr. KENNEDY. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the question is first on striking out and next on inserting.

The PRESIDENT. The vote will be first taken on striking out.

Mr. EARL. But the motion is not to strike out; if we strike it out we may lose all.

Mr. FITCH. I understand that, but if we can not have the amendment which I offer, I would as soon let it all be stricken out as any way.

Mr. EARL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT. Have the ayes and noes been demanded?

Mr. FITCH. I do not call for the ayes and noes on striking out.

Mr. NOURSE. I do.

Mr. BANKS. The first proposition is to strike out, I understand, and after that there may be a majority in favor of inserting. I want to know if it will be in order to move to strike out and insert other words after both questions pending are voted down?

Mr. NOURSE. Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof.

Mr. BANKS. There may be a majority in favor of inserting. What I want to know is, can we move to insert other language?

Mr. FITCH. My understanding is, that if the motion to strike out is adopted and the motion to insert rejected, then the section will be in a condition to entertain any other motion to insert.

The PRESIDENT. On some occasions the Chair has decided in advance what effect a motion would have, but I think it is quite enough to decide intricate questions when they are actually presented for consideration. I do not deem it necessary at this time.

Mr. BANKS. The Chair is quite right; we will take our chances.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on so much of the instructions as directed the striking out of that portion of the section which related to a railroad, and the vote resulted—yeas, 28; nays, none—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McCinton, Nourse, Parker, Starlevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—28.

Nays—none.

The PRESIDENT. The instructions, so far as striking out is concerned, are adopted.

Mr. FITCH. I hope no gentleman has any intention now to move an adjournment. [Laughter.] I suppose the next question is on inserting my amendment.

Mr. DELONG. I cannot exactly understand this amendment.

The SECRETARY read the amendment as modified by Mr. Fitch, as follows:

"Provided, That the State may provide for the payment of the interest upon bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars for a length of time not exceeding twenty years, at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, in aid of the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad across the Sierra Nevada Mountains; but no law to provide for the payment of interest as aforesaid shall be effective unless sanctioned by a vote of the people, nor until said road shall have been completed and in running order for a distance of sixty miles eastward from Sacramento."

Mr. NOURSE. The hour for our recess has arrived, I believe.

The PRESIDENT. It lacks five minutes by the clock. [Laughter.]

Mr. DELONG. I do not wish to occupy the time. I only want to say that I hope this amendment will be voted down.

Friday.] BROSAN—CROSMAN—HAWLEY—MASON—McCLINTON—FITCH—NOURSE. [July 15.

Mr. FITCH and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon so much of the instructions as directed the committee to insert the words proposed by Mr. Fitch, and the vote was—yeas, 12; nays, 17—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, Dunne, Earl, Hawley, Hovey, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—12.

Nays—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Crawford, DeLong, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Hudson, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Nourse, Parker, Sturtevant, Taghliabue, and Mr. President—17.

So the instructions in relation to inserting were not agreed to.

During the voting—

Mr. BROSAN said: I would like to say one word in explanation of my vote. I shall vote in the affirmative on this question, solely for the reason that the people, in my judgment, ought to have something to say on the subject.

Mr. WARWICK. That's it.

Mr. CROSMAN. I wish to state, by way of explanation, something similar to what my colleague, Mr. Brosnan, has stated. I have an amendment which I would prefer to this, but I shall vote "aye" on this question.

Mr. HAWLEY. I vote "aye" for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan,) although the proposition does not exactly meet with my approbation, individually.

Mr. MASON. I have sought an opportunity to express my views, and I wish now to explain the manner in which I vote, because I do not want to go before my constituents misunderstood. I vote "no," because I believe an appropriation of this kind would be a greater curse upon our State than any benefit which could be derived from it. I do not propose to support a monopoly, or to give to one company more than I would to another. I would be in favor of having three railroads across the mountains, if we could, but at any rate I am now and forever opposed to a vast monopoly.

Mr. McCLINTON. I vote "no," for the reason that I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) is not as good as the section was before. And I will state incidentally that I do not believe, if it is voted down, that the people will in consequence be robbed of a chance to vote on the subject.

Mr. FITCH. I change my vote from "aye" to "no," for the purpose of moving a reconsideration.

The result having been announced, as above stated.

Mr. FITCH. I give notice that I will move a reconsideration of this vote.

The hour for recess having passed, the President, at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock, declared the Convention at recess until two o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at two o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. FITCH. I ask unanimous leave to withdraw the notice of reconsideration of the vote by which the Convention this morning refused to adopt my amendment to Section 9 of Article VIII, in reference to the Pacific Railroad clause.

The PRESIDENT. The notice is withdrawn, if there is no objection.

Mr. DELONG. The gentleman has my consent. [Laughter.]

TAXATION.

The PRESIDENT. The special order for two o'clock is the consideration of Article X, entitled Taxation, and the question before the Convention is on the adoption of the report of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DELONG. I call for the yeas and noes.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken on the motion for a call of the House and it was agreed to.

The roll was called and thirty-one members responded to their names, those who failed to respond being Messrs. Ball, Frizell, Jones, Morse, Proctor, Warwick, Wellington, and Williams.

Mr. WARWICK soon after appeared, and after a brief delay, on motion of Mr. LOCKWOOD, further proceedings under the call of the House were dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT. The question before the Convention is, the adoption of the report of the Committee of the Whole, upon Article X of the Constitution, entitled Taxation.

Mr. TOZER. I move that the report of the committee be adopted.

Mr. NOURSE. Is it in order to amend the report? I desire to move to amend the section as reported, and will not that motion take precedence of the motion to adopt?

Mr. DELONG. You cannot amend the report of the committee. The committee alone can amend its report, and the question now comes on the adoption of the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT. This, in effect, is a recommendation from the Committee of the Whole, and amendments to that will be in order.

Mr. NOURSE. Then I move an amendment to the section, as reported.

Mr. DELONG. We cannot amend the report of the committee; that is the property solely of the committee. The Convention can only adopt or reject it, as they please. This article, as it stands, is reported back with a recommendation that certain lines in the original be stricken out, and, as a matter of course, those lines are not stricken out unless the Convention adopt the report, and then, as soon as they are stricken out, by the adoption of the report, any further amendments would be legitimate and in order. I submit that that is a correct view of the matter.

Mr. CROSMAN. Would it not be in order to move to recommit, and have further action in Committee of the Whole? I desire to offer a further amendment.

Friday,]

PRESIDENT—EARL—DELONG—HOVEY—KENNEDY—NOURSE—BROSAN.

[July 15.]

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that it would not be in order.

After considerable discussion upon the question of order involved—

The PRESIDENT decided that the vote must first be taken upon concurring in the report of the Committee of the Whole, and that then, whether the report should be adopted or rejected, the article would be open to further amendment, or to be recommitted.

The SECRETARY read the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, which was to strike out the words "including mines and mining property."

Mr. EARL. I shall vote for striking out, because we wish to insert other words.

Mr. DELONG. I call for the ayes and noes.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole, and the vote was—yeas, 27; nays, 5—as follows:—

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Folsom, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Nourse Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—27.

Nays—Messrs. Crawford, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, and Parker—5.

So the amendment striking out the words "including mines and mining property" was agreed to.

Before the result of the vote was announced—

Mr. HOVEY. With the consent of the Convention I would like to explain my vote. I am in favor of taxing the mines, but not as proposed by any amendment which I have yet seen. But I think this will leave it with the Legislature, in such a way that they can prescribe a proper mode of taxing the mines, and therefore I have voted aye.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have not explained my vote, and do not wish to give my reasons in detail at this time, but simply to state, that I have voted aye on this motion, with the expectation of making further amendments.

The PRESIDENT. As explanations seem to be the order, I will explain my action, so far as that section is concerned. I am desirous of incorporating my amendment, and I therefore vote aye, because my amendment could not otherwise be brought before the Convention.

The result of the vote having been announced as above stated—

Mr. NOURSE. Now I suppose my amendment is in order. It has been sent up to the desk, and I move its adoption.

The Secretary read the amendment, which substitutes for Section 1 the following:

SEC. 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation of all property, possessions, and possessory rights, excepting such only as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, and charitable purposes.

Mr. NOURSE. I offer that amendment because I suppose it will meet the views of gentlemen, as they have been expressed here. The odious word "claims" is left out, because, as I understand it, it is offensive to some, and I suppose that will meet the views of gentlemen who disagree with me. I think I have shown a willingness to meet them fairly, by leaving out that word "claims." I ask for the ayes and noes on that amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Is a further amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BROSNAN. I would offer an amendment, if in order.

Mr. DELONG. Is not the President mistaken about a further amendment being in order?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir. The question is not on amending the section. The amendments proposed by the Committee of the Whole having been disposed of, now the section is open to any further amendments which may be offered.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am in order then, and I propose to change the original section, after the word "property," so that it shall read "all property, real, personal and mixed."

Mr. DELONG. And if that lacks any thing of a full description, I would suggest to put the words "chattels real" in there.

Mr. EARL. Does it still leave the word "personal"?

Mr. DELONG. Certainly. It says "real, personal and mixed."

Mr. KENNEDY. As I was too unwell yesterday to explain my vote, I wish to explain it at the present time. If I believed the legal proposition which either the President or the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has advanced, that under this wording of the Constitution the mines could not be taxed, I should certainly have voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson,) and against the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch;) but I believe that under this wording, no Legislature, I care not how elastic the consciences of its members may be, can avoid taxing the mines. But I am unwilling to have those words which have been stricken out—"including mines and mining property"—inserted, for the reason that I know we cannot explain to the miners of this Territory the legal definition or meaning of those words. When I voted for this clause in the Convention of last year, as I did, I certainly had no intention of voting for taxing a hole in the ground; yet when I went before my constituents, and urged the construction of that language which I believed to be the true one, I was met with this answer: "Under that clause we believe you will tax every hole in the ground, whether it is a mine or not, and for that reason we will vote against the Constitution." And, sir, it was really on account of those few words that that Constitution framed last year was defeated in our county. I think I know the views of my constituents, for I visited every precinct in our county during the canvass.

Friday.]

CROSMAN—KENNEDY—GIBSON—PRESIDENT.

[July 15.]

Now, sir, the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) says that all kinds of property are embraced in those two words, "real and personal;" but I differ with the gentleman, and deny that as a proposition of law. I contend that there are certain kinds of property which are not embraced in those two words—that there are such things as chattels real, which are neither real property nor personal property—and in the Constitution we should either stop at the word "property," or, if we attempt to define it at all, we should define property as laid down by all the law writers—as "real, personal and mixed." I suppose I shall have liberty in speaking on this point to refer to the various amendments which have been offered. I am opposed to the amendment of my colleague (Mr. Crosmán) which exempts all mines valued at less than one hundred dollars a foot, because, (although it was suggested by him as a bounty for mining,) it would be exempting too large an amount of property from taxation in this State. When a mine is worth a hundred dollars per foot there is too much money invested in it to justify its exemption, and we have not sufficient property within our limits to allow us to be as liberal as that.

Mr. CROSMAN. Will my colleague allow me to explain? So far as naming the amount of one hundred dollars a foot was concerned, I had no particular object in that. I merely named that sum because it is a round sum, and twenty or twenty-five dollars might be substituted.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would be opposed to an amendment of that kind, naming any figure.

The PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the gentleman will be permitted to proceed in his remarks, upon the general features of the various amendments, but it occurs to the Chair that strictly the question is upon the amendment which he has offered. It is difficult for the Chair to determine how closely members should be confined to the particular matter under consideration. ["Leave, leave!"]

Mr. GIBSON. Let them have as wide latitude as possible.

Mr. KENNEDY. I accept the leave of the Convention for two reasons: First, because I shall change my vote from what it was in the last Convention; and secondly, because I want an opportunity to explain my action in Committee of the Whole yesterday.

I have opposed an amendment exempting mines worth under five dollars per foot for this reason, that I do not wish to lay down peremptorily in the Constitution any particular method by which the mines shall be taxed. Now, Mr. President, this question of taxing the mines is comparatively a new question, so far our country is concerned. We have had but little experience in the matter in the United States, and consequently do not know the best method by which to derive revenue from mines. I wish therefore to leave that matter wholly to the Legislature. I have conversed with several men who have had some experience in the matter, and believe, with them, that the United States Government has fixed upon the best plan for deriving revenue from the mines, and that is to tax the bullion which is produced. But I am willing to leave that for the Legislature to decide, governed by future experience. I am willing to allow them to determine in what way they will derive a revenue from the mines. One argument advanced by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson,) was, that under the Enabling Act we could not tax possessory rights.

The PRESIDENT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; my argument was just the reverse. I said we could tax possessory rights, but not the mines directly as property, being owned by the United States.

Mr. KENNEDY. But I hold that the possessory right itself is property. The actual land itself of a mining claim may be property belonging to the United States, but the possessory right in and to that land, or the possessory right in that claim, is property, included within the three words which I have used in my amendment, and it can be reached in that way. It is either real property, or personal property, or—as I believe it really is—mixed property. Now, sir, I think the Legislature, under a provision like this, could reach that description of property. They can reach any kind of property.

There has also been an argument advanced here in respect to the Constitution of California, but it seems to me that that argument will not stand the test of examination. Gentlemen have said on this floor that the Legislature of that State have refused to tax mining property, although they have always had a similar provision to this in their Constitution. Now, in the first place, I do not admit the ground of that argument, and in the second place I believe that mining property in that State, until within the last two or three years at least, ought to have been free from taxation, and for this reason, that the mines there have consisted almost altogether of surface diggings, and no man could tell their value, because no man could have any data upon which to base his calculations. No man could say that one inch further than he had already gone, the dirt in those surface diggings would pay. But in this Territory mining property is of a different character. When a man finds a ledge which pays, he has certain data upon which to base a calculation that at a later day it will pay so much more. I do not deny that these data may lead a man to a wrong conclusion, and it frequently does, but he has nevertheless some rule to go upon. He has the experience of other mines and other countries to teach him that if rock at a certain depth pays so much, when he gets so much deeper it will pay more. He has something substantial to go upon. I never mined in California, but have had old Californians tell me their experience in turning up the dirt

KENNEDY—DELONG.

[July 15.]

there. There have been diggings which, judging from the first painful, promised enormous profits, and yet upon going six inches or a foot deeper they could not find any dirt that would pay. But with our mines the general rule is the reverse of that. We have something more substantial, but how best to get at it none of us can tell, for nobody knows what the rule will be hereafter. One gentleman tells us that the mines are being exhausted, but from what I know in regard to them, I should judge his view to be incorrect. Still I am willing to wait, and allow the Legislature, after further experience, to determine in what manner it is best to tax the mines—whether it is best to do it by levying a tax on the mines themselves, on the bullion, or on the proceeds, gross or net.

I would also call the attention of the Convention to one fact in regard to the Article in the California Constitution. It resembles ours in many respects, and yet gentlemen will see that it is materially different. Section 13 of Article XI of the California Constitution, reads thus :

“Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law ; but assessors and collectors of town, county, and State taxes, shall be elected by the qualified electors of the district, county or town in which the property taxed for State, county or town purposes, is situated.”

Now there may be, and often is, as legal gentlemen know, a peculiar construction put upon that word “all.” I have known of two or three decisions in regard to that. But here we go further and define the several species of property, and require that every species shall be taxed, whether real property, personal property, or partaking of the character of both.

In regard to the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson), I have two objections. I know that if you insert in this article the words “mines and mining property,” or that other word—which to the popular idea is the same thing, to wit—“claims,” you insert that which, to a large majority of our voters, will look as if you were legislating in your Constitution expressly against a class. That is my objection to the word “claims.” In addition there is this further objection : I know what are the views of a majority of my constituents upon that very clause, for upon that clause, more than any other contained in the instrument, I have conversed with them, and they admit that that was what they most opposed.

The PRESIDENT. There is no amendment now before the Convention which embraces either the words “mines and mining property,” or the word “claims.”

Mr. KENNEDY. I understand that. The question, I believe, is upon my own amendment inserting the word “mixed,” and changing the position of the word “and.”

The PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed the gentleman was under a misapprehension as to the amendment pending.

Mr. KENNEDY. I say there is this further objection which I have to any other amendment than this, and that is my regard for the will of my constituents. I know that they are perfectly satisfied with this clause as it stands, with those words “mines and mining property” stricken out. I know that they will have no objection to the insertion of the word “mixed,” when it is explained to them. But they do object, and I think it is a legitimate argument, to anything in the Constitution which seems to them to be—although it may not be in fact—legislating for the taxation of any peculiar class. And as I believe that this amendment will cover all the property in the State, whether it be mines, mills, agricultural lands, possessory rights, or whatever property a man may have, I shall vote for it, believing that it will suit the views of my constituents, believing that it will cover everything, and also believing that it is our true and only policy to leave it to the Legislature to decide in what way they can derive the most revenue from the mines.

Mr. DELONG. I desire to say only a few words on this subject. A question has arisen here as to whether or not the words “real and personal property” cover all kinds of property, and upon that proposition I find that I am disputed by various gentlemen, and more especially by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse.) Now I wish to refer him, and to refer the Convention, in regard to that matter, first to Blackstone’s Commentaries, in which, treating of property, the writer includes under the head of property, all kinds of property, real and personal. He says :

“The objects of dominion or property are things, as contra-distinguished from persons. And things are, by the law of England, distinguished into two kinds—things real and things personal. Things real are such as are permanent, fixed and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their places, as lands and tenements ; things personal are goods, money, and all other movables, which may attend the owner’s person wherever he thinks proper to go.”

I will next read from Bouviere’s Institutes, where it is plainly asserted that property is divided into two kinds—real and personal. But the author says :

“And sometimes property is composed of both personal and real, and is then called mixed estate.”

It is nevertheless included in the term “personal and real property,” for whatever portion of it is not personal must be real, and vice versa. He says :

“Things attached to the freehold as fixtures, are sometimes real and at other times personal ; and things which are personal in their nature, as the keys of a house, are considered as real estate in consequence of their destination ; other personal things become real, either by their accession or by the use to which they are applied. And things which are real become personal on being separated from the realty, as fruits, coal, &c.”

Friday,]

FITCH—DELONG—COLLINS.

[July 15.

Under the head of personal property he goes on to class chattels real and chattels personal, and treats of qualified property, also under the same general head, which he says is such as the possessor has only a qualified, limited, or special right to, as for example the beasts of the forests, but still it all comes within the general classification of personal property. Then again personal property is divided by this authority into things in possession, and things not in possession, or choses in action, as he makes a division, under the general head of "Things," of things corporeal and things incorporeal. These are only sub-divisions, which are made to elucidate the general subject, but the authority shows that really the terms "real" and "personal" cover the whole ground, and as I said in the outset embrace every possible description of property. This classification is made under the head of "Things," and these subdivisions are made throughout, but always under the heads of "real property" and "personal property," which embrace all classes and descriptions of property. Now that the word "mixed" is used here, too, I do not deny, but I say that mixed property is described by the terms "real" and "personal," because it is property of both kinds, like a chattel-real. A chattel is personal property, realty is real property, and a chattel-real is property that partakes of the nature of both. Now here is an illustration in Bouviere, under the head of "Mixed Property." I quote now from Bouviere's Law Dictionary :

"Mixed property is that kind of property which is not altogether real nor personal, but a compound of both. Heir-looms, tomb-stones, monuments in a church, and title-deeds to an estate are of this nature."

These things may have a fixed character, as a tombstone, or a monument, and yet it will be seen they are included by the terms real and personal. Again he says :

"Property is divided into real property and personal property."

And speaking of qualified property :

"A man has a qualified property in animals feræ naturæ, while they remain in his power," etc.

Now I turn to "personal property" and find this language :

"Personal property is the right or interest which a man has in things personal ; it consists of things temporary and movable, and includes all subjects of property not of a freehold nature nor descendable to the heirs at law. Things of a movable nature, where a right can be had in them, are personal property, but some things movable are not the subjects of property, as light and air. Under the term personal property is also included some property which is in its nature immovable, distinguished by the name of chattels real, as an estate for years ; and fixtures are sometimes classed among personal property."

And under the head of "Things" we have this :

"Things by the common law are divided into—1, things real, which are such as are permanent, fixed and immovable, and which cannot be carried from place to place ; they are usually said to consist in lands, tenements and hereditaments. Things personal include not only things movable, but also something more, the whole of which is generally comprehended under the name of chattels. Chattels are distinguished into two kinds, namely, chattels real, and chattels personal."

Then referring to the word "chattels," the writer says :

"Chattels are personal or real chattels. Personal are such as belong immediately to the person of the man ; chattels real are such as pertain not immediately to the person but to something by way of dependency, as a box with the title deeds of lands," etc.

Mr. FITCH. I rise to a point of order. I should not make it on my colleague but that in displaying his legal erudition he is speaking in the time of the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy.)

The PRESIDENT. No ; the gentleman from Lyon had concluded.

Mr. DELONG. I was going to say only that I vote for this proposition, not because I believe there is any necessity for saying anything more than "real and personal," for I think there is no question but that it is unnecessary, but merely to show my sincerity in this matter, and that I do not wish to exclude from taxation even tomb-stones and title deeds. I vote for the amendment although mixed property is not even mentioned by Blackstone, because I am willing to have tomb-stones, monuments, title deeds and everything else taxed.

Mr. COLLINS. I shall vote against the amendment because I am a little suspicious of the arguments presented yesterday and to-day by my learned colleague (Mr. DeLong.) Yesterday, according to his argument, it was absolutely impossible, under the language of this section, to reach the mines, and upon the question being asked if the word "mixed" would add any strength to it, the reply was "none at all." It is understood by him and others that it is impossible to reach the mines under the language in the section as adopted, or as it is now proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy.) I suggested to the President, yesterday, that if that obnoxious word "claims" could be stricken out I would go for it, or I would support the section as it was adopted last night and reported to the Convention this morning. I would not object to that word "possessory" so that it would read, "all property, real, personal and possessory," etc., and I said in the discussion, that if it were amended in that way I certainly would go for it. I am not disposed, however, after spending three or four days upon the discussion, to leave this question still in a state of doubt and ambiguity.

Mr. DELONG. I will ask the gentleman if he will describe any property whatever that a man could be possessed of that is not either real, personal or mixed ? If he can do so, then I will not object to incorporating the word "possessory," but otherwise I am opposed to it.

Mr. COLLINS. My colleague is admitted to be a lawyer of great erudition.

Mr. DELONG. Thank you.

Friday,]

COLLINS—DELONG—BANKS—WETHERILL.

[July 15.]

Mr. COLLINS. And he pronounced the opinion yesterday evening that though the word "mixed" should be added, yet it would be impossible under this section to reach any mining property, on the surface or below it; and I think that assertion came from his heart.

Mr. DELONG. I guess my colleague must have misunderstood me. I claimed that you cannot reach mining claims, because they are the property of the General Government.

Mr. COLLINS. I understood the gentleman to say yesterday that by virtue of the Enabling Act—which has thrown such new light on the subject as to require us to adopt a different wording from that found in the old Constitution—the words "personal and real property," or even "personal, real and mixed," could not be construed so as to reach any property in the mines, or even upon the surface—that it could not be made to reach any possessory claim or even a house lot. It was contended that since the mines were upon the public domain, and were held under the United States, all the buildings and improvements would be carried with them, and therefore it would be impossible for the officers of the State Government to reach any species of property in order to tax it.

Mr. DELONG. My colleague is laboring under a very great mistake. I said this: that no matter what words were incorporated—whether we said "all property," or "all real and personal property," or whether we went further and said "mixed," "possessory," or any other description of property—if we incorporated any such language, we were nevertheless prohibited by the Enabling Act from taxing any land or property of the United States. I said that no matter what language we put in, we could not reach the Government property, and that the Government alone had the right of property in these lands. That is all I said.

Mr. COLLINS. I desire to see this matter now settled and arranged so clearly and definitely that our large holders of property on the surface, whether valuable house lots and ranches, or whatever else, shall know that by no construction of the wording of this instrument can they escape taxation. I want it so clearly worded, and its meaning so clearly brought out, that no species of property that the Legislature may fix upon can escape taxation. And, therefore, inasmuch as nearly all the property of our Territory consists of that kind of property which we derive from our possessory rights, I do think it but just to the ranch-holders, and the holders of property upon the surface, and in the mines also, that the words "possessory rights" should be incorporated in this section.

I said yesterday that I would like it very much if those small claim-holders, those poor men who are laboring to strike a ledge, or who are in pursuit of a mine, could be exempted. I should be glad if this Convention, in its wisdom, could provide some means whereby they might be exempted from taxation, not upon their mines, but rather on their hopes. I should be glad to see a provision by which these prospectors could be exempted, unless they hold claims which exceed a given value, for it is not a mine that a man has, until he strikes the mineral of which he is in pursuit. You cannot say that a tunnel or a shaft is a mine; and I would like to see it provided that those claims in which men are engaged in searching for mines shall not be taxed until they have arrived at a certain market value, not to exceed, for instance, one, three, five, or perhaps ten dollars a foot, as the wisdom of the Convention may determine. I regret that my friend from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) did not see fit to present that amendment, which he gave notice that he should offer it at a subsequent time.

Mr. BANKS. I am not in the habit of interrupting gentlemen, but I would like to be allowed to say here that no opportunity has yet been presented to offer that amendment. When I suggested it, I did so simply because there was no opportunity then to offer it, and I have not, since that time, had a chance to present it, although I have endeavored to do so. It will be offered, however, whenever there is an opportunity.

Mr. COLLINS. If the section can be amended so as to embrace the word "possessory," I shall support that, and I will vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) if nothing better can be produced. I am in favor, however, of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) but I do protest against adopting any section in such a form that no two members of this Convention can be found, after our adjournment, who will be able to understand it in the same light.

Mr. WETHERILL. I did not come here for the purpose of occupying the time of the Convention, but I wish to say that yesterday the proposition was laid down here, that whether there was a ledge discovered or not, or whether a ledge existed or not, the mines should all be taxed. That was a broad and comprehensive proposition, and for one I am willing to meet it squarely. I do not wish to make it obligatory on the Legislature. I am willing to concede to the Legislature the right to tax or not to tax the mines—to leave that question entirely with the Legislature. I did intend to introduce a proposition here to make it imperative on the Legislature not to tax the mines one dime; but seeing the condition of the Convention, and the contrariety of sentiment prevailing in it, I forego that intention, and am willing now to leave it with the Legislature. Gentlemen have conceded so much as to strike out the provision directing and requiring the Legislature to tax mines and mining property. So far so good. But now they turn around and want to tax claims, leaving the language of the same import as before, to wit: that the Legislature shall tax the mines. Right there we take issue, and we might as well settle the issue upon that point at once.

BROSNAN—HAINES.

Now if there has been any question thoroughly ventilated in this community, if there is any question that has been thoroughly discussed, here and elsewhere, it is this question of taxing the mines. Consequently all this long talk is entirely thrown away. I do not suppose there is a member in the Convention but has entirely and completely made up his mind on the subject, and we might just as well decide it at once. I want to see a State Government inaugurated, not for the sake of office, as perhaps some politicians desire it, but for the good of the community. I have asked for no office, either local or general, in this Territory. I am certainly free from that charge, and had I consulted my own feelings I would not have been here to-day. But I want to see a State Government organized, and I am as confident as I can be upon any question which we have yet passed upon, that no Constitution will be adopted by the people of this Territory with a clause in it making it imperative upon the Legislature to tax the mines. That is a proposition which cannot be doubted or denied. That was the very point upon which was based the condemnation of the old Constitution, in Esmeralda County, last fall. I was so situated that I could not well vote against the adoption of that Constitution, and it was with a feeling of deep regret that I saw it defeated. I was conscious at the time, and the result was sufficient to convince me of the fact, that the clause taxing the mines was the millstone which effectually bore us down, and prevented a State organization. And when I say that Esmeralda County is opposed to taxing the mines, I think I speak emphatically the sentiments and wishes of that county. Our interests in Esmeralda County are not alone in the mines. We are largely interested in agriculture, also, and of those engaged in agricultural pursuits at least three out of four will be found voting against taxing the mines.

We might as well meet this question plainly and fairly. Instead of introducing that prohibition which I had contemplated, providing that the mines shall not be taxed, my colleagues and myself are willing to meet the gentlemen on the other side half way. We are willing to leave it an open question in the Legislature, and let the Legislature in future time determine what taxation is necessary to support our State Government, in the event of the adoption of our Constitution. We can do no more than that, and we think that gentlemen are inconsiderate, if not ungrateful, when they ask us to put in here a peremptory mandate that the mines shall be taxed. If it is a foregone conclusion, we can only protest against it, for I do not wish to hurl back the threat, which has been made here, that if you do not engraft into the Constitution this or that particular thing we will vote it down. I say whether it is engrafted in the Constitution or not, I am in favor of the adoption of that Constitution which we may frame, believing that in its general features it will commend itself to the favorable regard of the people. The necessity for a State Government is apparent.

But this subject has been so completely ventilated that I do not propose to travel over the ground, or to attempt to handle those topics which have been so thoroughly and ably handled by others. Let us pursue the course which I have indicated. Let us leave this question to the Legislature. We are not framing a Constitution which shall only be for a day, or a week, or a month, but one which we hope, for a long time after its adoption, shall stand as the fundamental law of the State. We are not framing a Constitution for an old State, or for a State with a settled condition of things. The wheel of fortune rolls rapidly here, and we know not what a few weeks, or even a few days, may bring forth. The Legislature which is to assemble here should be allowed therefore to conform its action to the circumstances arising at the time. I say emphatically that in deference to the will of the people, and in view of all the safeguards which have been thrown around the future legislation of the State, we ought to leave this question to the Legislature; and beyond that we who represent Esmeralda County cannot go one inch.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have only a few words to say. It seems to me that we have arrived at a point in the discussion and adjustment of this question where we ought to determine it at once. For the life of me I cannot see any substantial difference between the views of gentlemen on this question or between the amendments as they stand before the members of this Convention, nor why one gentleman puts in the word "possessory" and another says he desires to use instead the words "mixed property." In every essential particular, in my judgment, both amendments are the same. For myself, and I wish to express my views in all candor, I am free to say that I do not know of any distinction, in import or meaning, between the two modes of expression. I see no tangible difference between the one and the other. If my judgment is not clouded I understand what is meant by "personal, real and mixed property," and the phrase includes all kinds, and every species of property known either in law or to the common observer. So far as possessory rights are concerned they are included in that category, and it seems to me that it can do no harm to put that word in. It is merely a pleonasm, and therefore, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote for the one amendment or for the other, for I consider that one is tantamount to the other.

Mr. HAINES. Although the discussion of this question has taken a very wide range, and as the gentleman from Esmeralda (Mr. Wetherill) says there is probably not a member that does not thoroughly understand the magnitude

Friday,]

BROSNAN—PRESIDENT—DELONG—HAINES—WETHERILL.

[July 15.]

of it, yet it seems to me that no two members agree as to the expression, or the term they wish to use, in order to exclude mines and mining property from taxation. Now, if any language can be incorporated which will cover the ground better than that which we have already employed, it will certainly suit me quite as well, and I will give it a hearty support and cooperation. But when lawyers and doctors disagree I do not know that citizens from the rural districts should be expected to be prepared to say whether or not they have the substance of what they seek, unless they have the language so drawn that we can all read and understand it alike.

Mr. BROSNAN. I do not understand that gentlemen disagree in regard to the identity of meaning of those terms.

The PRESIDENT. I certainly disagree. I do not think that a possessory claim is included in the term "mixed property."

Mr. DELONG. Is it not included in the term "personal property" then?

The PRESIDENT. I say that under our Enabling Act not a single foot of property, surface or mining, could be taxed, if the section were left with simply those three words, "real, personal, and mixed," if the word possessory is not also included.

Mr. HAINES. Now the gentleman from Esmeralda (Mr. Wetherill) is very anxious for a State organization. And why? The reason is very apparent; they want a judicial head. They want more courts, or more judges, in order to clear off that calendar which now contains some six or seven hundred cases. As things now are they expect to have to wait three or four years before the present litigation in respect to mining claims can be brought to a close. These gentlemen want a State organization, but at the same time they tell us that if we tax the mines they will defeat it three to one. Now, I ask how do they expect to sustain a State Government, or carry it on, without having all property taxed, and mining property included? Because nine-tenths of all our property consists in possessory rights to the mines.

Mr. WETHERILL. I will answer the gentleman. There are now twenty-five millions of property in the Territory, exclusive of property in the mines, or the proceeds of the mines. Now tax the proceeds of mines if you choose, and that is a large item in addition. The progress of the Territory has been very rapid indeed thus far, and moreover we base the action of this Convention upon the progress which we are likely to make in the future. We are only about three years old now, and look at the remarkable ratio of our progress! If I thought that ratio of progress was not to continue in the future, I should certainly think we had better never have met here. But look at the progress we have made and are still making. Before the people are called upon to pay the increased taxation which has been suggested, the amount of property in the State will be doubled or perhaps even quadrupled, and I think the property in the State, aside from the mines, will be ample to support a State Government, when the time comes for its collection.

Mr. HAINES. And I say if we do not tax the mines then we must arrive at the conclusion that this whole affair is premature, because we have not the necessary amount of taxable property, outside of the mines, within the limits of this Territory, to carry on or to provide the requisite means to sustain a State Government. And I do not believe that any man in this Convention is so insane as to say we are prepared to sustain it with the small amount of property we have outside of our possessory property in the mines, without creating a burden so onerous that men could not possibly live under it. I do not think it is at all practicable.

Mr. WETHERILL. I regret that I have not the figures and estimates here by which to show the difference between the expense of a Territorial Government and the expense of a State Government; but I should like to see such an estimate, and I do not think that the difference would be found to be very great. I know that certainly some of the positions which have been taken here on that subject will not hold good. For instance, the cost of the erection of public buildings has been adverted to, but I do not suppose it is the intention of anybody to erect a capitol at the present time, and in the old Constitution it was provided specially that none should be erected for a term of six years. Moreover, the proposed aid to the Pacific Railroad was there estimated as a part of the State expenses, but I submit that that is wholly an unfair argument. And there would be still another curtailment of expenses, under the judicial system which we propose to establish.

Mr. DELONG. Our courts are to be self-sustaining.

Mr. WETHERILL. That is correct, and if that is done I think the expenses of the State Government will scarcely exceed those of the Territorial Government, or at any rate the difference will arise mainly by virtue of our not receiving twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars a year from the General Government. We would have to pay that ourselves, and I put it to every man on the floor whether he is not willing to do that. Even if we should continue under the Territorial Government, are not we willing to relieve the Federal Government, in these times, of that expense? I say that is a duty which we owe to ourselves and to our common country.

Mr. HAINES. From my experience in California, I am not prepared to agree with the gentleman in regard to the non-increase of taxation, provided we change our condition to that of a State Government. I believe that a consequent increase of expense and necessarily of taxation also, is pretty generally and satisfactorily understood by most of the members of the Convention. We expect that our taxes will be increased quite one half at least, and I think they will be double what they are to-day the moment we emerge from the condition of a Territory into that of a State. The experience of California has been enough, I think, to warn every man here not to embark in so grave an enterprise without first preparing the ways and means. During the argument we have heard here from time to time, the California mines have been referred to, but the fact has been finally brought out that the California mines have never been taxed. Now we do know with certainty that had the mines of California been taxed, had a provision been engrafted in the California Constitution at an early day taxing her mines, she would not to-day be groaning under her present burden. But what was the consequence? The people of California were unfairly represented. Members from mining counties did not feel the responsibility of legislation, since the burden of the Government did not fall upon them or their constituents. They were ready and eager to legislate and to vote away money freely which the people of other counties had to pay. And the Legislature lavished appropriations upon every frivolous thing, and squandered the people's money by millions.

Now I propose to make the language of this provision so plain that no man can be deceived. I do not propose to mystify it, so that my constituents may not vote against it. Tell the truth and do not attempt to mystify and deceive the people. Do not engraft into the Constitution any language other than what you mean, and tell the people that it means the same thing. Do not adopt a provision making one class of the people pay all the taxes, and tell them at the same time that you have done no such thing. It was argued in the other Convention, I remember, that with a slight change of the language we could tax the mines, and at the same time make the miners believe they would not be taxed. I do not want this Convention to take such a course as that. I hope all the amendments will be voted down, and then either let us accept the clause as adopted by the former Convention as a whole, or else let us go home satisfied that we do not want a Constitution, and be prepared to stamp our respective counties against it.

[Mr. DELONG in the Chair.]

MR. JOHNSON. I do not wish to take up the time, but upon the invitation of the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Wetherill,) I wish to present a few figures in relation to the expenses of a State Government. I have several times made estimates upon this subject, both subsequent to the adjournment of the former Convention, and while the result of its labors was still pending before the people, in the canvass, and here, since we have so far proceeded as to foreshadow the material results of our own labors; and the conclusion I have arrived at is, that this State Government can be administered for about the sum of three hundred thousand dollars a year, and that upon any sum less than that we cannot reasonably calculate to support it. I exclude from the calculation which I have made here, any computation of interest on the Pacific Railroad or other railroad bonds, and also any consideration of the cost of the erection of public buildings. And I think if gentlemen will take the frame-work of the Constitution, so far as we have it outlined, and the general ideas we have already as to the salaries of officers, and the various other expenses of the State, they will find that the sum I have named is not far from an approximate estimate of the expense of a State Government. Now it is said that we have in the Territory about twenty-five millions of property, exclusive of mining property, or the proceeds of the mines. I am willing to take that as the basis of an estimate—and whilst I concede that there has been considerable decrease in the taxable value of property in some portions of the Territory, I am willing also to concede that there has been an increase in other portions, to such an extent as to about keep pace with such diminution. I therefore take it as a basis, that in the approaching year there will be twenty-five millions of property, other than the proceeds of mines, and mining property in any sense, subject to taxation. Now I think it is not an under estimate to place the proceeds of the mines, if that were the basis for their taxation, independent of their value, at fifteen millions more. I do not suppose, in view of all the surroundings, that any gentleman, taking it from the present month to the first day of July next, would place the proceeds of the mines higher than that figure. Some gentlemen may possibly think it should be higher—and certainly none desire it to be so more than I do—but such is my opinion judging from the proceeds of last year. Among the reasons why I entertain this opinion regarding the subject of the proceeds, is this: I know, from my own personal knowledge, that in the county of Storey many of the mines will greatly increase in production over the last year; but the policy which has been inaugurated, by which the Gould and Curry mine is to be worked hereafter, will certainly result in a very great diminution of the amount of the proceeds of that mine.

It is now proposed not to impoverish the mine, as they say, but to work it more gradually, and we know that there are about twenty mills which have heretofore been working ores from that mine, that are now supplied with ores from other mines. All things considered, I think the most favorable estimate that can be made of the gross proceeds of the mines for the coming year is about fifteen millions of dollars. I believe about twelve millions of dollars was the amount last year, and if I am not correct in that I will be obliged to any gentleman who will correct me. Then these fifteen millions of dollars added to the twenty-five millions of dollars of other property, making the increase in some instances an off-set for the diminution in others, gives us an aggregate of forty millions of taxable property, exclusive of the taxation of the mines themselves, but including the same species of property which was taxed last year—that is, all the ranches and possessory rights to lands confessedly belonging to the Government—all the personal possessions of such lands, even if we are not inhibited by the terms of the Enabling Act from taxing them, and I declare that I really believe if we leave out of this clause those words “possessory claims,” and simply incorporate the word “mixed,” I have grave doubts as to whether we have the right to tax them. But I say, allowing that they are to be taxed, and the mines are not, but only the proceeds of the mines, then we have a basis of forty millions of dollars upon which to levy a tax for the support of the State Government. Now, gentlemen who are familiar with the matter of the collection of the revenue know that there are expenses incidental to such collection, and losses from delinquents. I think from my own observation and experience, and it has been somewhat considerable in that respect, that it is not an over-estimate to say that twenty-five per cent. should be deducted for delinquencies and the expenses of collection; so that, having forty millions as a basis of revenue, including the proceeds of the mines, and the expenses of the government being three hundred thousand dollars, to raise the requisite amount, deducting the twenty-five per cent. for delinquents and expenses of collection, we shall have to levy a tax amounting to four hundred thousand dollars, which gives us the three hundred thousand dollars, after allowing for delinquencies, and paying the expenses of collection. That is to say, we have necessarily to levy a tax of one hundred cents on each one hundred dollars.

WARWICK—JOHNSON.

Now on the other hand, how are we situated financially, as the Territorial laws stand at present? We have a taxable property, an estimate of which has already been given, and the expense of our Territorial Government is also pretty well ascertained and understood. But in addition to that, by the laws of the Territory, as we have been before informed, and as we all know, all the property in the Territory is taxed, including the mines. There is no law of Congress to the contrary, and the tax laws of the Territory now in force bear witness that all the mines have to be assessed and taxed under our present Territorial system. We have therefore under the Territorial organization the large revenue to be derived from this class of property, which in my judgment may be estimated at not less than forty millions of dollars more—that is, in addition to the property other than mining property, in the Territory. We have therefore sixty-five millions of dollars as the basis, upon which to raise a revenue for the Territorial Government, as against forty millions of dollars as the basis from which to raise a revenue to support a State Government, the expense being at the same time very greatly increased for the support of the State Government. Now if we remain under our Territorial form of government, a tax of thirty cents on the one hundred dollars (and it was reduced from sixty to thirty cents by the last Legislature, so that now we have a tax of only thirty cents on the one hundred dollars,) in the opinion of the best financiers, of those who are most conversant with the state of our affairs, will be amply sufficient to bear the expenses of our Territorial Government, and to pay the accruing interest on the public debt.

Therefore we have presented this question to go before the people, whether they will have a State Government, with a tax of one dollar on each one hundred dollars, or a Territorial Government which only requires a tax of thirty cents on each one hundred dollars. This I regard as a fair statement of the question involved in the propositions before the Convention, and I only refer to this matter in order that we may be able in advance to see the issues which we shall have to meet—those of us who advocate a State Government—when we go before the people. Upon this basis, either as friends or opponents of a State Government, we have, as frank and sincere men, to submit it to the people, that with a State Government they will be required to pay a tax of one hundred cents on the one hundred dollars, against a tax of only thirty cents on the one hundred dollars, under the Territorial Government.

Mr. WARWICK. Before the gentleman sits down, will he have the kindness to state the items upon which he estimates the aggregate expenses of the State Government? He states that the aggregate expense will be three hundred thousand dollars; will he give us the items that go to make up that amount?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not the figures here, but I have them at my office. I did intend to present them yesterday, but I felt somewhat as if I should be trespassing too much on the time of the Convention, and I forgot to bring them with me this morning.

Mr. WARWICK. There can be no subject of greater interest to the Convention than that, and I desire at least, for the information of the Convention, to have those items presented. I ask the gentleman to give us the larger items, at least. It is proposed that the judiciary shall be self-sustaining, and I would like to know if the expense of the judiciary does not go to make up some of this account, and if therefore that item of expense does not go to sustain the argument of the gentleman upon the subject which we are discussing.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe I have heard that word self-sustaining used on only two occasions before, in relation to the judiciary. I heard it used once in the Judiciary Committee, and once by the gentleman who now occupies the Chair, (Mr. DeLong.) With those exceptions I have heard of no action, either by the Judiciary Committee, or by anybody else, by which it was proposed to make the judiciary self-sustaining.

Friday.]

JOHNSON—BROSNAN—HAWLEY.

[July 15.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. (Mr. DeLONG.) Was it not proposed that there should be a judge's fee or a court fee, so as to make the litigants pay the expense of the judiciary—imposing a fee, to be paid into the salary fund for the support of the judges?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think I heard that subject remarked upon by the gentleman himself, in the Committee on the Judiciary, but the matter, if I recollect aright, was not discussed, or if it was, then it was whilst I was not present. There was but one occasion on which the proposition to make the judiciary self-sustaining was seriously discussed. I did hear the gentleman now in the Chair make a remark to that effect in the Judiciary Committee, but it never assumed so serious a phase as to be the subject of discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Because we never reached that part of the Article.

Mr. JOHNSON. That may be true, but I am speaking only of the action which has been taken thus far by the Convention, or which has been taken thus far by the Committee on the Judiciary. And taking that action for a guide, as well as the action of the last Convention, I see nothing to foreshadow the idea of making the judiciary self-sustaining. And here let me remark that there was some such suggestion in the last Convention—and in referring to that I know I am out of order, but I speak only by leave—but it seemed to meet with universal reprobation, in the committee in which it was brought up.

Mr. BROSNAN. Not in the committee of which I was a member.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; it was in the Legislative Committee. An objection was raised by Judge Ralston, I remember, that satisfied me as well as the rest of the committee. The proposition was simply this, that the Courts should be open to all men, without any taxation whatever; that the law was sufficiently burdensome at the best, and that all parties, whether rich or poor, should be allowed to come into the courts and not, upon crossing the threshold, be met with a rebuff, or denied permission to enter unless they could pay a large sum of money as the price of obtaining justice. I was opposed to that proposition then, and I should be opposed to it now, and if it had been seriously entertained in the Judiciary Committee, I should certainly have given expression to the views I now entertain. I think we should impose no tax upon parties litigant, but that the courts should be supported by a taxation of all the property of the State alike, as is done in other States, leaving the courts open and free to all. I should certainly be opposed to imposing any tax upon the litigants, in order to make the courts self-sustaining.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. But there never has been any objection raised in California to the mode of sustaining the two District Courts in San Francisco, the judges of which have been paid by the small amounts paid in as fees by litigants.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know how that may be; it was some years since I was in California.

Mr. BROSNAN. It is the established rule in San Francisco; they pay a fee of three dollars, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. I believe that is the rule all over the State.

Mr. JOHNSON. It would take a much larger amount, to support our judiciary, than could possibly be raised, I conceive, from such a fee. I have made an estimate of the expense of sustaining our judiciary as we propose to establish it. The exact figures I have forgotten, but if it is to be supported by a tax on the counties then it would diminish the State expenses to that extent, but at the same time it adds to the county expenses, so that it is as broad as it is long, because the people in the end have it to pay, and it makes no material difference to them whether they pay it as a State or a county tax. I apprehend that the Supreme Court judges will receive a salary of not less than seven or eight thousand dollars; I have heard no expression of opinion on this subject from members of the Convention, but such is my own view. But when you come to add to that the salaries of the District Judges in the several districts, some ten or eleven of which we propose to establish, I believe it will be a heavy burthen either upon the counties or upon the State, and, as I before remarked, it is just as broad as it is long in either case, being an expense and charge to the people.

I think if gentlemen will themselves make the estimate, they will find that they cannot fall short of this amount of three hundred thousand dollars for the expenses of the State Government, allowing for all reasonable expenditures, and there will be some for which no items presented in an estimate could provide. I have been compelled in an official relation to make estimates heretofore in the State of California, and I know that in some cases the estimates were exceeded by actual expenditures perhaps two or three hundred thousand dollars, and I cannot think that any proper estimate can be made showing that less than three hundred thousand dollars will be necessary to pay the expenses of our State Government for one year, even if it is economically administered. But taking that as a basis—and I present these views to give the Convention a basis merely—even if the taxation of the State is limited by the Convention, we shall have to go before the people and defend the instrument upon this hypothesis, that the taxation, even for State purposes, is to be enhanced from thirty to one hundred cents on the hundred dollars.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask one question. I was making this same calculation a few months ago, for myself, and I found that taking everything into the account, the taxable property of the State only amounts to twenty-five millions of dollars. Is not that the entire valuation now, if we do not tax the mines?

Friday,]

JOHNSON—HAINES—BROSNAN—EARL—CHAPIN.

[July 15.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I add the gross proceeds of the mines, which makes it forty millions. Of course if that is not done we have only twenty-five millions.

Mr. HAINES. Does the gentleman from Ormsby base his calculations upon the last assessment?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAINES. The gentleman certainly does not believe that it will amount to as much another year?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir. Whilst it is well understood, and generally conceded, that in some counties the assessments of this year will fall short of last year, I am willing, for the sake of the argument, to admit that the increase in other portions of the Territory will equal that decrease, so that I believe it is not an unjust or unfair estimate, founded upon all the facts and surroundings, that we have a basis of twenty-five millions, exclusive of mining property. I think that would be a just and proper estimate, and upon that basis I arrive at these conclusions.

There is another matter which I desire to make myself understood upon, if I have not been heretofore. I find that some members have been disposed to regard my remarks in the light of a menace, to the effect that unless they should adopt the views which I have advocated I would exert my influence against the adoption of the Constitution, and a State organization. Now I have said only this, that I did not desire a State Government which would not be self-sustaining, and I would be an ingrate to the people who sent me here, and false to the teachings of my past life, if I should dare to go before the people and advocate the adoption of a State Government, unless it could be shown that we can support that government, by a limited increase or addition to the present rates of taxation, in order to obtain the great advantages which we all freely admit are to be derived from a State Government. I wish to be understood when I assert that if we frame and adopt here a State Constitution under which the taxation of the people shall be equal, and by which the people are not excessively taxed, I shall be in favor of it; but if, on the contrary, the people are to be unequally, or onerously taxed by its provisions, I cannot ask them to vote for the instrument. That is as far as I can go, as an individual, and I think in that I speak the sentiments of a large proportion of the people of this Territory.

Mr. BROSNAN. And of the Convention too.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think so. We have come here from all parts of the Territory, and, to use the language which I did in the last campaign, we have come here for a noble purpose, without reward, or hope of reward, but honestly to represent the constituents who have sent us here. Under these circumstances I do not think it can be imputed to any man that, for the sake of personal ends, or for the purpose of securing certain advantages, he would foist a government upon the people which would be burdensome or grievous. I have formed too high an estimate of each and every member of the Convention to believe any such thing, and I do not desire any remarks which I have made, or may offer, to be by any possibility construed into a suspicion of an imputation that any man here is actuated by any such ignoble motive or purpose. On the contrary, I attribute to every member the holier and nobler purpose of desiring to construct the framework of a State Government which shall be the best that can be devised, and which shall exist after we shall cease to be.

Such are my views, and it is in advocacy of the opinions which I and other members entertain, that I have deemed it necessary to urge upon the Convention the propriety, yea the necessity, of taxing all property alike. I think the facts and figures within the reach of every member of the Convention, as well as those I have presented, or any other basis of calculation which any gentleman can present, must prove the necessity of pursuing that course.

Mr. EARL. Do I understand that we have an amendment now pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Yes, sir; and then an amendment to an amendment.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

The Secretary read the amendments pending, the question being first on the amendment offered by Mr. Kennedy to the amendment by Mr. Nourse, striking out the words "possessions and possessory rights," and inserting the words "real, personal, and mixed," so that the section would read:

Sec. 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real, personal, and mixed, except such only as may be exempt by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes.

Mr. EARL. I shall vote against the amendment although if I were certain that we should not have a certain other amendment I would not. As it is, I shall vote against it.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on Mr. Kennedy's amendment, and the vote was—yeas, 8; nays, 24—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Brosnan, DeLong, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, and Parker—8.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Kinkead, Lockwood, Murdock, Nourse, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—24.

Mr. CHAPIN. I now move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse,) by substituting the following:

Sec. 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real, personal, and possessory, according to its true value in money, excepting such property as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes; provided, that in the taxation of mines only the proceeds thereof shall be taxed.

I have only a very few remarks to make upon the amendment. Quite a number of gentlemen who have submitted and advocated other propositions and amendments, have admitted that they believed this to be the true system of deriving revenue from the mines, and the one that would hereafter have to be adopted. This substitute leaves it open for the Legislature to tax the bullion, if they please, or by putting the property-owners, or the owners of mines, under oath, or in any other way they see fit, to get at the correct proceeds of the mines. The Federal Government has seen proper to adopt this same method, and I fully believe that it is the true method for us to adopt here. Then we relieve entirely the prospecting miners from that taxation which we know would become so heavy a burden upon them, and which would raise up an opposition to our Constitution so powerful that it would be certain to defeat it. We relieve those miners, and at the same time destroy that opposition. Now I am willing to come in and join with other gentlemen in supporting a proposition of this kind, and so have the question settled in our fundamental law, in such a way that there can be no misunderstanding about it. Gentlemen have complained very much here about the uncertainty of the various propositions which have been submitted before the Convention, and have stated that a year or two might elapse before the various questions involved would be settled by the Supreme Court, so as to know whether the mines were to be taxed or not, and so as to know what constitutes a mine, and whether or not mines are to be considered taxable property, etc. But this amendment would settle the whole question at once. I am in favor of adopting something which will be definite and conclusive, and therefore I hope this amendment will prevail.

Mr. BELDEN. Does the gentleman mean to provide for taxing the net or the gross proceeds of the mines?

Mr. CHAPIN. The amendment leaves that to the Legislature entirely; that is my idea.

Mr. FITCH. I have a proposition to make and not a speech. I propose as these various amendments are offered, to be voted up, or voted down, that we take the ayes and noes, and settle the matter one way or the other, without further debate. We have debated this subject two days now, and I think that is long enough.

The PRESIDENT. Then I suggest that it would perhaps be better to withdraw these amendments and vote first on the one offered by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse.)

Mr. CHAPIN. No, sir; I want the ayes and noes on this amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. BANKS. I like the style of that amendment, and its spirit, and in fact it meets with my approbation entirely, but I would be glad if the gentleman from Storey would withdraw it for the present, provided it is understood that we come to a vote upon that amendment ultimately. I am willing to extend the courtesy to the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) to have his proposition voted upon first. It will be observed that his proposition, if adopted, will not prevent the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Storey, which is a substitute. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it, and give an opportunity to vote on the amendment, upon which it is desired by the gentleman from Washoe that the sense of the Convention be tested.

Mr. COLLINS. I hope this amendment will be voted down. I do not like it, either in its principle or in its practice. I think that when we do lay down the foundation for collecting the revenue of the State Government, we should do so with an eye to the greatest good of all the interests of the State. Has the gentleman investigated in relation to the influence which this wholesale taxing of the proceeds of the mines would have upon the mines themselves—upon the mines of the Territory generally? As I said the other day, we must judge of the value of any given act of government by the influence which it has upon the industry and morality, the wealth and the education of the community—by the amount of general well being which it produces. Now what will be the first tendency of this provision? Why, sir, the first tendency will be to retard the development of our mines. Every one knows that just as fast as our mines augment in value, they are gobbled up by capitalists who esteem three, four, five, and six per cent. as a valuable consideration. And if you tax the proceeds of the mines only, they will reason thus: "In a few years a railroad communication will be opened, wood and water will be abundant, and labor will be down. In a few years all the productions of California, necessary for the consumption of the laborer, and for working the mines, will be at a low figure. Therefore let us lock up the mines to-day, and to-morrow, and this year, and the next year, and when we find all these things readily available, we can reap the benefit and enjoy the advantages. Until then let us lock up our mines." That will be the view taken by the capitalists, and the State will be the sufferer all the time.

Then again, if you are to tax the mines on their production, I say the fairest way will be to tax them, not on the gross proceeds, but on the net proceeds. Here is a mine from which they are taking out bullion to the tune of say forty, fifty, sixty, or perhaps a hundred thousand dollars a week, and every dollar they take out, inspired by the hope of better times coming, costs them, perhaps, one dollar and ten cents. But, on the other hand, here is another mine, side by side with that, and every dollar taken out of the second mine costs the owners only six bits. And yet both would be charged the same under this taxation of the gross proceeds. I ask if that is dealing justly by the miners? I ask if such invidious distinctions ought to be made? It seems to me not. The fairer way would be to tax the net proceeds. And I ask what will be the probable result during the first fiscal year of our new, forthcoming State? It is very doubtful if any considerable revenue would be derived from this source. If the State Government shall be launched, which we are to-day engaged in framing and perfecting, we should look well to the resources we have for maintaining and sustaining that government. If we find that surface property is unequal to the task of sustaining it, then we should look around and discover, if possible, where we can find other property. And if we have no confidence in the Legislature which is to follow us, we should devise such ways and means, and mature such plans, as will produce or secure the greatest possible amount of revenue with the least possible detriment to the interests of the State.

NOURSE—DELONG—DUNNE—CHAPIN—TOZER.

The fairest way that I can see is to meet this issue squarely and at the present time. It is to give the Legislature the full right to tax any and all kinds of property. I only desire the wording of this section to be such that no two good lawyers, who are in pursuit of the truth, can have two opinions upon the construction of that section, and I am willing to leave all the balance in the hands of the Legislature that is to be. I think I understand this much, that any Legislature, I do not care what the pressure from the mines or from the agricultural interests shall be upon it; I care not what pledges may have been forced from its members while they were candidates running for office, that they would not tax the ranches, or would not tax the mines, when that Legislature assembles here and assumes the responsibility of controlling the financial interests of the State; when the representatives shall meet together here with all the pressure for money upon them, with even their own per diem and mileage at stake, and all the other forces that will press upon them at once, I do not doubt that they will grasp hold of every kind of property that is within their reach, for the purpose of taxation. I say therefore, make the language clear and distinct, and leave all the future to the Legislature. Do not say to them that they shall not tax mines, or shall not tax ranches, or shall not tax the proceeds gross or the proceeds net—though I am not so sure but they will tax all of them, for they will have the same right to tax the mines and the proceeds of the mines, as they have to tax the ranches and the proceeds of the ranches—I do not know but the Legislature will do all these things, but I only say that we ought to leave the Legislature, when it shall be convened, power in its discretion to tax them all if necessary. I will conclude by expressing the hope that the amendment of my excellent friend, whose head is nearly always right, and whose heart never fails him, will be voted down.

Mr. NOURSE. I desire to quote very briefly from the Auditor's report here. I find from that that under the law of the Legislature taxing the gross proceeds of the mines, the whole amount of all the property assessed under that act was only four millions of dollars, while it is well known that the gross proceeds of the Ophir, and Gould & Curry mines alone, last year amounted certainly to over five millions. I refer to this only to show what the practical operation of such a provision would be.

The question was stated on the amendment offered by Mr. Chapin.

Mr. NOURSE called for a division of the question.

Mr. DELONG. I understand that the sole difference between the first part of these amendments is, that the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) says in his amendment "possessory rights," and the amendment of my colleague (Mr. Chapin,) says "all property, both real, personal and possessory."

Mr. DUNNE. What does the difference amount to? I make the point of order that it cannot be so divided; if it is divided there is nothing left of the amendment.

Mr. CHAPIN. It certainly cannot be in order to call for a division of that amendment. I offered that as an amendment to an amendment, and the gentleman has no right to claim a division of my amendment.

Mr. TOZER. Before the vote is taken on the amendment of my colleague, (Mr. Chapin,) I wish to say a word or two, although I had firmly resolved that I would not offer a single remark further on the question before the Convention. But I must say, Mr. President, that I consider this last proposition as the most objectionable of any and all that have been offered here, from first to last. Sir, the constituency which my colleague, together with myself, represents on this floor, will most unanimously put the seal of their disapprobation, by their vote, and in any way and every way in their power, upon such a proposition, when it shall be submitted to them. A provision for a tax upon the proceeds of the mines, without even the words "net proceeds" incorporated in it, is an outrage. I characterized it as such last year in a few remarks which I had the honor to submit to that Convention, and I characterize it as such now. It is an outrage which I should very much regret to see this Convention, after the mature deliberation it has given to the subject, commit upon the mining interests of this Territory.

The PRESIDENT. A point of order has been raised upon this amendment, and upon reading the two amendments, the Chair thinks they are substantially the same, with the exception of the proviso.

Mr. NOURSE. I asked for a division because I am willing to vote for the first part of the amendment of the gentleman from Storey—so far as it declares that all property, real, personal and possessory, shall be taxed.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair was proceeding to decide the point of order. If the gentleman desires to be heard upon that point before the decision is made, I will be happy to hear him.

Mr. EARL. I understood that the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) wanted his proposition voted upon first.

The PRESIDENT. Objection was made to that.

Mr. EARL. I would like to have an expression of the Convention first upon that proposition, and I hope it will be so voted upon.

Mr. DELONG. Now gentlemen have contended here that the words "real and personal" do not include mining claims. Then the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) proposed the word "mixed," and it was thought there was then no room for doubt, but that that would cover everything in the State in the way of property. But the Convention voted down that gentleman's amendment, and now my colleague (Mr. Chapin) steps in with his amendment, and says "all property, real, personal and possessory, shall be taxed." Now, in the name of heaven, can any gentleman tell me of any kind of property that is not included in that? But when he goes further than that, and specifies the proceeds of the mines, then I say he commits the same error that the former Convention did.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon the point of order.

Mr. DELONG. I am trying to show that there are two propositions here, and I want a separate vote upon each. I propose to show that the point of order is not well taken, first because the proposition of my colleague (Mr. Chapin) contains two distinct propositions, and then because it is the right of any member to call for a division. It is necessary to show that there are two propositions, in order to lay the basis for the right to a division.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair does not dispute that there are two propositions contained in the amendment, but the remaining question is whether the former part, upon which the vote is first to be taken, is not substantially the same as that contained in the proposition for which it is to be substituted.

Mr. DELONG. The Chair may not dispute what other gentlemen may dispute. The gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) made the point of order that it is not divisible because there are not two propositions.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the gentleman from Humboldt to raise the point of order because a division left nothing to vote upon. Will the gentleman from Humboldt state his point of order again.

Mr. DUNNE. I will state that the point of order as I made it, is as the gentleman from Storey understands it, though if I had recognized the distinction I would have made it differently.

After some further discussion upon the point of order,

The PRESIDENT decided that the call for a division must be entertained, and that the first question was on Mr. Chapin's proposed amendment, down to and including the words "charitable purposes."

Mr. DELONG. Now, sir, I wish to turn the tables upon those gentlemen who argued last night, and continued to argue, until the "wee sma' hours" of the night, that they did not want to legislate invidiously against any class of men or any class of property—that all they wanted was to adopt that comprehensive term which will embrace the class of property which they say has escaped taxation in California. My colleague (Mr. Chapin) says in his amendment that all real, personal, and possessory property shall be taxed. Can anything more be asked than that? And if you go further, and say that the proceeds of mines shall be taxed, are not you making as invidious a distinction as if you were to say that "mines and mining property shall be taxed?" and then that "farms and farming property shall be taxed?" I am willing as a compromise between us and these gentlemen who have denied that all property is either real or personal, to put in another class of property called "possessory" property. I am willing to incorporate that word "possessory," so that no man in the Legislature, without plainly violating the obligation of his oath, can escape from the requirement that everything in the shape of property shall be taxed. I am willing to do that for the sake of harmonious action and to reconcile the conflict of sentiment. But further than that, if I am asked to put in mining proceeds, and leave out farming proceeds, or to take out one class of property and allow another to remain in, if I am asked to mention one species of property invidiously and not to mention another, I say no! never! never! Sir, I say it is unjust, and unfair, on the part of the representatives of other interests here, in my humble opinion, to ask us to do any such thing. I hope the first part of the amendment of my colleague will be adopted, and the balance of it rejected: and then we shall have the original section, only amended so as to provide that all property in this State, "real, personal, and possessory," shall be equally and ratably assessed and taxed. And if gentlemen ask anything further than that, they cannot get it from me, for one.

Mr. NOURSE. Upon second thought, it seems to me better that the proposition of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin) should be voted upon as an entirety, and for one, I should like to see the two propositions tested. I have made the motion for a division of the question, but as I should like to see the two systems fairly tested, I will withdraw the call for a division unless there is objection.

Several members objected.

Mr. DELONG. Under all parliamentary rules, and in all parliamentary bodies of which

Friday.] DeLONG—EARL—PARKER—BANKS—TOZER—NOURSE—CHAPIN—KENNEDY. [July 15.

I have been a member before, the right exists in any member to claim a division.

The PRESIDENT. There is no point of order before the Convention. The Chair has already decided that the amendment is susceptible of a division.

Mr. DeLONG. But the difficulty is, we are working under Jefferson's Manual, and under that it is not the right of the member to call for a division, but the House alone can direct a division. If there is objection to a division we have to obtain the consent of the House for such a division. I will make that motion.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Storey is correct, and the question will be on the division of the amendment.

Mr. EARL. I shall vote for a division of the question, and I will say that if the amendment is voted down, there will be a substitute offered not to tax the mines, except those of a certain value.

The question was taken on the motion that the amendment offered by Mr. Chapin be divided, and, on a division, that motion was not agreed to—ayes, 16; noes, 16.

The question was stated on the entire amendment proposed by Mr. Chapin.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and the vote resulted—yeas, 4; nays, 29—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Chapin, Crosman, and Dunne—4.

Nays—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Earl, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—29.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. In order to get a final vote before the hour for the recess, I move the previous question. I do not desire to shut off amendments, but I desire to get a vote.

Mr. BANKS. I ask leave to say just one word.

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order, the previous question having been moved.

Mr. WARWICK. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. NOURSE. I think if we come to a vote upon this, there will be no attempt to present any other amendment, if this is lost.

Mr. PARKER. I withdraw the call for the previous question, with the consent of the Convention.

Mr. BANKS. I propose this amendment: I move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) by adding the following thereto:

"Provided, that no tax shall be imposed on any mining claim, or possessory right thereto, which, at the time of making the assessment, has a market value in money of less than — dollars per foot."

Mr. CHAPIN. I move to fill the blank with the words "twenty-five."

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to amend by making it five dollars.

Mr. TOZER. I move to amend by making it fifteen thousand dollars.

The PRESIDENT. It will be competent, if the amendment shall be adopted, to fill the blank thereafter.

Mr. DeLONG. Now suppose I have five thousand dollars worth of mining ground at a dollar a foot—of course, under this proposition, it would not be taxed. But if another man has five thousand dollars invested in ground worth a thousand dollars a foot, has he got to be taxed, while I escape?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair does not suppose that the gentleman expects a categorical answer.

Mr. FITCH. That is where the "poor miner" comes in.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will state why I am willing to vote for "five dollars" in that blank. I am willing to exempt all claims worth under five dollars per foot in order to make a compromise here between the various views and opinions which gentlemen have expressed. I am willing to give a bounty, to that extent, to mining claims. That class of property being the principal property and the peculiar interest of this Territory, I am willing to say that all mining claims valued under five dollars per foot shall be exempted from taxation. The Convention refuses to insert words which I consider necessary, to include all property, but I am willing to go further, and to make this compromise, that every man who owns a claim which he cannot get five dollars a foot for in the market, shall be exempt from taxation upon that claim. I do not care whether he has one hundred or one hundred thousand feet, if the claim itself is not worth over five dollars a foot, I am willing, in order that this question may be settled in some way, to exempt it from taxation. But the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has claimed that these claims are not property, and now he says, in effect, that they are.

Mr. DeLONG. I say, only, that if they are property when they are worth five dollars a foot, then they are equally property when they are worth five cents a foot. I have not said they were worth anything, or were property; I say, only, that if they are property, no matter how much they are worth, they should not be exempt. Whether they are worth five thousand, one thousand, or one hundred dollars, or worth only a dollar a foot, makes no difference; if they are property at all, they should be taxed.

Mr. KENNEDY. The gentleman maintains, as I understand his argument, that a mining claim is not property and cannot be taxed as property. Then I ask why is he so anxious not to have this provision in the Constitution?

Mr. DeLONG. Because it operates unequally on the two classes of mining claims. That is the reason.

Mr. KENNEDY. If it is not property, it cannot be taxed at all. If this provision is placed in the Constitution, we nevertheless

Friday.]

DELONG—KENNEDY.

[July 15.

cannot tax a mining claim, unless it is property.

Mr. DELONG. That is so.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now the only reason the gentleman can have for opposing this provision, as I understand it, is this: that by placing this provision in the Constitution, men who have mines worth over five dollars a foot will be driven to the expense of a lawsuit in order to test the question whether or not their taxation is Constitutional.

Mr. DELONG. No; but if it is held to be constitutional it will operate unfairly upon the two classes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, admit that it will, and I do not deny it. I have contended that all men owning property, whether mining claims or ranches, whether their claims are worth a thousand dollars or a dollar a foot, should be taxed. But I do see this difficulty: that there is a conflict of ideas and opinions here—that there is a conflict between those who represent exclusively the mining interests, and those who represent exclusively the agricultural interests. Now I stand here as a representative of both interests, for we claim to have both in our county, and I am willing, for the sake of a compromise, to place in the Constitution this provision, exempting all mines which are worth under five dollars a foot, not upon the principle of exempting any particular class of property from taxation, but on the same principle upon which bounties are offered and given. It is made a bounty to the miner, and when a party has a mining claim which in the market will bring him over five dollars per foot, he is no longer your "poor miner," but he is a man who can well afford to pay taxes. But up to that point, mining being the principal interest of this Territory, we say we are willing to pay him a bounty to the extent of exempting him from taxation.

I have talked with gentlemen from outside counties here—and when I speak of outside counties I mean those which are distant from the capital, of course, and do not refer to them in regard to their intrinsic value—and those gentlemen have told me of claims, the rock from which, as far as it is already developed, they are willing to guarantee would pay as richly as that of better known claims which are worth a hundred dollars a foot, and yet at the present time those claims have no market value above five dollars a foot. This being the condition of those mines, having no actual market value, I do not think they would be taxed in any case, but in order to take away any suspicion that those "poor miners" might have, that we intend to burden them with taxation, I say I am willing, for one, to fix in the Constitution a definite value, under which no taxation of mining claims shall be allowed. I think we have a perfect right to do it. We have a right in the Constitution to say what shall be taxed and to exclude any property we please from taxation; and in order to encourage mining I am willing to say in the Constitution that no mines under a certain value shall be taxed.

Mr. DELONG. I think the gentleman from Lyon will be able to satisfy any class of his constituents that he has fairly represented their interests, for he voted against this proposition once, on the ground that it was an invidious distinction, and now he votes for it, as a bounty to poor miners.

Mr. KENNEDY. But I explained that the miners in our county had said that this clause in the old Constitution was taxing a hole in the ground, and although I believed that that was not the case, but that a hole in the ground was not a mine, yet I was in favor of using such language as would remove any doubt or suspicion which might exist in the minds of the miners.

Mr. DELONG. Yes, sir; and then the gentleman said he wanted to employ the word "mixed," because the words "real and personal" he thought did not cover all kinds of property, in which he disagreed however with Bouviere and Blackstone. I read from the books here the definitions of property, and the authority is not contradicted. The gentleman said he meant to include every class of property possible to be included, and that must of course include all property in mining claims, whether worth five dollars a foot or any other amount. In that I suppose he represented the agricultural interest of his county, and now he represents the mining interest by advocating an amendment to exempt five dollar mines. Therefore I say he can claim to have represented all sides. Now whenever you depart from principle you depart from the only safe landmark, and this principle which the gentleman now abandons I think would have been a good one to stand by. The principle is undoubtedly correct that every man should pay on all the property he possesses, according to a true and equal ratio, his share of the expenses for the support of the government under which he lives; and any law, much more any fundamental law, must be wrong which does not recognize that principle as a general rule. If anything is to be exempted from taxation let it be exempted by the Legislature, or if the Legislature deems it best, let all be put in, and if anything is exempted from taxation at all, let it be for the reason that it cannot be taxed. But let us declare in the Constitution that all property must be taxed according to its value. If the gentleman says a hole in the ground is not property, but a mine is property, then I insist that the hole in the ground will not be taxed, without it is a mine, and there is no necessity for any provision about it in the Constitution.

But the gentleman from Lyon does not understand my allusions to the fact that mines are not property, in the sense in which we are here speaking of property. I insist that a mine is property, but I say it is property belonging to the United States Government, and not property belonging to an individual here, which, under our Enabling Act, we can reach for the purpose of taxation. That is my idea. I have concurred with the gentleman's views in some respects, and I am willing to aid by my vote to carry out his idea of taxing all property, when we can reach it as property; but it does not seem to me that we can reach the property in the mines which belongs not to the individual, but to the government of the United States.

Mr. EARL. My colleague (Mr. DeLong) seems clearly to take the ground that the mines are not property, from the fact that the title is in the General Government. Now, I admit that the title is in the General Government; but the title to my ranch also is in the General Government, yet cannot the State tax my improvements and possessions, and all my right in that ranch, to their full value? Now, I propose to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse,) and for the five-dollar clause offered by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks,) also.

Mr. FITCH. I move the previous question.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh no, no!

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a point of order, and by way of inquiry, I desire to know whether the previous question will extend to the passage of the original proposition—to the adoption of the original section as printed here.

The PRESIDENT. It covers the whole matter before the Convention.

Mr. KENNEDY. If the previous question is carried, cannot we vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt?

The PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly; that is the first question pending. The amendments having been disposed of, the previous question then recurs back to the original matter.

Mr. EARL. I rise to a point of order.

Several gentlemen addressed the Chair, amidst some confusion.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will have to raise another point of order in about ten minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. EARL. I have the floor; I had not yielded it when my colleague demanded the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair the gentleman certainly had taken his seat, and under parliamentary usage he must be considered as having resigned the floor.

Mr. FITCH. I have no desire to impede the offering of amendments, and if it is the understanding that there is to be no debate I will withdraw the demand for the previous question; otherwise I will not.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Very well; let that be understood.

Mr. FITCH. I withdraw the previous question.

The question was stated on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, and the yeas and nays were demanded.

Mr. KENNEDY. Should not the blank be filled before adopting the amendment?

The PRESIDENT. It can be filled at any time.

Mr. TOZER. I desire to say one word only. I believe it is a fundamental principle of constitutional law—it is in the Constitution of the United States, in the Constitution of California, and in every other State Constitution that I have examined—that all taxation shall be equal. Now, sir, you propose by adopting this amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) to levy a tax upon mines of a certain value, and to exclude from taxation mines of a certain other value. Suppose you fill the blanks in this amendment with five dollars? One man in my neighborhood has a claim worth a little less than five dollars a foot, and another, in his immediate vicinity, has another worth five dollars and a half, or eight, or ten dollars a foot. They both have the same kind of claim, but one is subject to taxation by constitutional enactment, and the other is exempt. I protest against that as a violation of fundamental principles.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, and the vote was—yeas, 9; nays, 24—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crossman, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, and Kennedy—9.

Nays—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Brosnan, DeLong, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Mudock, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—24.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the voting—

Mr. HAINES. (when his name was called,) inquired if the amendment included the proposition to exempt mines worth five dollars per foot.

The PRESIDENT replied that the blank was to be filled thereafter.

Mr. HAINES. I vote no.

Mr. COLLINS. I understood it so, and if not, I shall change my vote.

Mr. HAWLEY. Unless the language of the section is to be changed, and that portion of it stricken out which provides for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, I shall have to vote no.

The PRESIDENT. I will take occasion to explain my vote, although I do not suppose it is necessary after what I have already said. I have maintained the one distinct proposition that all property, whether merely possessory or otherwise, should pay its just proportion of taxation, and upon that principle every mining claim, whether worth one dollar or one hundred dollars a foot, should be taxed according to its value. That is the position I have universally advocated, and I cannot sacrifice a matter of principle to a mere question of expediency.

The result of the vote having been announced as above stated,

The question was stated on the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse.

Mr. HAINES. I move the previous question.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh no, no!

The PRESIDENT stated the question: Shall the main question be now put?

Mr. BANKS. I have a privilege in this case which I wish to exercise. I wish my protest against the previous question to be entered upon the journal. ["Question, question!"] It is an outrage to pass a Constitution under the gag law.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary will enter the gentleman's protest.

Mr. KENNEDY. My colleague (Mr. Crosmán) has an amendment which I would like to hear read—[cries of question]—for information only, that is all.

Mr. HAINES. I have called for the previous question, and I want the question put. I want my rights here, and I ask if it is debatable for an hour.

The PRESIDENT. No debate is in order, but if there is no objection made the amendment must be read.

Mr. DELONG. I rise to a point of order, and it is that the gentleman cannot ask for the reading of that amendment under the previous question.

Mr. CROSMAN. I had risen to read it when the previous question was moved, and I supposed I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will repeat that if there is no objection the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon will be read for information.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. I object.

The PRESIDENT. Then the question is, shall the main question be now put?

Mr. KENNEDY. What is the main question? Is it the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe?

The PRESIDENT. That is the first question.

Mr. CROSMAN. I would ask, is it the understanding of the mover of the previous question that it will cut off all debate?

Mr. DELONG. Certainly; it cuts it all off.

Mr. CROSMAN. The effect would certainly be to prevent all argument upon the main question, as well as all further amendments.

Mr. NOURSE. If that is the case, I hope the call for the previous question will be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has already stated that the previous question cuts off all debate.

Mr. DELONG. I trust the Chair will take cognizance of the time.

Mr. HAINES. With the permission of the Convention, I will withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. If there is no objection it will be withdrawn.

Mr. FITCH. I object. I want to see it put.

The PRESIDENT. The hour of five o'clock having arrived, the Convention, under the rule, is at recess until seven o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met at seven o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

TAXATION.

The PRESIDENT. When the Convention took a recess this afternoon the business under consideration was the call for the previous question by the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Haines.) That gentleman had proposed to withdraw it, but the gentleman who had seconded the motion (Mr. Fitch) positively declined to consent to the withdrawal. The question before the Convention now is—Shall the main question be now put?

The question was taken and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CROSMAN. I desire to inquire whether further amendments are now in order.

The PRESIDENT. An amendment to the amendment pending is in order.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse.)

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real, personal, and possessory; provided that in order to secure the development of mines no assessment shall be made of mining claims of a less marketable value (at the time of making the assessment) than five dollars per foot; excepting, further, such property as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, or charitable purposes.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold that this amendment is not in order, because it is in substance and effect the same matter which has already been voted upon. It is substantially the same as the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks.)—neither more nor less.

Mr. CHAPIN. The blank is filled, which makes a difference.

The PRESIDENT. The blank is filled, it is true, but I regard that as making no substantial difference, because the blank could have been filled at any time in the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt.

Mr. BANKS. I regret exceedingly to hear this decision of the Chair, which operates not only against the gentleman who offers the amendment, but several others who agree with him, and therefore I am compelled to appeal from the decision. I will state my grounds of appeal. The first proposition contained a blank, which left it doubtful as to the amount or price of the claim to be exempted, which may have led some members to vote against it, but this is distinct and specific as to the amount. That is a difference, and, being different, I think, according to all parliamentary law, it should be entertained.

After considerable discussion upon the question of order involved the question was taken—Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?—and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 23; noes, 5.

MURDOCK—NOURSE.

[July 15.]

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have sent up an amendment, and I wish to inquire whether it is in order.

The PRESIDENT. It will be in order unless the same matter has already been voted down.

The SECRETARY read the amendment, as follows:

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, excepting such property only as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, or charitable purposes."

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that, by this amendment, the section would be left to stand as it now reads, except that the words "real and personal" would be stricken out.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will explain my views on this subject. I have been sitting here and listening to the debates as they have progressed, and have watched them very closely, in all their diverse windings and forms; and it strikes me we have altogether mistaken our calling. As I intimated last night, we have not come here to legislate. Now, sir, in that amendment, I propose to strike out from the original, the words "real and personal," following the word "property." I suppose when we have said "all property," we cannot make it any stronger by defining the different kinds of property. I called the attention of the Convention last night to that point, stating that I considered the words "mines and mining property," "surplusage, and I stand just there now. I am willing that "all property" should be taxed, and I do not want any other definition. I understand "all property" to mean all property. You may say "personal and real property," or "mines and mining property," or "ranches and ranching property," or "personal chattels," and all that—the shoemaker with his kit, and the tailor with his shears, and his bodkin, and his patterns, and so on to the end of the chapter—but do you make it any stronger than you would to say "all property," and there stop? Now when you come to that one thing, and say that "all property shall be taxed equally," what more do you want to do? Why do you want to say "all personal property," or "all mixed property," or "chattels real," and "chattels personal," or anything else? I am satisfied to say "all property," and I do hope that this Convention will be satisfied and arrive at the same conclusion. Let us say that our schoolboy education has been sufficient for our purpose, and when we have said "all property," let us understand that we mean the whole thing. That is my view of the subject, Mr. President.

It does seem to me, I say, that we have mistaken our calling. We have come here and debated, and tried to legislate, and have disagreed on what was right and what was wrong, when it strikes me we had nothing to do with it. If I may be allowed to repeat what I said last night, I supposed when I was elected, it was to come here to assist or to lend my aid in framing a fundamental law by which legislation should be bounded. As I expressed myself last night, I supposed this fundamental law should be to the new State what the chart is to the seaman—that it should point out the shoals, this way and that way, and not so narrow down the course that the winds might strand the ship of State on either side. I want the State to ride through triumphantly. What is wise legislation this year may be bad legislation next, and so on from year to year. Now suppose we define this word "property," and confine the Legislature to certain bounds—narrowing them down, so as to say when they get up to debate a question, as to expediency, as to what is really right and for the best interests of their constituents—"Oh; but stop! There is a constitutional bar there, and you cannot go on." I think we have taken too wide a range in respect to our duties. At all events it is too wide to suit me. I am no lawyer, and no orator, but my constituents knew what I was when they sent me here. They did not expect me to say a word, but they expected me to sit here and think, and to say "yea" and "nay" at the right times. But I have felt compelled, under the existing state of affairs, to come out and give my views, such as they are. Now I am willing, and it is right, that everything should pay its proportion for the support of the Government, and certainly I want all property taxed.

Mr. NOURSE. Has the gentleman any objection to an explanation? Perhaps he is not aware of the condition of this matter. The amendment I have offered, to which the gentleman raises an objection, is in these words:

"The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation of all property, possessions, and possessory rights," etc.

Those last words are put in because the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) maintains that mining claims or possessory claims are not property. To avoid that objection we desire to say "all property, possessions, and possessory rights."

Mr. MURDOCK. I have an objection, and it is this: Now I am an illiterate man, whose business has been to work, and to delve in the mines and the sage-brush, and I have not had the ability, nor the chance, if I had the ability, to acquire much learning. But I stand here as a man, to represent my constituents, and as a jealous man, too. I am afraid of these lawyers. They say such and such words mean so and so, and they go beyond me. They talk about "possessory titles," and "chattels real," and all those things, and it is beyond my comprehension. I think the more of these terms we have, the greater chance there is for lawyers to pick and quibble. When they go on and say "property real and personal," and "chattels real," and "chattels personal," and "personalty," and "realty," and "mixed property," and all that, and every other kind of property, they fuzzle me up. [Laughter.] I do not understand it. I want to use no other word than "property"—a word I learned when I was a boy. When we say "all property," I suppose we mean all property. I should suppose that meant the whole. Now if property is divided up into personal real, chattels real, chattels personal, and all that sort of thing, it is too much for my brain; I can't understand it. Say "property," and what more do you want? That is what I call sense, so far as I can understand it, and if I am to blame for that, I can't help it. [Laughter.] As I said before, I think we have mistaken our calling, and are looking through legislative eyes.

BELDEN—MURDOCK.

[July 15.

Mr. BELDEN. Is the gentleman from Churchill aware that the Enabling Act forbids our taxing the property of the United States?

Mr. MURDOCK. Thank you for the suggestion. I am well aware that the Enabling Act says property belonging to the United States shall not be taxed; but I am perfectly well aware also, that all possessory claims do not belong to the United States. The fee simple belongs to the United States, but I have confidence in gentlemen whose opinions have been given on this floor, as to the meaning of this Enabling Act, where it says that no property belonging to the United States shall be taxed, and I will explain it, not perhaps in lawyer language, but so as to make myself understood. If I do not speak like a lawyer, I will not speak disloyally. I think that the property which is there spoken of means a certain kind of property belonging to the United States, as for instance, Fort Churchill, or any other piece of property owned or occupied exclusively by the United States. But if property is set off for a mine, that is another thing. The property belonging to the United States should not be taxed, but I do not think that refers to possessory rights, in any way, shape or manner.

Now to be more clearly understood I will ask gentlemen to refer back, not to the Enabling Act, but to the Organic Act, for we have an Organic Act as well as an Enabling Act, and I suppose that there is not a gentleman in the Convention but is just as familiar with the Organic Act as he is with the Enabling Act. Now what does the Enabling Act mean when it goes on and defines the lines between here and California, and to the north, and the south, and the east—when it defines by certain lines the bounds which surround the Territory and calls all within those lines the Territory of Nevada? And what then does it say? It says that no portion of the ground included in those boundaries, where the Indian title is not extinct, shall be considered as forming any portion of that Territory.

Now, in the name of heaven, where is our Territory? Show me the first foot of ground where the Indian title is extinct here. I have been down here and defended myself against the Indians, and been refused protection, too, by high authority which I will not name here to-night. I have been told by high authority—by men who have high authority now—that if I wanted to go on the frontier I must take the chances. That Enabling Act, which says that no part of the Territory within the boundaries described shall be construed so as to belong to the Territory, where the Indian title is not extinct, excludes what? It excludes this very city and the ground this building occupies, and even the seat you sit on, Mr. President. I say there is not a foot that you can show me which this Territory has a right to—not a single foot of ground.

I have said that to others before now, and I have said we have not yet found a head, or master of the Indians, with whom we can lawfully negotiate. I can take you to the man that claims this very ground here, and he can tell me, and talk in his own language, too, that he owns this ground. He tells you that the Indians, after a great fight, had a treaty—the remnant of them coming from the other side. They are now called "Washoe," but they came in the first place from the other side of the mountains. He tells you the treaty was this: He says, "We had heap big talk, and heap agree all time—Washoe go so far—Washoe go down Truckee—Washoe go so far down Truckee; Washoe no ride horse—heap catch him Washoe horse all time." That is the sum and substance of it, in English. [Laughter.] There has been an Indian title, and is to-day, and I can find the man that claims it. And this is the condition, that the Washoes shall hold this land, and be allowed to hunt and fish, but shall not be permitted to ride on horseback. That was the mark of subjugation, and it is not long since that a Washoe Indian bought a horse here in Carson, and paid forty dollars in gold for it, but he had not gone a hundred rods away before a Pah Ute Indian took it away from him, and rode off. That shows where the title is. [Laughter.]

Now what do you think of this Enabling Act? That Act says we shall not tax the property which belongs to the United States Government. Is there a man who believes that the possessory right to a mine cannot be taxed, for the reason of that provision of the Enabling Act? If it could not be, then a possessory right to a ranching claim is in the same condition. I do not care whether it is a mining claim or a farm, the rule would be the same.

I have listened and been instructed and amused with the debates here, yet sometimes I regretted the wide range they have taken, when I have thought to myself—"Is it possible that we have all mistaken our calling?" But I knew I was not a lawyer, and hadn't any business to get up and expose my ignorance before the assembled wisdom of this whole Territory ; but I have stood it as long as I can, [laughter,] and hence I have proposed my amendment, and I wish it to have as fair a consideration as you can give it, and no more. If the Convention can say anything more than "all property," I do not see it. That is all there is, and what is the use of describing it? I had just as lief say "all chickens and all coops," as "all mines and mining property." Why do we want to put "chattels real" and "chattels personal" into it, or anything of that kind? Why do you talk about "mixed chattels" to a gray-headed man like me, and about "property mixed," and all those things? [Laughter.]

DELONG—MURDOCK—WARWICK.

I most respectfully submit these views to the consideration of this body, and if I have said any thing unparliamentary I expect to be excused, for really my intentions are good. I intend to do what is right, and I want all property taxed without exception, but I do not want this Constitution filled up with such words that lawyers can pick at it, and say "chattels real" and "chattels personal," and "chattels mixed," and so fuzzle up men like me. [Laughter.] I don't want to be fuzzed up. [Great laughter.] I want to stand on broad ground. Lawyers are very good fellows ; I have nothing particular against lawyers ; but I say I am afraid of these lawyers.

Mr. DELONG. Lawyers are mixed chattels, are they not?

Mr. MURDOCK. I was just going to say that lawyers are what they are from the circumstances that have surrounded them from youth up. I do not blame them ; I might have been a lawyer myself had I studied books for it when I was a boy. [Merriment.] But if I had been, I think I should have been more scrupulous than some I know of in that profession. [Renewed laughter.]

With these remarks, all I have further to say is that the amendment I have offered looks to me to be the most simple, and the easiest way to get out of it. Now this idea of compromise, and coming together, does so disturb my brain that I cannot understand it. The idea of exempting a mine worth five dollars and taxing one worth a hundred dollars looks to me ridiculous, and wrong in principle, because I might hold five thousand feet in mining claims worth less than five dollars a foot, and which I could take that very amount of money for to-day, while my neighbor happens to own a hundred feet worth five or ten dollars a foot, and he is taxed but I am not. It looks to me not right, but altogether wrong. It says here "all property shall be taxed equally." That is what I want. "All property shall be taxed equally." Is there any humbug about that? Men say, do not quibble and dodge about this, and for one I want to say "all property," and so put it on fair ground. Is there a school-boy that does not know what "all" means? and what "property" means? and that if it says "all property" it means the whole? Why do you want to cumber this Constitution, or this Article of it, with anything more? It seems to me perfectly clear that you have said all you could say, when you have said "all property," and if you say ever so much more I cannot see that it would comprehend anything but "all property," after all.

Mr. WARWICK. Notwithstanding the laughter I have heard from some gentlemen, I must confess that I have listened with instruction to the speech, as well as to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Churchill, (Mr. Murdock.) Owing to the peculiar wording of the amendments before the Convention, we have been compelled to bring in law-books here, and to listen to learned discussions as to property real and personal, and the nice distinctions of chattels real, and qualified property, etc. We have had to dive deep into the legal lore of the most learned lawyers in the Convention. Now, sir, we have arrived at a point where, if gentlemen on the opposite side of the question really wish for compromise, I think we are ready to meet them, not by finely drawn distinctions of real and personal property, or any other description of property, but by plain, straightforward language. We are willing to cover it all with the broad proposition of "all property," and then leave the definition of the word "property" to the five gentlemen whom we propose to place on the bench of the Supreme Court of Nevada. Is not that enough? Are there not men around me who are looking forward to that high judicial position? And, provided they are worthy of it, I am willing to lend my aid to elevate them to that place, and then leave to their wisdom the definition of the word "property." Day after day we have been compelled to listen to legal definitions of what property consists of, and now if gentlemen really desire to settle this question definitely and for all time, I for one am willing to settle it on this basis, that "all property shall be taxed," and I insist that when we have said that we have said enough. I do not ask the Convention to say that mines shall be taxed, or that farms shall be taxed ; I do not ask you to say that chattels real or chattels personal shall be taxed, or that it shall be the horse, or the cow, or the ox ; but I am willing to cover every thing with the term "property," and then leave the Supreme bench to define what we mean by "property," as we are willing to leave every other question to be decided by that tribunal, in whose hands are the destinies of the people of this State. As a Court of last resort we select five men whom we call Supreme Judges. And why? Because after every other resort for justice has been exhausted we turn to them and say, "We have sought justice here, and we have sought justice there, and now we come to you as the last resort, because we know that to you is the final appeal, and we ask you to tell us what is justice, and what is not." Even when rebellion raised its hydra head men told us they were willing to leave the questions involved to the Supreme Court of the United States. We do not ask you to define here what "property" means, but we are willing to cover it all with that broad term "property," and there leave it, and whatever "property" covers the Supreme Court will decide to be covered.

I do not know whether, under the latitude which has been allowed to debate, it would be altogether proper to allude to the amendments which have been offered, but still I trust I may be permitted to refer to those amendments. The Convention very properly refused, a few minutes ago, to adopt an amendment exempting from taxation low-priced mines. I say tax them, as you do other mines, at whatever rate you please, if you say you will tax the mines, but let the taxation be equal. If you say you will exempt five-dollar mines from taxation, and not others, then you engraft in your Constitution a provision which I believe would not be able to stand a moment, under the test of the Constitution of the United States. Let there be no discrimination. We have no right to say to the individual who owns a mining claim worth five dollars a foot that he shall pay a tax, and to him who owns claims which are worth only one dollar a foot that he shall not be taxed. Consequently I think that we have now arrived at a point in this debate where this matter can be definitely settled, if it is capable of settlement, and the only way is by covering property of every description with the broad term "property." Is not that enough? Are gentlemen afraid that the Supreme Court will be so profligate, or so corrupt, that they will not define that word property? Are lexicons so behind the age that they do not define the word "property" so clearly that men of ordinary comprehension can tell us what it is? The gentleman from Churchill (Mr. Murdock) is right in opposing those distinctions, which are so fine drawn and intricate, and he has shown himself possessed of that intelligence which readily enables him, in his own plain-spoken way, to tell you of what property consists.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Lander a question. Does he believe that the word "property" includes mines and possessory rights to mines? And if so, does he believe that they will be taxed under this provision?

Mr. WARWICK. Now, sir, being somewhat like what my friend the gentleman from Churchill, in his modesty declared himself to be—although I could not discover it certainly from his remarks—being somewhat illiterate, and not aspiring to a seat upon the Supreme bench, I should prefer to leave it to the most exalted minds of the men whom the people are willing to place on that Supreme bench, to define what is property and what is not. I am the owner of certain property which it has been proposed here to tax, and if the Supreme Court in its wisdom shall say that those mines, not barren altogether, but barren to me, those mines which have exhausted my means—if the Supreme Court shall say to me that every thing I possess is property, then bowing in humility to their wisdom, and to the majesty of the law, will I do my utmost and my best endeavors to pay whatever taxes they and the Legislature shall see fit to impose. But I am not here to define property; I am willing to leave that to the Court of last resort. If the Legislature may not define it, after every other means is exhausted then I am willing to go to the Supreme Court and say, "If it is property tell us so, and then, as good citizens, we bow in submission;" and if it is not property, then we still remain untaxed.

What is the proposition which gentlemen seek to incorporate? They tell you there is a species of property in which the fee simple belongs to the United States, and which is by special exemption left out of the Constitution. Now I ask, if there is any such species of property, can we by any act of ours subject it to taxation? Can we incorporate any provision in our Constitution which shall be in contravention of an act of the legislative department of the United States Government? No gentleman pretends that. But for fear there should be some mode of escape, for fear the Supreme Court should not do its duty, these gentlemen seek to incorporate, by fine-drawn theories, and analytical words, if you please, something into the Constitution which shall include everything, whether right or wrong. Sir, if the most important questions may come before the Supreme Court, questions affecting not property alone, but even life and death—and these gentlemen have already consented to place those questions in the hands of the Supreme Court; from time to time we have already said yea or nay upon that—if in cases of life and death, cases involving the most sacred rights known to the laws, you are willing to leave the question of right or wrong to the Supreme Court, are you not willing to abide the decision of that tribunal, whatever it may be, in cases where only property is concerned?

I tell you that of all the practical compromises ever known, nothing has been more practical than this which has been proposed by the gentleman from Churchill. That sound practical sense that led him last night to advance certain propositions here in such a way that there was no getting around them, homely though the phrase might be in which they were couched, has led him to present this amendment, and here is the time and now the opportunity for a compromise which will settle this vexed question. Now is the time, and with the broad word "property," which will in every way cover the question, to settle it once for all. Let us decide it now, before we adjourn.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state in relation to the amendment as it is presented, that the amendment to the amendment last offered proposes to strike out a portion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Friday,] DE LONG—PRESIDENT—BROS NAN—DUNNE—EARL—FITCH—HAINES—KENNEDY. [July 15.

Washoe, (Mr. Nourse.) Under the ruling which the present occupant of the Chair has made, I will decide that the first vote will be on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe.

Mr. DE LONG. Then I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe.

The PRESIDENT. There is an amendment to an amendment already.

Mr. DE LONG. Then must not the amendment to the amendment be put first?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Storey understands it very well. The Chair rules that the question first comes upon the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe.

Mr. DE LONG. Inasmuch as the gentlemen from Churchill proposes to strike out, and thus render imperfect rather than perfect the section, why is not his amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT. That is the ruling of the Chair, and the gentleman can appeal if he desires, and proceed in order.

Mr. DE LONG. I do not wish to appeal, but I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe, with a slight alteration, and inasmuch as that amendment is the only one which proposes to perfect the section, I desire to ask if the amendment of the gentleman from Churchill is not rather an amendment to the original section than to the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe.

The PRESIDENT. The section as reported back from the Committee of the Whole was itself an amendment to the text which had been referred to that Committee, and that report was open to amendment. The gentleman from Washoe then offers an amendment, which is really a substitute, but is treated as an amendment under our rules. Then the gentleman from Churchill offers an amendment which proposes to strike out a part of that which had been proposed to supplant the original proposition. The Chair holds that the only legitimate order is to take the vote first on the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe.

Mr. DE LONG. Very well; I ask that the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY read the amendment proposed by Mr. Nourse.

The yeas and nays were demanded upon the adoption of the amendment, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROS NAN. I wish to say one word before voting on this question. I shall vote in the affirmative, although I would have preferred that the words "possessions and possessory rights" were not in the section. I will vote for it, however, because I want this question brought to a conclusion. I look upon those terms as synonymous in every sense, and I am sorry that gentlemen who favor this motion should insist upon keeping them there. I vote "aye."

Mr. DUNNE. I wish to explain my vote.

The Convention will bear me witness that I stated, in the discussion upon this subject, that, as a matter of general policy and principle, I believed it wrong to tax the mines. As a matter of compromise, however, I have voted previously in favor of taxing the mines, within a certain limitation proposed; but I did that only for the sake of a compromise. Now those who entertain opposing opinions have failed to meet that concession, and I therefore fall back on my original position, of the general impolicy of taxing the mines, and I vote henceforth and forever "no."

Mr. EARL. I was in hopes that we should have amended this proposition, so as to be satisfactory to all, by using the words "real, personal and possessory." I shall vote "no."

Mr. FITCH. As is well known, I am in favor of taxing the mines. At the same time I am willing, and even desirous, that all allusion to the mines by name should be stricken out of the section. That has been done, although I regret to say not with the concurrence of the delegates representing the agricultural interest. Still I am willing to meet them in a spirit of compromise, for the sake of securing the adoption of the Constitution, and regarding this amendment as a compromise between the amendment offered by the President and that proposed by my colleague (Mr. Tozer,) I vote "aye."

Mr. HAINES. I would like to explain my vote, and in order that I may be fully understood, if there is no objection, I wish to ask a few questions, because I want to vote intelligently, and I want to be able to go home to my constituents prepared to tell them what is the understanding here, so that there will be no misunderstanding between myself and my constituents. If it can be shown that the mines are to be taxed in proportion to their actual cash value, to sustain, or help to sustain our new State Government, I shall vote "aye," and I wish to ask the President if that is the construction he puts upon this amendment?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman must judge for himself.

Mr. HAINES. There is no use in employing vague language, and I do not intend to use such language as some gentlemen have intimated that they will use before the people—that is, to tell them, in the mining districts, that this section does not mean the mines, and in the agricultural districts that it does. I want no misunderstanding about it, and if that is the case as it stands I wish to vote so as to have it clearly understood. Therefore, for the present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to explain my vote. I intend to vote "aye," for the reason expressed by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne,) but drawing a somewhat different conclusion from what he does. I have offered what I considered as a compromise, but gentlemen, some of whom represent mining constituencies entirely, declined to accept it, and therefore I now vote for the adoption of words which I think must without doubt include mines as subjects of taxation. I vote "aye."

Mr. BALL. If I understand it correctly, explanations are now in order, and as several gentlemen have explained their votes I shall do the same. I have voted "aye" on the amendment, and I wish to explain my vote in this way: In the Convention of last year I was Chairman of the Finance Committee, and we had this subject under investigation. I then very carefully and studiously investigated it, and from all I could learn I could not find that the State organization could possibly be run, or a State Government carried on, without the taxation of the mines. The property of the State consisted then, as it does now, about three-fourths of mining property, and one-fourth of property of other kinds. Therefore, I say, I do not wish to see a State Government constituted, or a Constitution framed and submitted to the people, which does not include mines as subjects of taxation. As I understand it, this clause:—"possessory claims and possessions"—covers the mines as fully as the clause did which we adopted last year. I wish to have the matter fully understood, and to leave no way to dodge it. I say that the State Government cannot be carried on without taxing the mines, in my judgment, and therefore I have voted "aye."

Mr. HAINES. Being satisfied that there is no doubt about the amendment's including mines and mining property, I will vote in the affirmative.

Mr. COLLINS. I have voted against the adoption of this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washoe, not, as this Convention well knows, because of any hostility I have against the taxation of the mines generally, but because I wanted to have it done in the way proposed by the amendment brought in by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin.) But inasmuch as that amendment has been lost, and I do not wish my record to stand contrary to my own convictions, I now change my vote, and vote "aye."

Mr. DELONG. I change my vote for the purpose of giving notice of a motion to reconsider. I vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced—yeas, 20; nays, 14—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Ball, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Hudson, Kennedy, Kmkead, Lockwood, Nourse, Parker, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—20.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Chapin, Crosman, Dunne, Earl, Hovey, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—14.

So the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse was adopted.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now I move that the report of the Committee, as amended, be adopted.

The PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. CHAPIN. I offer an amendment.

Mr. DELONG. I believe the question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Churchill (Mr. Murdock.)

The PRESIDENT. A question has been suggested here, whether the adoption of this amendment, by the vote just taken, is not virtually the rejection of the amendment of the gentleman from Churchill, being a refusal to strike out. I would like to hear the views of members upon that, because I do not wish to make a ruling which is not strictly in accordance with parliamentary usage.

Mr. WARWICK. That is the very question to which we addressed ourselves this morning. It is undoubtedly the idea of parliamentary law that every member moving to amend a bill should be heard before the body, and that no motion should cut off any amendment which may be offered. Now, by taking the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe, we have virtually cut off all action upon the amendment of the gentleman from Churchill.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that that proposition covers the point, and will rule that the amendment of the gentleman from Churchill is in order. I do so, not that I am satisfied that the ruling is entirely correct, but in order that no gentleman shall be cut off from his privilege of offering an amendment.

Mr. WARWICK. That is the point.

Mr. KENNEDY. I rise for information. If then this motion is lost, is my motion in order? Unless other amendments are presented I presume it would be.

The PRESIDENT. It is difficult to determine in advance how much of pertinency there may be or may not be in the gentleman's amendment. The Chair thinks it is quite enough to decide questions as they arise.

Mr. CHAPIN. I would like to know when my amendment will be in order.

The PRESIDENT. An amendment to the pending amendment is in order at this time.

Mr. CHAPIN. I will offer it then after the Convention shall have acted upon the amendment of the gentleman from Churchill.

Mr. MURDOCK. If I understand the ruling of the Chair, it is that the motion I made is now in order. I suppose then from the vote just taken upon it, that I have failed to make myself understood.

The PRESIDENT. The vote has not yet been taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Churchill, and he is in order to speak to his amendment because the vote has not been taken upon it.

Mr. NOURSE. I rise to a point of order. The report of the Committee was amendment No. 1, and my amendment was an amendment to the amendment, or No. 2. Now is not the amendment of the gentleman from Churchill a third amendment? Was not it an amendment in the third degree when it was offered, and therefore out of order?

The PRESIDENT. The Convention has concurred in the amendment from the Committee of the Whole. The question coming up next on

Friday.]

MURDOCK—PRESIDENT—NOURSE.

[July 15.]

adopting the amendment recommended by the committee, to that there have been diverse amendments proposed, in different stages of the proceedings of the Convention.

Mr. MURDOCK. Am I in order to explain?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman is in order to speak to his amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. I say I supposed, from the vote last taken, that I had failed to make myself understood by the Convention. I did not intend to vote that the mines should not be taxed, and I did intend to frame the amendment so as to say that all property shall be taxed, whether it be in mines worth a dollar a foot, or in lands worth a dollar an acre, or in anything else of value. I did suppose, because my early education taught me to suppose, that "all property" meant everything of value, and I do not want to stand up here and have this Convention misunderstand me, or think I took a position which I really did not take. I do want all property taxed. If mines are worth a dollar a foot, I want them taxed upon that dollar. When I say every species of property should be taxed, I mean that I want every species of property which claims protection under this State Government that is to be, to pay its proportion of the revenues of the State. I want every dollar of it taxed, for I do not want, as I said before, to mistake my calling. I did not come here to legislate. I didn't come here to so restrict the Legislature as to limit it to this or to that. I am perfectly willing that the mines should be taxed, and that every other dollar of property within the limits of the State that is to be should be taxed equally. And I did think that that article as I proposed to amend it expressed the idea most clearly that all property should be taxed equally.

The reason, and the only reason, why I objected to using those words—"personal realty," "chattel real," "chattel personal," "mixed," and so on, was because the legal fraternity had so mixed up those things as to blind and fuzzle me, and the Legislature I think will be composed of just as wise men as there are in this body. I did not want to be understood as standing here to advocate the doctrine that any property shall not be taxed for its protection, whether it be in mines, in oxen, in ranches, or in anything else. So I struck out everything that I called surplusage, for the reason that I supposed "all property" meant all property, of every species, and every kind. I do not want to so trammel this question that it shall get before the people in a way that the people can be mistaken about it, in any particular. If a man has got a mine and considers it property, he is liable to pay taxes on it, just the same as if he has a yoke of cattle on which he is liable to pay a tax. All I am opposed to in the original section is that odious clause "including mines and mining property." If they had gone on and said—"all ranches and ranching property," "all tailors and tailors' shears," "all shoemakers and shoemakers' tools," and named over everything else, I would not have objected a bit. [Merriment.]

Mr. NOURSE. I rise to a point of order. It is that the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Churchill was to strike out the words "real and personal." Now the amendment I offered having been adopted, there are no such words to be stricken out, and therefore I submit that there is no such amendment, because we cannot strike out words which are not in the section.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Washoe misapprehends the question. For the purpose of enabling the Convention to understand the amendment, it was stated that the effect of the vote, upon the report of the Committee of the Whole, would be to strike out the words "real and personal," but that I find is not exactly correct. On the contrary, it proposed to strike out all, and insert new words, and upon that view it was necessarily in order, as those words were embraced in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe, to perfect the language, before taking the vote on striking out. The gentleman's amendment, perfecting the language proposed to be stricken out, having been adopted, the question now comes on striking out that language.

Mr. NOURSE. I had misunderstood the question.

Mr. MURDOCK. I was going on to say that I want to place myself in such a position before this body that I shall not be mistaken in regard to my motives and views. I am not taking sides as to whether mines shall or shall not be taxed, or ranches or any other species of property; but, as I said before, I did not come here to legislate, but to form a fundamental law, and to leave to legislation what legitimately belongs to legislation, in relation to discriminating as to what shall be taxable property and what shall not. And when we have said in this Article "all property," my education has not gone far enough to enable me to add to it. When I say "all property," I do not know how I can add to that, in any possible way in the world, and the addition of "mines and mining property" looks to me like surplusage. It looks to me particularly obnoxious, unless you also put in ranches, and the appurtenances thereto belonging, and then go on through all the varied descriptions of property which people ordinarily have in their possession. Now inasmuch as I think "all property" has covered the whole ground, I do not want to be considered by any member as opposing the taxation of the mines, because I am not. Inasmuch as they have the protection of the Government, I want them equally taxed with other property. But here is a thing I do know, and that is, that if we adopt provisions which will be of a distinctly legislative character and incorporate them into this fundamental law, our labor will go for naught. We have once had a ruling and a decision upon that question, by the people themselves, and they will give the same ruling now as they did before.

Mr. DELONG moved (at half-past 8 o'clock P. M.) that the Convention adjourn.

Mr. NOURSE. I hope not, because I have a motion to make.

The yeas and nays were demanded on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I would like to explain my vote upon this motion. I am very tired of sitting here, and I understand, besides, that some gentlemen want recreation of a peculiar kind, and I am in favor of giving them a chance.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote resulted—yeas, 15; nays, 19—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Crosman, DeLong, Earl, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—15.

Nays—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Dunne, Fitch, Folsom, Haines, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Nourse, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—19.

So the Convention refused to adjourn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask leave to change my vote with a view to a reconsideration. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order.

Mr. TOZER. I move that my colleague, (Mr. Ball,) have indefinite leave of absence.

Mr. BALL. When the gentleman's colleague wants leave of absence he can ask for it himself.

Mr. TOZER. I wish to speak to that motion.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Churchill.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that the motion is to strike out and insert, and that the proposition which it is proposed to strike out is the substitute offered by the gentleman from Washoe. Am I right?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. Then I move to amend by the addition of the following language, which I will send up to the Secretary's desk. I propose to amend by adding that to the section as it stands, having been amended on the motion of the gentlemen from Washoe.

The PRESIDENT. I suggest whether, in order to prevent a complication of the question, it would not be better first to take the vote upon the amendments pending, and then to submit this amendment.

Mr. TOZER. I move that the Convention adjourn.

The PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order; no business having intervened since the Convention refused to adjourn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Churchill.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment offered by Mr. Murdock, and the vote was—yeas, 13; nays, 21—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Chapin, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne,

Hovey, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—13.

Nays—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Collins, Crawford, Earl, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Nourse, Parker, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—21.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Several members claimed the floor, amidst some confusion, and moved that the Convention adjourn.

Mr. BANKS was recognized by the Chair, and said: I now offer the amendment which I have sent up to the Secretary's desk. I move to amend the section by adding to it as already amended, this language—

The Secretary read as follows:

"Provided, That no tax shall be imposed on any mining claim, or possessory right thereto, which, during the year immediately preceding the time of making the assessment, has produced an amount of ore the value of which is less than one thousand dollars."

Mr. BANKS. I do not think I have been accustomed to inflict on the Convention speeches of great length, and I now ask the privilege of saying to the members of this Convention a few words, in all candor and sincerity, in reference to the position we occupy in regard to this Constitution, and the position we will occupy before those who sent us here. If I can get the attention of members—and I will say I do not intend to annoy the Convention by a speech occupying any considerable length of time—I want to say just this, when I can be heard: It is obvious, beyond all question, that there is in the Convention a very considerable majority of members who are determinedly and persistently in favor of taxing the mines, without any discrimination whatever. I have not the slightest fault to find with gentlemen entertaining those opinions, nor any objection to urge against their acting upon them here, and endeavoring to place them in the fundamental law of our State. With those gentlemen, personally, I say, I have no fault to find. But I want to say to them this, that after the experiment of last year, and what we have since learned of the public sentiment on this subject, it is the worst of folly for us to undertake to tax the mines, without any discrimination as to their intrinsic value, or as to their being prospecting mines, and still hope to prevail before the people. We who represent the mining counties have sought by every honorable means which our ingenuity could invent to join with the majority in the support of all the compromises proposed here, not only those which were within the bounds of reason, but also in some cases those which involved, as I conceived, an actual sacrifice of our dignity itself. Now, sir, we have not been met in a like spirit in any particular. All the compromises proposed from that quarter have been in the form of language strengthening their position, and making it more absolutely certain that mines of all kinds, whether mere "holes in the ground," or mines of vast intrinsic wealth, must inevitably be taxed. Sir, we send this Constitution before the people, if the will of the majority prevails, with this feature in it, and before the people, and upon the stump, if we are true to ourselves, and state what all sensible men must know is the legitimate construction of that Constitution, we must tell every man, be he a miner, or be he a farmer, that if that Constitution is adopted, mines of every kind and quality, according to their value, intrinsic or prospective, must be subjects of taxation.

I intend, life and health being spared, to return to my constituents at the close of this Convention, and there I shall be asked what the Convention meant by this, that and the other section. I would gladly take the stump, and endeavor, with what ability I possess, to advocate the adoption of the Constitution, because I want the glorious privilege of voting for Abraham Lincoln, to be the next President of the United States, and I want to enjoy all the privileges of a citizen of an independent State in the American Union; but if I am asked by the miners in my county, "Does the Constitution require the taxation of the mines?" I shall be compelled as an honest man to say, as I believe every man in the Convention will be forced to confess, that it does unqualifiedly and unreservedly require the indiscriminate taxation of mines of every kind. As a last proposition, therefore, I have sent up that amendment, providing that mines which during the year preceding the assessment have not yielded one thousand dollars, shall not be subjected to taxation. I propose that amendment in a spirit of compromise, in order to relieve from taxation those prospecting enterprises which all the members of the Convention, at the start, in theory at least, if not by their action, have conceded, should not be subject to taxation. I want to discriminate between the valuable mines and those enterprises wherein there is no value of an absolute or positive character, but the value of which is simply that kind of value which depends upon a man's hopes or expectations—those mines which have really no taxable basis. If gentlemen from the agricultural counties feel disposed to adopt so trifling a concession in our favor as this, I shall at least be grateful, and I believe it will relieve the Constitution of much of the odium that would otherwise attach to it. Otherwise, I believe that, beyond all question, whatever hopes we may have in regard to the adoption of the Constitution, they will not be realized.

Mr. DELONG. Mr. President, I have listened with feelings of wonder to the remarks of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks,) who sits beside me, with whom I have been acquainted a great while, and for whose practical good sense and honesty of purpose I have the highest regard. When we came into this Convention we found here this clause which said that all property, both real and personal, including mines and mining property, should be taxed. Upon motion, that portion of the clause which specified mines and mining property was stricken out, the gentleman from Humboldt voting for that motion, and gentlemen on this floor who are colleagues of mine, and the representatives of other mining counties, also voting for the motion. But twenty-four hours roll over this Convention, and these same gentlemen, including the member from Humboldt, in this same room, vote for another proposition, which its author declares, and which the gentleman from Humboldt admits, means universal taxation of the mines. Now what is the meaning of the action which gentlemen have taken? Why did they vote to strike out of the section that which seems to be unmistakable and plain—that which says in so many words that mines and mining property shall be taxed—and then vote into its place the language of the amendment of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse,) which they admit means the same thing?

Mr. BANKS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not vote for it.

Mr. DELONG. Then I do the gentleman a wrong, and I retract with pleasure what I have said, so far as it applies to him, and I regret that I have even intimated it. But there are many others that did. They voted out one sentence, and then voted in another which meant the same thing. And having done that, it becomes my bounden duty to tell you, with the profoundest respect for the Convention—for I do not know but possibly the majority are correct, although I differ with them in their views—that I must, with deep and keen regret say that I believe, first, that your Constitution, containing a clause providing for an indiscriminate taxation of the mines, will be buried with indignation by the people, in the coming election; and in the next place, even if it should not be, it is a measure which looks to all time to come; it is a measure which looks to the detriment, the destruction, and ruin of the paramount interest of our Territory; it is a measure which is diametrically opposed to the views of those who sent me here, and to the sentiments of the very Convention which called me forward to pledge myself, when I was nominated. I did so pledge myself, and I have remained true to that pledge. And I say to those who have disagreed with me, that I believe it is my bounden duty to take that course which my duty dictates. That Constitution containing such a clause is wrong, and I would be a party to that wrong if I should seek to have it adopted by the people of this Territory. I believe it is therefore my duty, whenever this Constitution shall have grafted into it a principle which I believe is wrong, which I believe deprives those whom I represent of their just rights, and their dearest rights, to act as such circumstances direct. I can see no hope in the proposition now offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, in the form in which it is offered. It seems to be the will of the majority of the Convention, cooperating with many of my own colleagues, that the indiscriminate taxation of the mines shall be the order of the day. With the wisdom of that decision I have no controversy. We have argued the question here, and it has been considered and discussed fully and ably. I have asked, without stating the reasons, which I thought it not proper then to state, for an adjournment, so that those who feel with me that their interests, or the interests of their constituents are endangered, might have an opportunity to meet and consult, and see if there was any possibility of arriving at an understanding with those who disagree with us, but even that poor privilege is also denied us by the majority.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. "Oh no, no!"

Mr. DELONG. Not even an adjournment can be permitted, but final action is demanded while the power is held in their hands. I have only to say this, that I vote against this proposition, and against all others of that character, simply for the reason that I know it discriminates between men holding the same kind of property, and I cannot conscientiously discriminate in a case of that kind. This Convention will take such action as it sees proper, but I will say, however, that I would like an adjournment, before that action is taken, to allow us an opportunity for some consultation, that we may confer together and decide upon taking that course of action which we may deem proper under all the circumstances.

Mr. BROSAN. I now move that this Convention adjourn.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn, and the vote was—yeas, 28; nays, 6—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—28.

Nays—Messrs. Fitch, Haines, Kennedy, Nourse, Parker, and Startevant—6.

During the voting—

Mr. NOURSE. I desire to explain my vote. The Convention insisted on evening sessions last night, when things were working to suit these gentlemen, and they wanted no adjournment. Now I like this thing so well to-night that I vote "no."

The result of the vote having been announced, as above stated,

The PRESIDENT accordingly, at 9 o'clock, P. M., declared the Convention adjourned.

TWELFTH DAY.

CARSON, July 16, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, A. M., and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and all the members reported except the following: Messrs. Frizell, Haines, Hovey, Jones, Morse, Wellington, and Williams. Present, 32; absent, 7.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. NIMS.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PROXIES.

Mr. WARWICK offered the following resolution, which was read by the Secretary:

Resolved, That a majority of the Delegates present from any county be allowed to cast the vote of the absent members of the delegation.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule the resolution out of order. It is a proposition before unheard of in any legislative body.

Mr. WARWICK. I shall with great regret be under the necessity of taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I would like to be heard on that appeal.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will state his grounds of appeal.

Mr. WARWICK. I shall do so most respectfully, sir. In the first place the decision of the Chair is predicated upon the supposition that we are here as a legislative body, or its equivalent, whose action would be a finality. Now, sir, I contend that the resolution I offer is in order, for this reason, that we are a different body altogether from a Legislature, where a personal representation is required. Neither are we a simple Convention, such as is called together by the people; but we partake of the character of both in such a degree that it is perfectly competent for this Convention to grant the privilege I ask if it shall see fit so to do.

The grounds on which I ask the privilege are as follows: The county of Lander, as is known to those who have taken the pains to investigate this matter, casts a vote of nearly two thousand, while the counties of Washoe and Roop, for example, cast a vote unitedly of from sixteen hundred to two thousand. But what is the situation, sir? We find those counties are here with a representation of five voters in this Convention, while the county of Lander, with its two thousand legal voters, is here with a representation of one single vote only. Now the foundation of our government—its very cornerstone—is laid upon the principle of representation by the people, and I should like to know what species of justice it is when two hundred and twenty people in the county of Washoe are allowed to have the same voice in the affairs of the government that two thousand people have in the county of Lander? I really do not know whether this resolution will meet with any favor in this Convention or not, but I have felt it a duty to the people I represent to make the motion, and if it is defeated I shall be able to let them know at least that their sole representative on the floor of this Convention did all he could to allow them to have as much to say in the formation of the instrument which we are about to submit to the people, as an equal number of people in any other portion of the Territory.

There is another principle which I think the Chair will readily recognize, and that is that the action of a single individual should never be allowed to disfranchise a people. But what is the situation here? Nearly seventeen hundred of my constituents are disfranchised, by the unfaithful action of two of their representatives, while the counties in the immediate vicinity of the capital are represented by the full number of delegates to which they are entitled. There are certain good reasons, it may be, for this action, or rather non-action, on the part of those representatives, owing to the difficulty of getting here, but those are reasons which go to show why this resolution should meet with favor. I am well aware that those delegates have been derelict in their duty in not coming to the Convention, but I insist that the action of one single individual should not be suffered to disfranchise a people, and yet in my county six hundred and twenty voters are disfranchised by the neglect of duty of one man. Such a thing never was contemplated, certainly, in the theory of our government, and yet that is the situation. Six hundred people in Lander County would have had no more voice in this Convention, at any rate, than two hundred and fifty people in Ormsby or Washoe County. This is not a legislative body, whose action if adopted is a finality, or the case would be a different one. There is no single act which we can do that can or will become a law, until it is indorsed by the people. The action of a legislature, the members being chosen and sent up here by the people to speak their views, becomes a finality, and the law of the land. Without any subsequent reference to the people, that action becomes at once a law, which the people in their sphere are bound to obey. But that is not our case. There is no finality in our action, as nothing we do can become a law of itself, until first submitted to the people.

PRESIDENT—WARWICK.

[July 16.

The PRESIDENT. Then how are the gentleman's constituents disfranchised? When the Constitution goes before them will not they have a voice in its adoption, or rejection, just as much as the people of any other portion of the Territory?

Mr. WARWICK. But in their primary action they are disfranchised. You might say the same in regard to a political convention. You have a precedent for the action I propose in every State, I think, and certainly you have in California. I maintain that it is the usual custom, or if not usual that it is certainly very frequent, to allow proxies in conventions.

The PRESIDENT. Did the gentleman ever know of an instance where a body assembled under a law of Congress, or a law of a Legislature, permitted votes to be cast by proxies? I think there is no such precedent.

Mr. WARWICK. But there is not in the history of the United States, from the fourth day of July, 1776, to the sixteenth day of July, 1864, a solitary precedent, nor in the wide world either, of a case where a charter was offered to a people under circumstances like those under which a charter is at the present time offered to the people of the Territory of Nevada. What has been the general rule, I might say the sole rule, in the formation and admission of States into the Union under the government of the United States? When the people have found themselves in a situation to form and carry on a State government they have come together of their own motion in convention, formed their State Constitution, and sent it up as a petition to Congress. There the petition was heard, and, other things being equal, a proper number of representatives were admitted as the representation of the new State in Congress. But our situation is wholly different; we have no parallel in history to the present offering of a charter to us.

And why is it offered? The circumstances which environ our country at the present time are far different from any which have ever surrounded it before, and from any. I trust in God, which may ever surround it again. There is a gigantic evil to be removed, and it has been found, I apprehend, that the strength of the government is not sufficient for the measure, and hence Nevada has been appealed to, to assist the government. And it is for that reason, notwithstanding the fact that a State Constitution has just been repudiated by us, because it contained a provision obnoxious to the whole people, that still the government comes forward and renews the offer of a State charter. Now as we are assembled under circumstances in every respect different from any similar body that ever convened before, under circumstances without any parallel in history, I contend that it is competent for this body to grant the privilege I ask, if it sees fit to do so.

There are, I admit, certain points in which we resemble a Legislature, and there are certain points, too, in which we resemble a common State Convention. If we were solely a Legislature our action would be a finality, and if we were solely a State Convention we would not have the sanction of the General Government. Therefore, partaking of the character of both, we partake of the privileges of both, and as custom makes law, I maintain that the incorporation of this provision in our proceedings would not vitiate the action of the Convention. The fact must be apparent that it never was contemplated in the history of any republican government that the votes of two hundred and twenty people in one portion of the territory of that government, should be just equivalent to the votes of two thousand people in another portion. Equal representation is the theory of our government, and I insist that the action of any one member, or two members, should not be allowed to disfranchise thirteen hundred people in the county of Lander.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman assume that in Washoe county there are only two hundred and twenty voters?

Mr. WARWICK. No, sir, I refer to the whole number.

Saturday.]

PRESIDENT—WARWICK—TAGLIABUE—DELONG.

[July 16.

The PRESIDENT. How many votes were polled in Lander County.

Mr. WARWICK. About two thousand at the election before the last.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman know how many votes were cast there at the last election?

Mr. WARWICK. I do not know exactly, but there was no struggle there, for the simple reason that the Democratic party made no nominations. It was understood that they would not contest the election, and at my own precinct at least there was not a single vote cast, as a Democratic vote, in the entire precinct. The vote in Lander County was entirely a Union vote, as far as my knowledge goes, and if I am wrong I will thank any gentleman to correct me.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. I will correct the gentleman on one point; there were two thousand seven hundred votes cast in Lander County on the previous Constitution.

Mr. WARWICK. I accept the correction. There were two thousand seven hundred votes instead of two thousand. I wanted to keep within the bounds of the exact truth. I went to the Secretary's office this morning to get the exact figures, but the desk was locked, and I could not obtain them. That makes the justice of this proposition all the more apparent. At that time, however, Nye County was a part of Lander, and since that time it has been segregated; but even deducting the vote of Nye County it still leaves us over two thousand voters. The vote at the last election would be no basis whatever, because, as I have already stated, there were no Democratic nominations. The Democratic leaders publicly announced that they should not enter into the contest, and in the township I represent, where seven hundred votes were cast at the previous election, probably not more than one hundred and fifty votes were cast for delegates to this Convention. The people were entirely apathetic about the matter, and did not turn out to the polls, because the voting was all one way. But in the struggle on the former Constitution, submitted last fall, where both parties were in the field, there was a full vote, and I take that to be a fair basis of representation. Now I ask the question, is it fair that two hundred and twenty, or two hundred and twenty-five men, should have the same representation here that two thousand men in Lander have? And I ask whether the derelict action of one or two men should be allowed to disfranchise seventeen hundred people. Whether the resolution be adopted or not, I have felt it my duty to submit the matter to the Convention, and shall bow to its decision, whatever that may be.

Mr. DELONG. I should like very much, if I could consistently with my duty to the Convention, acting under oath, to support this proposition, in the case of the gentleman from Lander. I am in full sympathy with him on almost every question which has divided the Convention, and

I have found him an earnest, decidedly able, and in my humble opinion a very correct representative of those whom he has undertaken to represent. I would be very much pleased, therefore, were it in our power, to authorize him to represent all his constituents instead of a part, or rather instead of in part representing them, by casting only one vote. But I must disagree with him in the views which he has presented. I must regard this Convention in all respects as bounded and governed by the same rules of action as those which bind and govern a Legislature. We are a Legislative body, called together for a higher purpose than any mere State or Territorial Legislature, namely, to form a State Constitution; and the Enabling Act by which we are convened, prescribes what and who shall constitute the Convention. That Enabling Act does not provide that any one member shall have or exercise greater powers than any other member, and it would be a usurpation of power, in my opinion, to allow any man in the Convention the privilege of casting more than one vote. I say I wish, under the circumstances, it were otherwise, because I have been in everything which has been presented to the Convention a coöperator with the gentleman from Lander. We have worked together in almost everything, and if we could confer this privilege upon any man in the Convention, so far as I am concerned, I think I should prefer to give it to him. But believing that it is not supported by law and authority, I must oppose his proposition, and say that the ruling of the Chair is correct, and I think that such must be the voice of a majority of the Convention. Believing that to be the case, I will suggest to the gentleman from Lander that perhaps it would be better for him to withdraw the proposition.

The PRESIDENT. I will state briefly the grounds of the ruling I have made. As the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has very correctly remarked, this body cannot be otherwise than vested with all the powers and authority of a Legislative body, at least so far as those powers are defined by the Enabling Act. The Congress of the United States, acting under the authority of the Federal Constitution which we have adopted, possesses the power and authority of prescribing the qualifications of voters, and the terms and conditions upon which they shall assemble and elect delegates to frame a Constitution. It has prescribed what shall be the qualifications of individual voters, and has provided further, that when we assemble we shall take a certain oath of office, and shall proceed to declare the Constitution of the United States to be the supreme law of the land. And then the Enabling Act goes further, and says that the persons who have thus assembled as representatives of the people, shall proceed to do certain things. Having complied, to all intents and purposes, with the requirements of that act, this body is invested with full legislative power and authority; and it would be, in my judgment, an absurdity in the extreme to suggest that a man in Lander County, or it may be in Utah Territory, or in the State of California, without having presented himself here as a delegate, and without having taken that oath of office, shall be allowed to vote in this Convention. A precedent cannot be found for such procedure. It may be, as the gentleman from Lander supposes, that there is no precedent for the manner in which this Constitution is to be framed, but that matters not; certainly no precedent can be found for the action he proposes, but on the contrary, in my judgment, the Enabling Act is absolutely inhibitory of any such action. These are the reasons which govern the Chair in ruling out of order the proposition which the gentleman from Lander has presented, and the question now is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

PARKER—BANKS—PRESIDENT—KENNEDY—BROSNAN—DELONG.

[July 16.]

The question was taken, and decided in the affirmative. So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PARKER moved that the hour of adjournment to-day be twelve o'clock, noon, and that the Convention then adjourn to meet at two o'clock, P. M. on Monday.

The question was taken, and, upon a division, the motion was agreed to—ayes, 20; noes, not counted.

TAXATION.

The Convention resumed the consideration of Article X, entitled Taxation, the immediate question being upon the amendment offered yesterday by Mr. Banks, to add to the section, as previously amended, the following words:

“Provided, That no tax shall be imposed upon any mining claim or possessory right thereto, which, during the year immediately preceding the assessment, has produced an amount of ore, the value of which is less than one thousand dollars.”

Mr. BANKS. It will be remembered, Mr. President, that that amendment was offered in a spirit of compromise. I now find that a number of gentlemen with whom I have had occasion heretofore to differ on this question are quite disposed to meet their fellow-members in a spirit of compromise, but upon a proposition somewhat different. In order to enable them to do so, I will ask leave to withdraw this amendment, but before that, I would inquire whether it will be in order, if this be withdrawn, to offer a substitute for the whole section?

The PRESIDENT. Not as a substitute, but an amendment would be in order.

Mr. BANKS. Very well, then I will withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDENT. If there is no objection the gentleman from Humboldt will have permission to withdraw the amendment.

No objection was made, and the amendment was therefore withdrawn.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to amend the section by substituting the following, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:—

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real, personal and possessory, excepting mines and mining claims, and the proceeds alone of which shall be subject to taxation, and also excepting such property as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes.

Mr. KENNEDY. After the heated discussion which we had last evening upon this question, there seemed to be such a conflict almost in the views of members as to render it impossible to come to any conclusion in regard to this matter, but during the hours of last night and this morning I have conversed with a number of gentlemen in regard to it, and this amendment seems to meet their views. Although it differs somewhat from my own views, yet in a spirit of compromise, in order that we may agree upon something, I, for one, am willing to vote for this amendment, and I think that its practical result will be the same as any of those amendments which were offered by gentlemen who wished to include the taxation of the mines; and as the people are interested in the practical, not the mere theoretical question, I think that this amendment ought to satisfy them.

Mr. BROSNAN. For the reasons assigned by my worthy friend from Lyon, who has just taken his seat, and after consultation with members generally, from the time of the adjournment last night until the meeting this morning, I have also determined, for the sake of unity and harmony in the Convention, to support this amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the members of the Convention have hardly considered this fact: It appears to the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Chapin) last evening is not only substantially, but in words, the same as the one now offered.

Mr. DELONG. But that amendment was not voted on, and my colleague complained of that fact. It was not voted upon because the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) somehow got in ahead of it.

The PRESIDENT read from the Secretary's minutes of yesterday's proceedings the amendment offered by Mr. Chapin, as follows:

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real, personal and possessory, according to its true value in money, excepting such property as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes; provided, that in the taxation of mines the proceeds only shall be taxed.

Mr. DELONG. Does the Chair decide that that is the same as the present amendment?

The PRESIDENT. It is not only substantially the same, but identical. The only difference is, that the language is transposed. And that amendment was lost by a vote of—ayes, 4; noes, 29. The Chair therefore rules this amendment out of order.

Saturday,]

DELONG—PRESIDENT—NOURSE—FITCH—BROSNAN.

[July 16.

Mr. DELONG. The Chair will observe, in the first place, that the proposition of my colleague yesterday, I believe, was offered in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT. No, sir; we were not in Committee of the Whole yesterday at all.

Mr. DELONG appealed from the decision of the Chair, and a long discussion followed upon the question of order involved.

The question—shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?—was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 10; nays, 22—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Crawford, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Kinkead, Lockwood, Nourse, and Starrevant—10.

Nays—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crossman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClintock, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Taghlabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—22.

So the decision of the Chair was not sustained.

The question was stated on Mr. Kennedy's amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DELONG. I believe the section stood amended by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse :) is not this therefore an amendment to an amendment?

The PRESIDENT. The amendment of the gentleman from Washoe had been adopted.

Mr. DELONG. Did not the Chair entertain the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) as an amendment to an amendment.

The PRESIDENT. There was but one matter pending, before the gentleman from Washoe offered this last amendment, and as an amendment to the amendment it is in order.

Mr. DELONG. All right; then let us come to a vote upon it.

The SECRETARY read Mr. Nourse's amendment, as follows:

"Insert after the words 'mining claims,' the words 'farms and farming property, mills and milling property.'"

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to state my reason for offering that amendment. It is in order that we may preserve some uniformity of rule in regard to taxation. If I had had time I would have lengthened out the list, and endeavored to include everything in it. It is in order that the rule adopted, (which is the rule I believe all over this country—that taxation shall be equal and uniform,) may be such that no one interest shall be exempted from the burden of supporting the Government, unless all others are exempted. If it is right that mines and mining property shall be exempted, or only taxed upon their proceeds, it is certainly right that the mills should only be taxed in the same manner, and I will leave out the question as to farms for the present. Gentlemen say that the mills would be good for nothing without the mines; now I ask would the mines be good for anything without the mills? What is your ore good for, unless you have the means of reducing it?

Mr. FITCH. I think it would be a good plan to tax the proceeds of the mills; it would certainly yield a larger amount of revenue.

Mr. NOURSE. Very well; I am glad I have made a convert. I hope other gentlemen will be as candid, and if they are already convinced, by the reading of the amendment, and the mere statement of one reason for its adoption—if they find themselves immediately convinced in their own minds that it is right—I hope they will disregard any caucus dictation, and vote for this amendment.

Mr. DELONG. What does the gentleman mean by "caucus dictation?" There has been no dictation here, and no attempt at dictation to any man on this floor.

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order for the gentlemen to reflect upon the action of members. The gentleman must confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. When I use the word "caucus" I mean nothing offensive by it. I have caucused, as I suppose other gentlemen have, thousands of times, and I use the word in no offensive sense. I only mean to say there is a difference of views this morning from what there was yesterday. Perhaps "thousands of times" is a little too large a term, and I will take that back and say I have caucused with gentlemen, to see if their views corresponded with my own, or if we could make them correspond, and I supposed it was a usual thing; but if gentlemen are sensitive about the term I will not use it.

Mr. DELONG. I was not objecting to the term "caucus;" it was the word "dictation" to which I objected. I say there has been no dictation whatever.

Mr. NOURSE. Very well; I will say "caucus agreement."

Mr. BROSNAN. I deny that I have been in any caucus, and any intimation of that kind, so far as I am concerned, is totally false and unfounded.

Mr. NOURSE. I have not referred to the gentleman at all.

Mr. BROSNAN. The gentleman from Washoe referred to me in this light—in saying that members had changed their views by reason of caucus dictation. Now I say that so far as that applies to me it is absolutely false and unfounded, because I say I have not been in any caucus, and my judgment is influenced only by the dictation of my own conscience.

Mr. NOURSE. Mr. President, I have not alluded to the venerable gentleman from Storey in any way or manner, and I have had no means of knowledge as to whether or not he has changed his position. I believe the only vote he has given to-day was on a simple question of parliamentary law. Am I right? I certainly hope the gentleman does not think I would intimate that because a gentleman votes yea or nay on a question of parliamentary law, that is any indication as to his sentiments upon the main question before the Convention. I have not alluded to him in any way or manner, and I trust that the gentleman will withdraw the offensive expression he used when he learns that I did not have him in my mind, and did not allude to him in the slightest degree.

Mr. BROSAN. I will say in reply to the gentleman, that my action here to-day was somewhat different from what it was yesterday. I voted yesterday for the gentleman's proposition, with the view of having the subject reconciled. I saw that a great commotion was about to take place, one which I should deplore, because I thought it would not be conducive to the honor and the future reputation of the Convention. I wished the subject determined here to-day in a manner to give entire satisfaction to the members of this body, and I had expressed myself in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Lyon, immediately after the adjournment. It seems now that there was a meeting of gentlemen, after the adjournment last evening, who agreed upon a proposition to be submitted to the Convention which they thought would be satisfactory. I did not have part or parcel in that caucus; I was not there at all. And when the gentleman used the terms he did this morning, my vote having been slightly different from what it was yesterday, upon the question as then presented to the Convention, his remarks, as I supposed, necessarily involved my action, and I could not sit here patiently under the imputation which I thought was cast upon me. If the gentleman has no reference to me, and I believe that he has not, since he disavows it, I am sorry I used the words I did use, and, therefore, I cheerfully withdraw those remarks. I have deemed this explanation due to the other members, who stand with me in the Convention on this question.

Mr. NOURSE. I am obliged to the gentleman. I feel, however, that I am very unfortunate, in some way or other, and I confess that I am not in a frame of mind to say what I would like to say, and will therefore defer it. I do not know why it is, but it seems that I cannot speak here without some gentleman supposing that I intend some imputation. I wish gentlemen to understand that I do not ever intend to cast any personal imputation upon any gentleman on this floor. Will gentlemen understand that once for all, when I assure them of the fact? I do not like to be dragged before the public in this way.

Now I wish to say in regard to this amendment, that if there be any justice in exempting the mining interest, there is the same justice in exempting the milling interest; and if there is any justice in exempting the milling interest, there is the same justice in exempting the farming interest. The proposition as now adopted, first provides that the property of the State shall be assessed and taxed at a uniform and equal rate. It then goes on and adds the words

"possessions and possessory claims." And why? Because simply that it has been openly declared here, that there are certain rights which it is admitted men hold, and for which other men are willing to pay money, that are not included by the term "property." The gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) remarked, not on the floor, but in conversation, in regard to the Whitman claim in Como, I recollect, that a gentleman had paid a hundred dollars a foot for it, and yet the gentleman from Storey insists here that it is not property according to his definition of property. He has given us elaborately his definition of property, and it is evident that it is his opinion as a lawyer—and he is a lawyer of great reputation—that these mining claims will not and cannot be taxed unless we provide for the taxation of possessions and possessory rights. Then if mining claims are not liable to be taxed, under that clause, I insist, and I do not think any gentleman will pretend to the contrary, that it must follow that possessory surface claims cannot be taxed either, because if in the case of the mines they are the property of the United States, and the property of the United States cannot be taxed, then the fact certainly is the same with regard to all other possessory claims upon the lands of the United States. If therefore we merely provide for the taxation of "property" we shall have but a very small basis for taxation in the State. If this be so, if as able a lawyer as the gentleman from Storey is of opinion that the word "property" does not include that which we call "feet"—that it does not include our mining claims, and so on, and therefore they cannot be taxed under such a provision—then, I repeat, that under the same provision surface rights cannot be taxed, except where the fee has passed, as it has in the case of a few ranches up and down our valleys here, from the United States to the occupants. I say that leaves, as the only taxable property in the State, what little land there may be—very probably not more than three or four millions worth in all—of which the fee has passed from the Government to the individual holders. Therefore it is that the words "possessions and possessory rights" have been incorporated; and that phrase covers, as the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) admits, all these rights of possession which the State courts recognize as existing in the individual—rights to the possession of property of which the fee is owned by the Government. Do we not want to cover that? Do we not want at least to cover the surface claims? Of fourteen millions of dollars—I think that is the figure—of real estate in Virginia, as now assessed under the Territorial law, not a dollar of it all is owned in fee. The "property" is in the United States, and all that the owners have is the mere right to the possession. That right is recognized in the courts as between man and man. It is regarded as presumptive evidence of a grant from the United States. Now we all want to include that property. All the gentlemen here who are so earnest against taxing the mines still go in for taxing that property. But I contend that those words "possessions and possessory rights" cover that property, and it does no more, if we accept the definition of the gentleman from Storey, and other gentlemen here, of the law: but it leaves the question beyond a doubt that that property must be taxed. Now then if it is right to tax these possessory rights to surface property, why is it not equally right to tax possessory rights to mining property?

What are these mining rights? Gentlemen have talked and talked about a tunnel, in which has been sunk so many thousands of dollars, and from which its owners have not yet obtained any ore, and it is uncertain whether they will ever get any, and therefore they say we ought not to tax that tunnel, and all that sort of thing. That may all be true, but such a tunnel as that could not be taxed, under the wording of the amendment, as property. But what the prospector has by virtue of his possession, and which the Government has not, is the mere right of possession to the tunnel. If I understand it—and I have not been here as long as some other gentlemen, and have had nothing to do with mining—before the prospector goes on to run his tunnel, or to do other work, he stakes off his claim, and by the laws of the mining neighborhood or district in which it is situated he is allowed a monopoly of that ledge thus staked off, while he is prospecting and working it. If he keeps up the amount of work upon it required by those laws or regulations adopted by the miners of his district, he has a monopoly of that ledge. Is not that so? Now that monopoly is what is taxed under those words "possessory rights and claims." It is not his tunnel. He may sink fifty or a hundred thousand dollars in his tunnel, if he pleases, and not be taxed a dollar upon it. But here is a right which our courts protect him in the enjoyment of—the right to the monopoly of that ledge. He thinks that right is valuable, or if he did not he would not touch it, of course. Now if the right to that monopoly, and that protection by the Government which keeps everybody else away, and prevents them from touching that ledge, until he shall have concluded to abandon it, is worth five dollars, or worth ten dollars, or worth a thousand, or a hundred thousand dollars, and will sell in the market for cash for that sum, ought it not to be taxed, like any other property?

And is it necessary that there should be any proceeds from that claim before it can be taxed? Suppose that out in Lander County, which is so ably represented here by the gentleman (Mr. Warwick) who spoke this morning, a man has a ledge which promises to be wonderfully rich. At present he does not think it worth while to work it, but he and his associates may decide to hold on to it. I do not know how many feet a man can hold, but I believe he can work it around—"whip the devil around the stump," as the saying is.—I suppose he is entitled to use his friends' names, and in that way perhaps he can hold a thousand feet. Now, I say, suppose a man goes on to this ledge, and finds it surpassingly rich, but just at present he does not see fit to develop it. Still he is protected in his possession.

Mr. EARL. Mr. President, the debate is taking a very wide range, and all this ground has been traveled over again and again. I dislike very much to make a point of order, but I will suggest to the gentleman from Washoe that the time is getting very short.

Mr. NOURSE. I will not take five minutes longer. ["Leave! leave!"] I do not wish to argue the matter for the sake of manifesting any personal tenacity of purpose, but I am simply making a point which I think has never been distinctly made before. ["Leave! leave!"]

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. NOURSE. Now such a man, we will suppose, has a ledge which he can sell in the market for a large sum of money. People are so well convinced of its value that perhaps men would be readily found who would give him half a million for it, and he could sell it at any moment he pleased. Yet he is comfortably off, and is disinclined to sell. He knows that a railroad will be built ultimately, or that something else will come about which will make it more advantageous to him to hold on to his ledge for five years, or a dozen years, and therefore he does not care to undertake the development of the mine at present. I say is it not right, if he does not choose to get any proceeds which can be taxed from that claim, or even without referring to the proceeds at all, is it not right that he should pay his proportion of the public burdens, on that valuable privilege, or that possessory right which the Government secures to him? And would it not be a gross inequality to allow a man to hold on to such a claim, only doing nominal work upon it, and so monopolizing it, and all its advantages, without any taxation, because he does not choose to get out his millions of dollars from his claim, as the Gould & Curry does, and thereby enrich the State, but prefers rather to hold on to it for years? Is it not right that his privilege and possessory right, secured to him exclusively and entirely, by the laws of the State, should pay a tax, just as other property does, all over the State, without any reference to the proceeds which he gets or does not get?

Mr. FITCH. I have but a few words to say, and shall not occupy the time of the Convention five minutes. When I came to this Convention, I occupied, upon this question of mining taxation, something of an anomalous position. Being a representative of a mining constituency, I was nevertheless then, as I am now, in favor of the taxation of the mines. I favored the amendment offered by my colleague from Storey (Mr. Tozer,) which proposed to strike out the words, "including mines and mining property," and in so doing did not consider that I abandoned my position as a friend of mining taxation, because I believed then, as I believe now, that with the section as it would then stand, requiring property of all kinds, real and personal, to be taxed, the mines must necessarily be taxed, and that no Legislature could fail to tax them. Such was my understanding of that language, and although it is true that one or two gentlemen, occupying high positions at the bar, have differed with me as to the construction of that language, yet there are others of equally high standing who believe that my construction was correct. The language was sufficient to satisfy my own mind at least, and I did not think that, while favoring the taxation of the mines, and yet favoring the proposition of my colleague to strike out the words "including mines and mining property," I was at all inconsistent.

FITCH—DELONG.

Again, an amendment was offered here by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) to include in the section the words "possessions and possessory rights." I voted for that amendment, because it was more satisfactory to the delegates from the agricultural counties, the obnoxious words "including mines and mining property" having been stricken out, and because, in my judgment, it did not make the question of mining taxation either stronger or weaker. I believe that the first amendment would have been sufficient. But since then another amendment or proposition introduced by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy), and now pending before us, has been brought forward, which proposition (with some slight verbal amendments that I shall take the liberty to suggest,) will receive my support, and for this reason: I came here to aid in securing the formation, in the first place, of as good a fundamental law as it was possible for this Convention to construct; and after that, so far as it might be in my power, to aid in shaping the action of the Convention in such a way as to secure the adoption of that fundamental law, because if we make a Constitution exactly according to the views of certain gentlemen, it may prove to be obnoxious to the people and be therefore voted down, and so our labors will be destroyed.

Now I conceive the duty of the members of this Convention to be—first, to make a Constitution as perfect as possible, and secondly, to make it as much in consonance with the views of the majority of the people of this Territory as possible, and then to try to secure the adoption of that Constitution. Laying this down as the base upon which to shape my action, at least—not being willing to abandon any important principle merely for expediency—I yet do not think I am justly liable to the charge of inconsistency merely because I am not afflicted with that mulish obstinacy which would lead me to insist on my individual ideas, and the particular language which I might individually prefer, being carried through and adopted, as a condition precedent to my support of any Constitution which we may frame. I am here rather in a spirit of compromise, and a sincere desire to meet the wishes of the majority, so far as it is possible. So, acting in the spirit of a sincere desire to frame such a fundamental law as will be acceptable to this people, I am responsible to my God and to my constituents alone for my action, and shall permit no man to impugn my motives unchallenged. I shall permit no man, in a spirit of captiousness, or in a spirit of constitutional scoldishness—if I may be permitted to coin a word—to load me with reproaches, to read me lectures for my action here, to impute motives that do not belong to me, or to denounce me as inconsistent or recreant in my action, when such action is based upon the bed-rock proposition of framing a Constitution which will be acceptable to the people. I should think myself possessed of a spirit of most arrogant self-conceit, instead of a spirit of devotion to principle, if I should attempt in that way to arraign gentlemen for a departure from principle, simply because they differ from me. Sometimes, I conceive, gentlemen are apt to mistake their own individual opinions for principle. I start out here upon the basis of framing a Constitution which will be acceptable to the people, and in so doing, favor my own views so far as possible, while conceding my own views as far as may be, without any sacrifice of principle, to the views of other gentlemen; and I do not think it is either courteous, or even to my mind, parliamentarily decent, to read lectures to others upon their duties and responsibilities, when they are responsible to no one but their constituents. I shall permit no man to do it to me, sir.

Now in regard to this amendment of the gentleman from Lyon—it says that the Legislature shall provide for a uniform and equal valuation for taxation of all property, real, personal and possessory, excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone shall be subject to taxation. I may be in error, but I think a construction could be placed on that language—perhaps a very nice construction—which should say that all mines and mining claims may be exempted from taxation, and the Legislature can tax the proceeds if it please. I will submit to the mover whether it would not read better to say: "As shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real, personal, and possessory; provided, that the proceeds of mines alone shall be subject to taxation."

Mr. DELONG. Why, that is the same thing.

Mr. FITCH. I think there is a material difference. After the word possessory, you say here, "excepting mines and mining claims," and in that way you leave the door open to that construction.

Mr. DELONG. I suggest that we change the language around, and let it read: "except that the proceeds of mines and mining claims alone shall be subject to taxation." That would except all mining claims which are without proceeds.

Mr. NOURSE. I rise to a point of order. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by myself. I have no objection, at a proper time, to a further amendment, but the question is now upon my amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) to offer an amendment.

Mr. FITCH. No, sir; but merely a criticism on the language. I say, where it says "for the taxation of all property, real, personal, and possessory, excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds alone of which shall be taxed"—

The PRESIDENT. It says here—"shall be subject to taxation."

Mr. FITCH. Well, "subject to taxation." I say the Legislature, and the Courts, in my judgment, might place a construction upon that language, which would not only exempt mines and mining claims, but the proceeds also.

Mr. DELONG, [in his seat.] When it says that the proceeds of mines shall be subject to taxation, does the gentleman think that they could exclude those proceeds?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair hopes that gentlemen will not interrupt, unless in a parliamentary way, by rising and addressing the Convention.

Mr. FITCH. I will endeavor to make my meaning clearer, for either the language of the amendment is rather obscure, or else I am uncommonly stupid this morning. Where it says the Legislature "shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real, personal, and possessory, excepting mines and mining claims," that would have meant, if nothing followed it, that the Legislature shall not prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of mines and mining claims; and when you add to that "the proceeds of which alone shall be subject to taxation," I understand that a construction could be placed upon it which would allow the Legislature to tax the proceeds, if they choose so to do, and if they did not, to allow them to exempt even the proceeds. It seems to me that under the language of the section, as it now reads, they could exempt the proceeds of the mines. Now, as that is probably not the object of the gentleman from Lyon, as the amendment is offered in a spirit of compromise, as it is designed to secure the taxation of the proceeds of the mines, and not the mines themselves, I suggest, although not in the shape of an amendment, at present, that the object could be achieved by the mover making a slight change in the language. I am not particular as to the language.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will not this suit the gentleman? Instead of "subject to taxation," at the end of the clause, let it read "shall be taxed." Will not that cover the gentleman's idea? It will then read—"excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone shall be taxed."

Mr. FITCH. I rather think, on a cursory view of the matter, that that would be sufficient.

Mr. DELONG. We have but an hour of time. Under the resolution we have adopted we must adjourn at twelve o'clock, and I suggest that we should come to a vote.

Mr. FITCH. I have occupied but an infinitesimal portion of time compared with my colleague.

Mr. DELONG. I did not call my colleague to order; but this is an important question, and members are desirous of going home. The Convention must adjourn in an hour from now.

Mr. FITCH. I have nearly finished what I was about to say. It says here—"for the taxation of all property, real, personal, and possessory, excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone shall be subject to taxation." It seems to me that the change suggested by the gentleman from Lyon would meet the objection made.

Mr. HOVEY. Having been charged outside with inconsistency, I wish to be placed fairly and squarely on the record upon this question.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman rise to a question of privilege?

Mr. HOVEY. Yes, sir; partly to a question of privilege. I am in favor of taxing the mines, but I am not in favor of prescribing in the Constitution the mode by which that shall be done. Two years ago I was in favor of taxing the gross proceeds, and by request of the Committee on Ways and Means of the Legislature I drafted a law to that effect, but having made one assessment under that law I became satisfied it would not meet the wants of the people. It did not bear equally on all. The gross proceeds, under that law, in the county of Storey, amounted to about four and a half millions of dollars, while the amount of bullion shipped from the county, in the same year, was about twelve millions, I believe. The Legislature at its last session also became convinced that the law would not meet the wants of the Government, and they changed it so as to tax mines like other property. Now, sir, in making the assessment under that law we found that owing to the depreciation of the mines it worked unjustly. For instance, the Burning Moscow, less than six months ago, was worth three hundred and eighty dollars a foot, while to-day it is worth but fifteen dollars. I have come to the opinion finally, after seeing a synopsis of the law passed by the late Congress, that we have got to come down at last to one mode of taxing the mines, and that is to tax the bullion, under the stamp of the Government. And as my views are different from those of the balance of this Convention, I have to go for the next best proposition, and that is, I conceive, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy.)

Mr. TAGLIABUE and others demanded the yeas and nays on the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse, to insert the words "farms and farming property, mills and milling property."

[July 16.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall certainly vote against any such absurd proposition.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on Mr. Nourse's amendment, and the vote was—yeas, 3; nays, 30—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Crawford, Lockwood, and Nourse—3.
Nays—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hindsone, Kennedy, Kinkead, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwiek, Wetherill, and Mr. President—30.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. With the consent of the Convention I would like to make a slight change in my amendment. I will strike out the words "subject to taxation," and insert instead the word "taxed," so as to read "excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone shall be taxed."

The PRESIDENT. I suggest to the gentleman that the word "alone" appears to have a peculiar significance in that connection. I only call his attention to it.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I believe a member has a right to speak fifteen minutes on any question, but I do not believe I have spoken that length of time altogether in the Convention. However, I shall not bother the Convention now but a very few minutes. If I remember correctly the proceedings which we have had on this very important question, it is now in rather a strange fix. Now, sir, my view of this matter is plainly this: By taxing the mines we can sustain a State Government, and without that we cannot. As to this thing of taxing the proceeds, it is said if you want experience buy it. Now we have tried the taxing of the net proceeds, and what did we get? "Nought from nought and nought remains." [Laughter.] Under the head of gross proceeds, I believe the District Attorney has decided—or at least it was so decided in Storey County—that they meant net proceeds, and so we got a tax on some four millions of dollars. Now this is one of the most simple and the shortest of questions—it should be at least—that ever came before any Convention in the world. We came here with a full and distinct understanding of it. Is there any gentleman here who, before he came to this Convention, had not heard this important question discussed? If so he must have been deaf. [Laughter.] Therefore I do not know why we could not just as well in the start have said "yes" or "no" upon it. It is the plainest question in the world. With the assistance of the mines we can sustain a State Government, and without that assistance we cannot, and we do not want to try it. We know that we are in debt, as a Territorial Government, and we have the best of authority for positively knowing that we can scarcely maintain that government, or at least that we have failed to maintain a Territorial Government, so far, and we find ourselves largely in debt. Now in the statutes of 1861 you will find a revenue bill taxing the net proceeds of the mines. Then we got nothing. In the statutes of 1863 you will find that we taxed the gross proceeds of the mines. Then we got four millions. In the statutes of 1864 you will find that the mines are taxed indiscriminately.

Mr. CHAPIN. Allow me to correct the gentlemen, in one respect. The assessment under the law of 1863 was four millions nine hundred and eighty-seven thousand dollars—nearly five millions.

Mr. STURTEVANT. That has been harped upon also. Now a few of us, I myself among others, came over here a few years ago and helped to find the mines. We have no objection, however, to your coming here and working them. You are welcome to come here and work the mines as much as you please, and we are glad to see you do it. I have been here ever since. I fought my way here, and probably shall be here longer than any of you, unless I should cease to live. But one of the material objects of having a State Government will be, as has already been suggested here, the protection of the mines. The General Government has attempted to impose a tax upon our mines in a way that I think is not altogether right, and we ought to have representatives in Congress to tell them so. Just at this present time we find ourselves in a dilapidated condition in this Territory, as you all know, and it could not be otherwise, but we look for improvement. Now this is, I believe, the fourth day that we have been trying to get at this very point. What is the use of being so long about it? What kind of a tangled-up mess is it that it should take so long to unravel? Night before last we decided in a great measure, or at least it was the prevailing idea, that the mines should not be taxed, but the next morning they uncovered a masked battery, that blew up all that, sky-high. [Laughter.] Last night the prevailing idea was, and it seemed to be satisfactory to all, that the mines should be taxed, and this morning there is another masked battery again, and we find ourselves in another fix.

Mr. NOURSE. The Chair does not seem to call the gentleman to order, and I will protest against allowing him to make insinuations against gentlemen.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Is your name "Masked Battery?" [Laughter.]

Mr. NOURSE. I am speaking for others, not for myself; I have had several masked batteries sprung upon me, and therefore I protest against anything of the sort.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Washoe will proceed.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I would not like to hurt the gentleman's feelings, because I am somewhat tender-hearted myself, but I hold myself responsible, and will apologize if anything I say should unintentionally hurt anybody.

Now much has been said here about the valley counties, but the valley counties, at least

NOURSE—HAWLEY—DELONG—PRESIDENT—LOCKWOOD—BALL.

[July 16.

that portion of them which I in part represent, are as much interested in the mines as Storey County; that is, in proportion to the population. I think I am correct in that, and I will say further, that for all that we are willing to establish a State Government, and we are willing to tax our mines to do it—perfectly willing. But without that we are perfectly satisfied that we cannot maintain a State Government, and we do not want it.

Mr. NOURSE. The question I believe is on the original amendment of the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy.) I have an amendment to offer to that. I am not quite sure that it comes in the right place, but I propose to annex to the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon the following proviso:

“Provided, further, that the rate of taxation upon the annual proceeds of the mines shall be so fixed as to make the burden of taxation upon the owners of mines as nearly as possible equal, in proportion to their property, to that upon the owners of other property.”

My reason for offering this amendment is, to remedy the palpable inequality that would arise from the taxation of one kind of property merely upon its income, and another upon its absolute value. I suppose this amendment will meet gentlemen's ideas, because I do not think this has been thought of. I suppose the intention of gentlemen is that only mines producing ore shall be taxed, and to make sure of that they want to tax only the proceeds. That makes it sure that no mine will have to pay a tax that does not produce ore. But I suppose that the ore producing mines, say in Storey County, for example, those that are getting out any ore, are getting out—other gentlemen may know better than I do—I will set the value at least at fifteen or twenty millions, and I do not know but I might set it as high as fifty millions of dollars a year. Now I suppose that gentlemen do not mean to tax the proceeds of those mines which, under the Assessor's appraisalment, at the last return, amounted to only four or five millions of dollars, upon that amount, while if that property had been taxed in the shape of property the owners would have had to pay on fifty or sixty millions of dollars—the value of their property in the market. I do not suppose they intend for a moment any such inequality as that.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the proposition involved in the gentlemen's amendment amount to this, that if the proceeds of a mine are assessed by the Assessor, say at three millions of dollars, and the time of hearing motions to raise or decrease that assessment passes without any motion to amend, then those three millions of dollars shall be taxed at the rate of perhaps sixty per cent. on the one hundred dollars, upon the whole three millions of dollars' worth of property, whatever its character shall be, while property of a different character is assessed at only one or two per cent. on the one hundred dollars?

Mr. NOURSE. Something in that way. It is avowed in the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon that the rate of assessment and taxation is to be equal, but it seems that the mines themselves are not to be taken as a basis of taxation, but the proceeds only. I think the proceeds of the mines in Storey County last year amounted to only four millions nine hundred and eighty-seven thousand dollars, so that the owners of those mines, which are really worth, say fifty millions of dollars, only pay a tax of one per cent., on four millions nine hundred and eighty-seven thousand dollars, while the owners of other property have to pay the one per cent. on the whole amount of all they are worth. Now I do not suppose that gentlemen mean that. They mean only to tax the proceeds, but they do not mean that the tax shall apply to one man's income only, and to another man's gross property. I propose that the Legislature shall be left at liberty, if you are going to tax the proceeds through the Legislature, to make such an arrangement as will make the taxation equal.

Mr. DELONG. Believing as I do that there is an object and design to prevent a final vote until members are absent from this hall, for the first time in my life I move the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman may not indulge in personal reflections as to what may be the object of gentlemen.

Mr. DELONG. I am not indulging in personal reflections. It is my right to state what I believe to be the truth. My object is to go on and adopt this Article, and then proceed with our work of framing a Constitution, and for that purpose I move the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that there is a stage to leave for Virginia after the twelve o'clock stage to-day, and if members desire to speak further to this question, I would suggest that we can suspend the rules and continue in session until one o'clock. However, that is merely a matter of suggestion. The previous question has been demanded, and the question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I ask leave to make one remark. [“Leave! leave!”]

Several members objected.

Mr. NOURSE and others demanded the yeas and nays upon ordering the main question.

The question was taken, and the vote was—yeas, 18; nays, 15—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Chapin, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—18.

Nays—Messrs. Ball, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Collins, Crawford, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Kinkead, Lockwood, Nourse, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—15.

So the main question was ordered to be put.

During the voting—

Mr. BALL. Though I desire to see this question brought to a vote at once, yet I will never vote for the previous question. I vote “no.”

Saturday,] DUNNE—PRES'T—HOVEY—FITCH—COLLINS—PARKER—HAWLEY—KENNEDY. [July 16.

Mr. DUNNE. I vote "aye," for the reason that I do not think it can possibly be said that much debate has been cut off, when we have had four day's debate already on this question.

Mr. EARL. I vote "aye" for the same reason.

The PRESIDENT. I never voted for the previous question in my life, and I certainly will not when it is moved upon so important a matter as this.

The result of the vote having been announced.

The PRESIDENT stated that the first question was on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse.)

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 9; nays, 24—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Crawford, Fitch, Folsom, Gibson, Kinkead, Nourse, and Sturtevant—9.

Nays—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—24.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOVEY. I voted "no" for a reason which I wish to explain. ["No, no!"] I voted "no" because I think the Legislature has that right already.

Mr. BANKS. So do I.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. FITCH. It has been modified somewhat, and I ask to have it read as it now stands.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real, personal, and possessory, excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone shall be taxed, and also excepting such property as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes.

The yeas and nays were demanded on the adoption of the amendment, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLLINS (when his name was called) asked to be excused from voting on this amendment.

Several members objected.

The PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the Secretary will call the gentleman's name.

Mr. COLLINS. I desire to explain my vote. I have given my views—

Mr. PARKER [interrupting.] I rise to a point of order—that it is not in order to explain a vote under the previous question. I think if the President will examine the rules he will find it so.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. COLLINS. If I am in order I will proceed. I expressed my views yesterday upon this same question, substantially, and I feel exceedingly unwilling to do anything which will embarrass the matter now. My whole aim, from the beginning, has been to effect a satisfactory compromise, though I am decidedly in favor of a system which shall tax all property equally, throughout the State. One objection I have in my mind to giving my vote in favor of this amendment is, that it is going to array all the productive mines against our Constitution. It is going to do an absolute injustice to many of our productive mines. Now the Gould and Curry mine, for example, with twelve hundred feet, if assessed at the highest market value per foot which it has attained during the past year, at a tax of one per cent., will pay only thirty thousand and nine hundred dollars; but by a tax upon the gross proceeds, which as reported last year amounted to five millions six hundred thousand dollars, at the rate of one per cent. it would have to pay fifty-six thousand dollars—an increase over and above the taxation on the mine of twenty-five thousand, one hundred dollars, or nearly eighty-seven per cent. It looks to me like a piece of very gross injustice. Yet I find that the representatives of our mines feel that this is the best thing that can be done for their interest, or that would be anything like justice. If they think so, certainly they ought to be the best judges, and I must misunderstand this question. Under the circumstances it is the best thing, I suppose, that can be done, and therefore, though very reluctantly, and to a great extent against my strongest convictions, because I think it is a violation of the rights of those producing mines, I will have to give my vote, if I am compelled to vote, in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy.) I vote "aye."

Mr. FITCH. For the reasons expressed by my colleague, (Mr. Collins,) I also vote "aye."

Mr. HAWLEY. One word in explanation of my vote. I cannot for the life of me see that the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon meets the difficulty which has surrounded us from the very commencement of the contest which has lasted so long. I have heretofore expressed my views on the subject as clearly as I was able to do so. I think, unless we strike out the first part of the section which provides that the rate of taxation shall be uniform and equal, the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon can have no proper place in our fundamental law. I should infinitely prefer, as the representative of a constituency in favor of the taxation of the mines, to vote directly upon a proposition asserting positively that the mines shall be taxed. I therefore vote "no."

Mr. HOVEY. I vote on this amendment as a compromise—"aye."

Mr. KENNEDY. I rise, in explanation of my vote, to state that I do not vote for this amendment at the dictation of any assembly of gentlemen. I did have a consultation on the street with two members from Storey County, although I do not know that either one was in any caucus on this subject. When I left them I told them I would consult our delegation, and if the proposition was satisfactory to the majority of the Convention, and to our delegation, I would go for it, and do what I could to have it adopted. I have offered it as a compromise, as I offered one before, which was rejected, and believing that this is the best I can do, I vote "aye."

Mr. McCLINTON. I believe it is well known by every gentleman on the floor that this provision does not meet with my entire approbation, yet I shall vote "aye." for reasons assigned, in part, by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) and also for reasons already given by other gentlemen. I vote for it, because I believe it is the best we can do. It is not as good as I would like to do, but inasmuch as gentlemen on this floor have taken position in favor of taxing everything, possessory and otherwise, every mining claim, and, as some express it, every "hole in the ground," and it may be every hole out of the ground, I shall vote for this amendment. It is not just what I desire, but I believe it is the best that we can obtain.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I voted "no" for substantially the same reasons as those which have been given by the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Hawley.)

Mr. MURDOCK. For reasons which have been very clearly stated—and my own position has been well defined upon that point, and it is known how I stand—for the sake of a compromise I vote "aye."

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to give a reason for my vote, which is, that notwithstanding all the sneers that have been cast upon my claim to vote upon principle, I still claim the right to vote upon principle. I believe this amendment is unjust and wrong in principle, in that it makes a distinction between different classes of our people, and different classes of their property—between property owned by different classes. For that reason I find myself unable to vote for it. And so far as a compromise is concerned, I have to say that I have not been so much as asked whether I would compromise or not. It was not submitted to my consideration, for one, and I believe many other gentlemen can say the same thing. And now, when it is attempted to be pushed through by means of springing the previous question, I certainly cannot vote for it. I vote "no."

Mr. STURTEVANT. I want to explain my vote. I am going to vote "no" for certain big reasons. Members say they vote for the amendment for compromise; I would like to know where they get it. Some compromises take only a part, but they take it all and leave us none. That is my opinion. Among the material objections I have is one on account of certain "jayhawkers," known as "Montgomery street sharpers." They go into the best mines we have, get a controlling interest in them, and when they find they have got immense beds of ore lying there they will commence building up somewhere else, diving down and digging these "holes in the ground," and running bed rock tunnels. And then they commence levying their assessments of a hundred dollars a foot, if you please, at a time. They will keep diving away at every place except the right one, when they know all the time precisely where that is, until people get tired of paying assessments. That is not the question here, I know, but that is where the "jayhawkers" come in. I want them taxed, as well as the rest of us. I do not know but the proposition may be disputed, but I think the operation of it will be recognized by most of the members here. These are what I call big reasons. I like for one to see every thing go on an equality, and if this is equality I cannot see it. I tried to get my eloquent friend from Storey (Mr. DeLong) to explain it so that I could, but he himself, it seems to me, does not exactly see it, and I say that with all respect to the gentleman, by all means, because I am satisfied that he is a good lawyer.

Now consistency is generally supposed to be a jewel, but the question is who wears it? I do not go to any man, I do not go even to lawyers, to ask them their opinion as to how I shall vote, because I have an opinion of my own, and that is the most I have got, and when that is gone I do not claim that there will be much left of me, but so long as I do have that, I claim to vote according to my own opinion. I vote "no."

Mr. TAGLIABUE. This seems to be an amendment which I can hardly understand. I am something like the gentleman from Churchill (Mr. Murdock) in this respect, being of very limited comprehension, but on the whole I will vote "aye."

Mr. TOZER. I shall vote "aye" on this amendment, although I consider it one that is wrong in principle, mistaken in its policy, and injurious in its practice. I consider it wrong, mistaken and injurious to the great paramount interest of this Territory—the interest from which we all derive all the prosperity we have in the present, or expect to have in the future. Yet I vote "aye."

The PRESIDENT. I desire to say a single word, and that will serve as an explanation of my votes, both upon this and previous amendments. As I have heretofore stated, I desire to see formed a State Constitution such as we will be able to submit to the people, and convince them that it will be for their best interests to form a State Government, and that such Government, when formed, will not be grievously burdensome in the way of taxation. I attempted yesterday to demonstrate to the Convention, by facts and figures which in no single instance have I heard questioned, that by taxing the mining as well as other property within the State, we would have an amount of property serving as a basis of taxation which would enable us, with an economical administration, to support a State Government; but by taxing only the gross proceeds of the mines, and all other property, we would be compelled to levy an onerous and burdensome tax. And now I come down to a proposition which is to my mind apparent, namely, that the Legislature has no power to tax the gross proceeds of the mines. That being apparent, we must show the people that in order to support this State Government they must be taxed one dollar and twenty-five cents on each one hundred dollars valuation, whereas now, under a Territorial Government, they are only taxed thirty cents on the one hundred dollars. Again, I certainly conceive, as the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) has remarked, that, of all proposed modes of taxation, this of taxing the gross proceeds is the most unjust and unequal that can be devised. Now for the reason that we cannot and ought not to attempt to convince the people of this Territory that their interests are to be subserved by paying a tax four times as great as they now pay, for the support of the Government, and because the people cannot bear the burden which they will necessarily be required to, in order to support that government, under this provision, and because, in my opinion, no distinction should be made in the mode of taxing the property of the people of this State, I am constrained to vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced—yeas, 23; nays, 10—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crossman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—23.

Nays—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Kinkhead, Lockwood, Nourse, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I give notice that on Monday I will move for a reconsideration of this vote.

Mr. DELONG. I ask if the main question is not on the adoption of the section as amended.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the report as amended.

Mr. NOURSE. I move that the Convention adjourn.

The PRESIDENT. The motion cannot be entertained under the previous question.

Mr. DELONG. I do not understand that we are amending a report; I understand that it is on the adoption of the section.

The PRESIDENT. The effect is the same; it is really the adoption of the section as amended. The question is on the adoption of the report, and the section, as amended on motion of the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy.)

The question was taken, by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 23; nays, 9—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crossman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—23.

Nays—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Kinkhead, Nourse, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—9.

So the report, and the section, as amended, were agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I give notice that on Monday I shall move to reconsider the adoption of the report.

Mr. DELONG. I move that we reconsider the vote now.

Mr. BANKS. I move to indefinitely postpone the motion of the gentleman from Storey to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT. A notice having already been given of intention to move a reconsideration on a subsequent day, I do not think it is competent for the Convention to entertain the motion to reconsider now.

Mr. DELONG. But Jefferson's Manual does not provide that a notice to reconsider lays it over. On a previous occasion I gave notice in the same way, and it was held not to suspend the standing rule. I therefore respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT. There has been, according to my recollection, no such ruling made by the Chair as the gentleman states. Last evening a notice to this effect was given, but it was subsequently withdrawn.

Mr. FITCH. As I understand it, it is one of the commonest practices of parliamentary bodies, when a notice is given by some gentleman who desires to prolong the consideration of a question, to move a reconsideration at once in order to bring it to a close. I undertake to say there is no precedent in any parliamentary body for any ruling that a notice to reconsider will prevent the immediate reconsideration.

Mr. STURTEVANT. The gentleman is mistaken; on the contrary, the provision is that a notice to reconsider can only be called up the day following.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will be obliged if the gentleman from Storey will cite the authority.

Mr. BANKS. There is no authority for this decision.

The PRESIDENT. The appeal is before the Convention. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention.

Mr. NOURSE. Does not a privileged question take precedence of that motion?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will state his privileged question.

Mr. NOURSE. It is this: I claim to have my protest entered upon the journal of the Convention, against the action of the Convention in adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to make a motion.

Mr. DELONG. That is not a question of privilege. The gentleman has no privileged question.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to be informed, because I am accused of misrepresenting the gentleman, whether I was correct in understanding the gentleman to say that his amendment had been freely consulted about.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman can have his protest entered on the journal. The question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. President,—

Mr. NOURSE. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the appeal.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the hour of adjournment be postponed fifteen minutes.

Mr. NOURSE. I rise to a point of order, and I am not to be prevented from stating it. I understand that there is a motion already before the Convention, and that there is an appeal from the decision of the Chair, in regard to that motion. I understand that there is a motion pending, and that that motion must be put before any other can be entertained. I claim that the question shall be put on the appeal, and I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FITCH. I rise to a question of order. When a motion is made, either to adjourn or to extend the time for adjournment, no other question can be put or entertained.

Mr. NOURSE. It is now past twelve o'clock, and I insist that the rule be enforced.

The PRESIDENT. The hour of twelve o'clock having arrived, according to the resolution adopted this morning, I declare that the Convention stands adjourned until two o'clock on Monday afternoon.

The Convention accordingly, at twelve o'clock, adjourned.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 18, 1864.

The Convention met at two o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and all the members responded except the following: Messrs. Ball, Belden, Chapin, Fitch, Jones, Morse, Nourse, Wellington, and Williams. Present, 30; absent, 9.

The journal of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. KINKEAD, leave of absence for to-day was granted to Mr. Nourse.

Mr. TOZER asked leave of absence for himself, for to-day, which was granted.

On motion of Mr. DELONG, leave of absence for to-day was granted to Messrs. Chapin, Fitch, and Ball.

Mr. MCCLINTON. I have already staid here longer than I expected to when I came, and as I have some other duties to attend to—matters which cannot be neglected—I ask indefinite leave of absence; promising, however, that if possible, I will remain until the Convention shall finally adjourn, and will be in attendance as much as possible at all times; and in any case I will not be away, if I find that my presence is absolutely necessary to preserve a quorum, so as to enable the Convention to proceed with its business.

The question was taken, and indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. McClinton, in accordance with his request.

On motion of Mr. BRADY, leave of absence for to-day was granted to Mr. Belden.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. NIMS.

SCHEDULE.

Mr. DELONG. By request, I offer this resolution:

Resolved, That there be appointed by the President a Committee on Schedule, to be composed of one member from each county represented, with instructions to report as early as possible—the President to be a member thereof.

Mr. DUNNE. I think it will be necessary to take up one portion of the Schedule separately, because there is a portion of it which will necessarily involve the necessity of considerable figuring.

Mr. DELONG. The committee will be a general committee, and can be subdivided. They can select a certain number of the committee, and set them specially to doing the work which the gentleman refers to.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

The PRESIDENT subsequently appointed as the committee, under the resolution, Messrs. DeLong, of Storey; Dunne, of Humboldt; Kennedy, of Lyon; Haines, of Douglas; Wetherill, of Esmeralda; Warwick, of Lander; Belden, of Washoe; Lockwood, of Ormsby; Proctor, of Nye; and Murdock, of Churchill.

EDUCATION.

Mr. COLLINS. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a Committee of five, on Education, be appointed by the President, with instructions to report as soon as practicable—the President to be added thereto.

Mr. WARWICK. I will suggest to the mover of that resolution that that will make a committee of six.

Mr. COLLINS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WARWICK. I would suggest that we have a committee of five, including the President.

Mr. COLLINS. Very well; I will accept that.

The PRESIDENT. It occurs to me that this is a very important committee—that matters of the greatest importance will come under its supervision. I think a committee of five would scarcely give the Convention a fair representation, and I will suggest that it be increased to seven.

Mr. COLLINS. I will agree to that.

Mr. WARWICK. I will suggest the following as a substitute, if the gentleman from Storey will accept it:

Resolved, That a committee of seven, to include the President, be appointed by the President, on Education, with instructions to report as soon as practicable.

Mr. COLLINS. I accept it.

Mr. DUNNE. I do not perceive that it is necessary to have that committee appointed, and I really think it will delay our proceedings very much. I know there are subjects involved which will have to be discussed, and they will be discussed just as much on the report of a committee as they would without. Many members are already on different committees, and I doubt very much whether it will not delay our action. I do not believe there is any necessity for such a committee.

Mr. COLLINS. I was moved to present that resolution on account of the present change in our Constitutional provision in regard to taxation. The Article on Education, in the old Constitution, was based upon the idea of the general taxation of the mines, and it occurred to me, not only in that respect, but also in regard to the various provisions in our public land system, that the article might require a good deal of alteration. I thought, therefore, that a Committee might lay the foundation, at least, so as to have the Article on Education perfectly consistent with the present Constitution, and thereby save a great deal of the time of the Convention. I do not urge the matter, however; the only object I had in view was to facilitate and hasten our business, and I do not know but the gentleman from Humboldt is correct in saying that it will not save time or avoid discussion. The idea I had was to remodel that Article, so as to be in harmony with the general arrangement of the Constitution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask a question. The gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) refers to the different manner in which the public lands are proposed to be disposed of by the present Constitution, as I understand him; I would ask whether the clause proposing to give the five hundred thousand acres of land to the Pacific Railroad Company, for railroad purposes, has not been entirely done away with?

Mr. COLLINS. No, sir; I think not. Every State receives, by virtue of its becoming a State, five hundred thousand acres of land from the General Government, for school purposes, if I am not greatly mistaken. I know I gave attention to that subject in the last Convention, and I am impressed with the idea that this five hundred thousand acres of land is a donation for internal improvements, but we also get the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land in each township for school purposes, and this five hundred thousand acres of land, given for internal improvement, was also applied for school purposes. Then, in addition to that, we get thirty-six thousand acres for each member of Congress, for an Agricultural College, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. BANKS. Independently of the policy involved, I hope the committee will be appointed, for the purpose of reporting the facts necessary for us to know in order to take intelligent action on the subject. I hope the committee will be appointed for that purpose, if for no other.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

The PRESIDENT subsequently appointed as the committee, under the resolution, Messrs. Collins, Hawley, Crawford, Crosman, McClinton, and Folsom.

FINANCE AND STATE DEBT.

Mr. TOZER, from the Committee on Engrossment, reported correctly engrossed Article IX, entitled Finance and State Debt.

Mr. TOZER. In connection with this report from the Engrossing Committee, I beg leave to say, that Section 3, of Article IX, refers to that clause of the preceding article, which provides for a donation of three millions of dollars to the Pacific Railroad, and it may be proper to amend that section at some subsequent stage. I call attention to the matter now, in order that some other member may move an amendment, if it is thought proper, as I may not be here when the subject comes up.

Mr. KINKEAD. It will have to be corrected, undoubtedly, to correspond with the preceding Article.

Mr. TOZER. Since this Article was ordered engrossed, the clause to which I have alluded was stricken out of the preceding Article—the clause providing for a donation of three million of dollars to the Railroad.

Mr. STURTEVANT. It appears to me a little awkward, now, inasmuch as this Article has been engrossed.

Mr. GIBSON. This Article is correctly engrossed. The amendment was made in the other Article.

Mr. TOZER. This Article was passed to engrossment previously, and it has been correctly engrossed as passed. But in consequence of the amendment to the preceding Article, in order to be consistent this Article should be amended when it comes up on its final reading, and I presume it will then be within the power of the Convention to amend it so as to correspond.

The PRESIDENT. It can undoubtedly be amended hereafter.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SECRETARY, (by leave of the Convention,) stated that Article VIII had been retained in his hands, and not handed to the Committee on Engrossment for the reason that the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) had given notice of his intention to move a reconsideration of the vote upon the adoption of section nine of that article. Subsequently, the motion to reconsider was made and carried, and a motion to recommit with instructions to strike out a portion of that section prevailed, but a motion to insert other words was lost. At that stage, all further action upon the section was suspended, and the Secretary now desired to know what further disposition should be made of the article.

Mr. HOVEY. It occurs to me that we have not yet finished the consideration of that article, and that further action remains to be had upon it by the Convention.

Mr. BROSNAN. My colleague, (Mr. Fitch,) informed me that he did not intend to press his motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT. If I am not mistaken, the gentleman from Storey informed the Convention that he withdrew the motion to reconsider.

Mr. EARL. I move that the article be ordered to engrossment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the gentleman that it will be in order to move to order the article to be engrossed at a proper time, but there is another matter now under consideration.

Mr. CROSMAN. My recollection is that Section 9 of Article VIII has never been adopted. My impression is, that at the time of our adjournment we had arrived at that point in the consideration of the article, but it was not acted upon. I desire to see some further amendment made to that article, and therefore I want it to come up in its regular order.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, in order that gentlemen may understand the position of Article VIII, that it had been ordered engrossed, and came up on its third reading, when the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) moved to recommit it with instructions. The motion to recommit was lost, but a motion to strike out a certain portion was carried. The gentleman from Storey then gave notice of his intention to move a reconsideration, but subsequently he withdrew that notice. The article was on its third reading, and had been read down to and including section nine, and when it comes up again it will be on its third reading.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to give notice to the Convention that I, or some one else, will propose an amendment to that section, with the view of granting State aid to a certain railroad.

The PRESIDENT. Notice is not necessary. The amendment can be moved when the article comes up, and it cannot come up at this time without a suspension of the rules.

Mr. EARL. Is my motion to order the article engrossed in order at this time?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir; we are now considering the subject of the engrossment of another Article.

Mr. BANKS. What is now before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. The Committee on Engrossment have reported Article IX. The Secretary having concluded the reading of the report, the article goes upon the general file.

TAXATION.

Mr. BANKS. On Saturday last I moved to indefinitely postpone a motion to reconsider the adoption of Article X, entitled Taxation. With the consent of the Convention I will now withdraw that motion.

No objection being made, the motion was withdrawn.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I gave notice on Saturday that I would move that reconsideration, but not desiring to occupy the valuable time of the Convention further in the discussion of the question, I beg leave to withdraw my notice of reconsideration, and ask to have my vote changed from the affirmative to the negative on the passage of that article.

No objection being made, Mr. Crawford's name was directed to be recorded in the negative upon that vote.

Mr. DELONG asked leave to withdraw his motion to reconsider, and no objection being made the motion was withdrawn.

Mr. HAINES. I was not present on Saturday when the vote was taken on Article X, and I ask leave to have my vote recorded in the negative.

Leave was granted, and Mr. Haines' vote was directed to be recorded accordingly.

Mr. DELONG. I voted in the affirmative on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) for the purpose of moving a reconsideration. As that places me a little crooked on the record, with the leave of the Convention, I would like to change that vote from the affirmative to the negative.

No objection being made, the change was accordingly directed to be made on the record.

Mr. DELONG. I presume that under the operation of the rule, Article X now goes at once to the Engrossing Committee; I ask the Chair if that is the case?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir; if there is no objection it will be so referred.

The article was referred accordingly.

Mr. TOZER. The Committee on Engrossment, to which was referred Article X, entitled Taxation, beg leave to report that that article is correctly engrossed.

Mr. DELONG. Now, in order that this thing may be passed, and that we may have no further trouble on its account, and that it may be out of the minds of members, I ask that it be put upon its third reading and passage now.

The PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to suspend the rules.

Mr. DELONG. I make that motion.

The question was stated on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I would like to know how that Article came to be engrossed, and by what order?

Mr. DELONG. It was ordered engrossed by the Convention, and the report was made after that order.

Mr. STURTEVANT. But how came it to be actually engrossed, and by what order?

Mr. TOZER. It was ordered engrossed within the last five minutes.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks no question can be raised, inasmuch as there was no objection to receiving the report of the Committee on Engrossment.

Mr. DELONG. Under the rules, as soon as the vote was taken, on Saturday, the article would necessarily go to the Engrossing Committee, were it not for the notice of reconsideration, which would naturally hold it over until to-day, but the Engrossing Committee nevertheless had it engrossed, and to-day, when it was referred to that Committee, the manual labor of engrossing it had already been performed. It was only necessary then as a matter of form to report it back as correctly engrossed. I assure the gentleman from Washoe that it is all regular; the article has pursued its regular course.

Mr. STURTEVANT. It may be all regular, but I do not see the point. It was ordered engrossed to-day, and it had no business to be engrossed before.

Mr. DELONG. There is nothing unusual in that.

Mr. TOZER. If the Engrossing Committee should see fit to engross the Constitution of the United States, I do not know that the gentleman from Washoe would have a right to complain or object.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Exactly; but I just want to show the absurdity of it. The Committee had engrossed it, when they had no right to suppose that it would not be reconsidered.

Mr. PARKER. I believe the Article has been in the hands of the Engrossing Committee about five minutes, since the gentleman withdrew his notice that he would to-day move a reconsideration, and I do not suppose that it is the business of the Convention to inquire whether or not the Engrossing Committee were able to have it engrossed in that time, so long as it is in fact correctly engrossed.

Mr. STURTEVANT. After that explanation I withdraw my objection to the absurdity of the thing, and give the Committee credit for very quick work.

Mr. BANKS. If now any gentleman wishes to test this matter further, I will vote against any suspension of the rules in order to give him a fair opportunity.

Mr. DELONG. So will I. What I want is to facilitate business, but if any gentleman does not acquiesce in the former action of the Convention, or is at all anxious to test the matter further, I will vote against the suspension of the rules.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will state that there is at least one. Not that I wish to delay the Convention, however.

Mr. BANKS. Very well; I will vote against suspending the rules.

Mr. DELONG. I will withdraw my motion for a suspension of the rules.

[Mr. BANKS in the Chair.]

The PRESIDENT asked leave of absence for himself for this afternoon, stating that he had business which imperatively required his attendance elsewhere.

Leave of absence was granted accordingly.

FINANCE AND STATE DEBT.

The Convention proceeded to the consideration of business on the general file, and Article IX, entitled Finance and State Debt, came up on its third reading.

The SECRETARY read the article as engrossed, as far as and including Section 3, which reads as follows:

SECTION 3. For the purpose of enabling the State to transact its business upon a cash basis, from its organization, the State may contract public debts; but such debts shall never in the aggregate, exclusive of interest, exceed the sum of three hundred thousand dollars, except for the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses, as hereinafter mentioned; provided, that the further amount of indebtedness authorized by Article VIII, of this Constitution, shall be deemed legal and valid whenever said debt shall be incurred in accordance with the provisions therein expressed; and said debts shall be separate and independent of the State debt herein provided for. Every such debt shall be authorized by law for some purpose or purposes, to be distinctly specified therein, and every such law shall provide for levying an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest semi-annually, and the principal within twenty years from the passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of said taxes to the payment of said principal and interest; and such appropriation shall not be repealed, nor the taxes be postponed or diminished until the principal and interest of said debts shall have been wholly paid. Every contract of indebtedness entered into or assumed by or on behalf of the State, when all its debts and liabilities amount to said sum before mentioned, shall be void and of no effect, except in cases of money borrowed to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, defend the State in time of war, or, if hostilities be threatened, provide for the public defense.

Mr. DELONG. I move to amend this Section by striking out these words:

"Provided, That the further amount of indebtedness authorized by Article VIII, of this Constitution, shall be deemed legal and valid whenever said debt shall be incurred in accordance with the provisions therein expressed; and said debts shall be separate and independent of the State debt herein provided for."

That paragraph ought to come out, for the reason that we have knocked out the Pacific Railroad clause to which it refers.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that this article be laid upon the table until we have passed Article VIII. I do not think we can act understandingly upon it until then.

By general consent the article was laid on the table temporarily.

MUNICIPAL AND OTHER CORPORATIONS.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

The Convention took up, on its third reading, Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations.

The PRESIDENT. This article has been read, I believe, down to Section 9, upon its third reading.

Mr. HOVEY. There was a motion to recommit Section 9, for amendment, but Section 6 I think was passed over and not read.

The SECRETARY. The article was on its third reading, and the Secretary had finished reading Section 9, when the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch) moved to recommit with instructions to strike out all after the word "provided," and insert other words. The motion was divided, and the proposition to strike out prevailed, but the proposition to insert did not prevail. At that stage the Convention adjourned. That leaves the section to stand as follows :

SEC. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money or its credit, subscribe to or be interested in the stock of any company, association or corporation, except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes.

BANKING SYSTEM.

Mr. BROSNAN. I intended to offer a substitute for Section 6, at the time when my colleague (Mr. Fitch) moved his amendment to Section 9. I then suggested my amendment, but the President stated that it could be amended as well afterwards.

Mr. DELONG. I think my colleague can reach what he desires by now making a motion to recommit the section with instructions to amend.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will move that Section 6, of Article VIII, be recommitted with instructions to strike out Section 6, and insert instead the following sections :

SECTION 6. Associations or corporations for banking purposes may be formed under general laws, and the Legislature shall provide by law for the registry of all bills or notes issued or put in circulation as money, and shall require ample security for the redemption of the same in specie.

SECTION 7. In case of the insolvency of any bank or banking association, the bill-holders thereof shall be entitled to preference in payment over all other creditors of such banks or banking associations.

Mr. COLLINS. I would like to hear the gentleman's reasons for introducing that proposition.

Mr. DELONG. I will move as an amendment to the amendment of my colleague, that Article VIII be referred to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to strike out Section 6.

Mr. BROSNAN. If my colleague offers that as an amendment I will accept it.

Mr. FOLSOM. Will the Secretary read the section proposed to be stricken out ?

The Secretary read as follows :

SECTION 6. No bank notes or paper of any kind shall ever be permitted to circulate as money in this State, except the Federal currency and the notes of banks authorized under the laws of Congress.

Mr. COLLINS. Do I understand that the striking out of this section will give the Legislature unqualified power to set in motion, without any restriction whatever, a system of banking? If so, it may work well and it may not, but at all events it is rather an important move, and I hope this Convention will not adopt it without due consideration. Generally, I believe, when banking systems are permitted, in the organization of new States, they are limited somewhat; but here, by striking out that section, we leave the whole matter entirely open to the Legislature to institute such a system of banks as they please, without any restrictions. They might attempt this experiment under the most trying circumstances, and when money shall be abundant, and prices inflated indefinitely, it may prove to be dangerous if not disastrous. I do not know but it is all right, but still I would like to have it looked after a little. I should be better prepared to vote upon the proposition after hearing the views of other gentleman on the matter. I might be prepared for some such alteration as that originally proposed by my colleague, (Mr. Brosnan), but I think it would be preferable to let the section stand as it is, rather than strike it out altogether. Now in the Eastern States we know there has been a jealousy by the State against the national banks, and the national banking associations have encountered a great deal of difficulty in setting in motion that banking system which has been organized by Congress, and which I think is the most perfect system of banking that has ever yet been discovered—a system which pledges the entire faith of the nation for the redemption of the bills issued. But I do not, at this moment, feel prepared to strike out this provision in Article VIII, and without further reflection to give the Legislature the right to establish a system of State banks, which would be at war with the national banks, authorized by Congress, as our metallic currency to-day is warring against the national currency. I think it is a matter of too much moment to be passed by without serious reflection. This section proposed to be stricken out says :

No bank notes, or paper of any kind, shall ever be permitted to circulate as money in this State, except the Federal currency and the notes of banks authorized under the laws of Congress.

Now, the financial officers of the Federal Government have found themselves exceedingly embarrassed by the conflict, the strife, the emulation, and even the hostility which a large portion of the State banks have maintained and exercised against the organization of these Federal banks, authorized by the last Congress.

Mr. STURTEVANT. By permission of the Chair, and the gentleman from Storey, I would like to hear the amendment offered by the other gentleman from Storey. (Mr. Brosnan,) read again.

Mr. COLLINS. That was withdrawn, and the motion now is merely to strike out the section. I am not disposed to make a speech upon the question, and I believe I have urged all the objections which now occur to my mind; but I would like to hear the views of my colleague, (Mr. DeLong,) who suggested the striking out of the section.

Mr. DELONG, [in his seat.] Certainly; I will give my reasons when I have an opportunity.

Mr. CROSMAN. To a great extent, I must agree with the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) that something should be said on this subject in our Constitution. I hold in my hand the Constitution of the State of Michigan, which contains two sections that would come in here, I think, very well. They embrace, I believe, the substance of the proposition originally offered by the gentleman from Storey. (Mr. Bronson,) but the language is a little different. I will read them :

DELONG—CROSMAN.

[July 18.]

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall provide by law for the registry of all bills or notes issued or put in circulation as money, and shall require security to the full amount of notes and bills so registered, in State or United States stocks, bearing interest, which shall be deposited with the State Treasurer for the redemption of such bills or notes in specie.

SEC. 5. In case of the insolvency of any bank or banking association, the bill-holders thereof shall be entitled to preference in payment over all others creditors of such bank or association.

Mr. DELONG. I will state that in the first place my object in moving to strike out the section was this : The whole clause is a prohibitory clause upon the Legislature and the people, forbidding them from hereafter exercising a privilege which they may find to be wise, and decidedly for the interest of the community. Why should we attempt in this matter to represent the people of the State in the future, or to take the subject out of the hands of those whom they will elect as their representatives? Why should we, at this stage in our country's history, say that for all time to come no bank notes shall ever circulate in this State as currency, except they be the currency of the United States, when it may so happen that all the Federal currency may become extinct by payment, as we certainly hope will be the case in the event of this Government sustaining itself in this war? In that event there will be no currency, except a metallic currency.

Now I am not going, in the remarks I make, to travel over the ground which I have once foreshadowed in this Convention. California has such a provision as this in her Constitution, with the slight exception, however, that California does not except the Federal currency, but prohibits the circulation of bank notes or paper of any kind. Every thing but gold and silver is excluded from circulating as money. The Constitution of that State absolutely forbids every other species of circulating medium. And what has been the consequence? Why, sir, California is dragged down—bound to the wheels of three-per-cent. She has not grown and flourished like any other State in the Union, but on the contrary she has been retrograding from the commencement of her history until the present time, and her course is still backward. Now I do not want to launch our ship of state upon the same waters, and place it under the control of the same influences which I know have blighted the prospects of California. I would like to see the people of this State have the power, if they desire it, to provide for establishing some other representative of value besides gold and silver. If they desire it, let them have it; if not, of course they will not have it.

That is my reason for moving to strike out this section. I insist that you cannot find in the civilized world, a State or a people, other than the State of California, and the people on this coast, who have prohibited paper money, or who, if deprived to-day of every other representative of value except gold and silver, would not at once find all their material interests greatly crippled and injured. Their commerce, their manufactures, and their business prospects of every character and description, would be immediately blighted. In the State of New York, for instance, if they had no other currency to-day than gold and silver, I do not believe the ordinary business affairs of men could be carried on, and I believe the rate of interest on money there would immediately become the same as in California, on account of the scarcity of the precious metals. It is that which makes interest high, and the high rate of interest is what compels us to do without those improvements which we so much need. That is what causes all manner of business among us to drag along with difficulty, and often to stop altogether. The mechanic goes without his job and the laborer without employment or without his hire, and every kind of improvement and development that does not promise to pay the highest current rates of interest on the capital invested must be abandoned, or never entered into. We have seen this difficulty in California, and we see it here. I have labored zealously, in the Legislature of California, seeing that there was no other remedy, to secure the passage of a usury law, in order that the capital of the country might be employed in works of public utility, such as the building of canals, the draining of swamp lands, and the opening up of the hidden sources of wealth in that State; but I was laughed at and beaten down by the money influences of Sacramento and San Francisco, brought to bear in that Legislature. It was that Constitutional provision which followed the State like a curse. I ask gentlemen here to leave the Legislature of this State free, if the people shall hereafter desire it, and so express their desire, through their representatives, to establish a different financial system. Leave the people free to adopt some other representative of value besides gold and silver.

But I am somewhat favorably impressed with the proposition of my friend from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) that if we should say nothing at all about banks, and thereby permit the Legislature to establish them, if the people wish it, it is proper that they should be restricted in respect to the issuance of bills. If banks are established here, as I hope they will be, I think they should be restricted in that respect, and therefore I will move to amend so that the instructions to the Committee of the Whole will be to strike out Section 6 and substitute the two sections from the Constitution of Michigan, which the gentleman has read.

Mr. CROSMAN. I suggest that we put in there the words "in its discretion," so as to read: "The Legislature shall, in its discretion, provide by law," etc.

Mr. DELONG. Very well; I will move that this Article be referred to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to strike out Section 6, and substitute the following :

BROSAN—DELONG—COLLINS—BANKS—HAWLEY—CROSMAN.

[July 18.

SECTION 6. The Legislature may, in its discretion, provide by law for the registry of all bills—

No ; something must come in before that.

Mr. BROSAN. I think the gentleman will find that those sections of mine just cover the ground.

Mr. DELONG. Wait a moment. I find here a Constitutional provision which I like, not only making the securities deposited responsible that the notes shall be redeemed, but also making the stockholders individually liable, to the amount of their stock. I do not know but we should adopt something of that kind.

Mr. COLLINS. What are the securities?

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman read the provision?

Mr. DELONG. There are several sections, which I will read :

SEC. 3. If the General Assembly shall enact a general banking law, such law shall provide for the registry and countersigning, by an officer of the State, of all paper credit designed to be circulated as money, and ample collateral security, readily convertible into specie, or the redemption of the same in gold or silver, shall be required, which collateral security shall be under the control of the proper officer or officers of State.

Section 4 provides that the General Assembly may also charter a bank, with branches, etc. I do not know that we want that. Section 5 also refers to branches. Then comes a provision which I like :

SEC. 6. The stockholders in every bank or banking company shall be individually responsible to an amount over and above their stock, equal to their respective shares of stock, for all debts or liabilities of of said bank or banking company.

Mr. HAWLEY. Those are substantially the provisions of the banking law of Louisiana, and I will say, that after a residence of several years in that State, and a subsequent acquaintance with the history of the State, I can assert without fear of contradiction, that such a thing as a failure, or loss by holding the bills of a bank of that State, was never known under those provisions ; and until this rebellion broke out the notes of the Louisiana banks were sought for throughout the entire country, at par.

Mr. DELONG. There is another provision here which I like first-rate :

SEC. 8. Holders of bank notes shall be entitled, in case of insolvency, to preference of payment over all other creditors.

That is a good provision, and there are some others here worthy of consideration. I wish that the Convention would go into Committee of the Whole on this article, without any instructions.

Mr. CROSMAN. I suggest that the motion to recommit be withdrawn, and let the article be referred to a special committee of five, without instructions.

Mr. BROSAN. If the motion to recommit with instructions is withdrawn, I will move to refer the article to a committee without any special instructions, such committee to report to-morrow morning.

Mr. CROSMAN. I believe Section 9 does not give satisfaction, and it will take time to discuss it to-day. My idea is that we had better let the whole article be referred.

Mr. BROSAN. I wish merely to state to the Convention that the two sections which I have presented here are copied from the Constitution of the State of New York. In that State there have not been, since the adoption of that Constitution, any bank failures, or if there have been the bill-holders have always been secured, because the banks are all required to deposit with the Controller or Treasurer of State an amount of State or United States bonds sufficient to cover all their debts or issue, of bills. I find that in almost all the States of the Union, these banking institutions are not only tolerated but fostered, and the framers of all the new State Constitutions have been compelled to throw around them safeguards for the protection of bill-holders and depositors. These safeguards, it seems to me, are abundant and beneficent. Now we have copied this clause in our Constitution from the Constitution of California, but at the time when the provision in the Constitution of that State was adopted, there was, as is well known, a great deal of panic in the Eastern States, growing out of failures of banking institutions. But since then those institutions have been remodeled, and there is no longer any occasion for such a panic. Besides, California is essentially different from us in so many respects that we ought not to copy from her, in my judgment, in this regard. They had in California at that time an abundance of money. In fact their currency was carried in every man's pocket. Every man had his gold dust and scale gold, and paid it out as he received it from his customers. Gold was so abundant that they thought they never would need to have banks.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosmán) suggests that the article be referred to a committee of five. Does he make that motion?

Mr. CROSMAN. I believe it is not in order unless the other motions are withdrawn.

Mr. DELONG. There was one suggestion made by my colleague (Mr. Collins) which I did not reply to. It is stated here that the paper currency of the United States, and the notes issued under the authority of the Government, are amply sufficient, without the establishment of banks.

Mr. COLLINS. My colleague did not understand me ; I did not state that.

Mr. DELONG. Very well ; it has been so stated by others, and perhaps that is the reason why I mistook my colleague. Now the simple and conclusive reply to that is this, that if the private banks cannot compete with the Federal currency, if there should remain a paper currency amply secured, under the authority of the Government, the people will prefer that currency, and consequently there will be no necessity for private banks, and they will all be driven out, as they are in other States. We propose here only to give the power to the people to establish them if they should be required, and I think the time may come when they will be required. If the Government shall be successful in this war, and a time of peace shall follow, it will very soon and very rapidly obliterate the national debt now in existence, and I look forward to the time when there will be very little paper currency issued by the Federal Government. When that time comes, we propose to leave this power in the hands of the Legislature, in order to find a currency in place of the Federal currency, which will then be withdrawn—something to serve as a currency in place of gold and silver. Then, if we strike this section out, the people through their Legislature may establish such a banking system as they please. Now I ask, why not refer the article right now to the Committee of the Whole, without instructions, and then let us fix this section as we want it, report it back and pass it at once, while our attention is turned to the subject. I move to refer the article to the Committee of the Whole, without instructions.

DELONG—EARL—TOZER—PARKER—McCLINTON.

The PRESIDENT. Is the motion made by the gentleman from Storey that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole?

Mr. DELONG. No, sir; the motion is, that Article VIII be referred to the Committee of the Whole without instructions—the whole article.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. EARL. Before going into Committee of the Whole I desire to offer a resolution, when I can obtain leave from the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution may be read for information.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

Resolved, That debate shall be restricted to ten minutes, the same restriction to be applied in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EARL. I believe we can instruct the Committee of the Whole in respect to debate, as well as anything else.

The PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to considering the resolution now?

Mr. DELONG. I beg leave to differ with the gentleman who offers the resolution. It is not in the power of the Convention to instruct the Committee of the Whole in respect to debate.

Some discussion followed on the question of order suggested.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman object to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. DELONG. Only on that ground.

Several other gentlemen objected.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution cannot be considered without unanimous leave of the Convention.

BANKING SYSTEM—AGAIN.

Mr. TOZER made an explanation in regard to the engrossment of Article VIII. The annotations and interlineations in the article, he said, had been very numerous, but the Committee had carefully compared it, and made various corrections, and he believed it had been engrossed in exact accordance with the intentions of the Convention. The gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) had made a remark, either in the way of pleasantry or otherwise, which he thought was a reflection upon the Engrossing Committee.

Mr. DELONG said the remark he had made was entirely in the way of pleasantry, and certainly was not intended to reflect on the ability and intelligence, or on the fidelity of the Committee.

The PRESIDENT. Discussion of that matter is not in order. The question before the Convention is on the motion to refer the article to the Committee of the Whole without instructions.

Mr. PARKER. Is it in order to refer the article without instructions?

The PRESIDENT. It is, if no gentleman raises a point of order.

Mr. PARKER. I will raise the point of order that it is entirely out of order to refer the article without instructions.

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Convention will readily see that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. EARL. I move that the article be referred to a committee of seven.

Mr. DELONG. If there is any objection I will withdraw my motion, but it might have been referred by general consent. My idea was that in Committee of the Whole we could agree upon the construction of the section, and do it all in a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman move a suspension of the rules, in order to refer the article without instructions?

Mr. DELONG. I will make that motion.

Mr. McCLINTON. I am opposed to referring this Article to the Committee of the Whole, either with or without instructions—with instructions to strike out, or with any other instructions whatever. We have already decided upon this matter, and have adopted the Article as it stands, and it now comes up regularly on its third reading. I refer now to Section 6, of Article VIII, and I believe at the time of its adoption it was satisfactory to a very large majority of the Convention. Moreover, I believe that it will be in its present form entirely satisfactory to a large majority of the citizens of this State.

Gentlemen object to the section as engrossed upon the ground that it restricts the Legislature from authorizing the establishment of banks, in case the people desire it. Now I object to changing the provision from its present form for the very reason that I am satisfied the people want to see the power of the Legislature restricted on this matter. I believe if there is any one thing, one right, or one imaginary right—I will call it an imaginary right for the sake of the argument—if there is one imaginany right of which the people are more jealous than of any other, it is this right to keep as near as they possibly can, within the bounds of the laws of Congress, to a metallic currency. Now I do not want to see the powers of the Legislature restricted in matters which I do not consider of very great importance, but as this is a matter of the greatest importance to the interests of the people of the State, I do want to see a prohibitory clause in this Constitution which will prevent the Legislature from ever instituting a general wildcat system of banking in this new State. The sections read by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) from the Constitution, I believe, of the State of Louisiana, are excellent. I believe they are among the very best provisions authorizing banking systems to be found in the Constitution of any State in the United States. Yet, for all that, I do not believe, under the existing circumstances, that it is the best thing we can do to authorize any system of banking, or the circulation of any representative of money except the currency of the United States, and of banks authorized by the laws of Congress. We have already done that in Section 6, as it has been amended, and I hope we shall adhere to that provision as we have already agreed upon it.

Some of the gentlemen who have advocated the change now proposed to be made, have had an eye throughout the sitting of the Convention to the future adoption of this Constitution by the people. They seem to regard, as a matter of the greatest importance, the securing of the adoption of this instrument, and they want to direct their action as much as possible to that end. Now, Mr. President, I do not doubt that the authorizing of the establishment of banks in this State by a provision incorporated in this instrument, would be the greatest death-blow to this Constitution which we could inflict, for the reason that while I am satisfied the people of this Territory are willing to accept the National currency, and that of the banks authorized by Congress, and will have no objection to accepting as representatives of money the bills of banks so authorized by the laws of Congress, yet I am equally well satisfied that they will indignantly frown upon any Constitution which would authorize the Legislature of this State to inaugurate a general system of private banking. I want to sustain the National currency, and for that one reason, almost as much as anything else, I do not want to authorize a system of banking here that would come into conflict with that National currency, and drive it out of circulation.

These are my opinions in brief, and I am willing that this matter should come to a vote immediately. I would rather that the rules should be suspended in order that we may vote on it immediately, because I do not believe the Convention desires to change its action from that which it has already adopted. I hope, therefore, that the rules will be suspended, and that we will at once come to a vote.

Mr. COLLINS. Gentlemen may think it strange that one who has always been an earnest advocate for banks, under proper restrictions, should have called upon the Convention to consider well before taking action upon this matter. I am opposed to the establishment of a banking system, under the laws of this proposed State, because I think that there is at present, or will be in a very short time in the future, no demand for such a banking system. At the time when Congress established this National banking system I paid considerable attention to it, with a view to ascertaining what was likely to be its operation in this Territory, in California, and on the Pacific Coast generally. And gentlemen must bear in mind that this same section has been already amended by the Convention so as to read as follows :

SECTION 6. No bank notes, or paper of any kind, shall ever be permitted to circulate as money in this State, except the Federal currency and the notes of banks authorized under the laws of Congress.

Now this section, as thus amended, contemplates two things: First, that the Federal currency which is now in circulation to the amount of over four hundred millions of dollars, in the United States, shall not be restricted in its circulation in our State; and second, that the operation of the National banking law of Congress shall not be impeded. Congress has passed a law which contemplates the absorbing of this Federal currency into what are called "Five-Twenty Bonds," which at the Treasury Department in Washington can be hypothecated, and placed on deposit, and the Treasurer, or Auditor, will issue to the depositor as many treasury notes, less ten per cent., as he has bonds deposited. For instance: if I wished, in coöperation with some of my fellow citizens, to establish a bank at Carson City, with a capital of five hundred thousand dollars, I would procure legal tender notes to that amount, exchange them for five-twenty bonds, and deposit those bonds with the authorities in Washington, receiving therefor notes for State circulation for the amount deposited, less ten per cent.

Now I have remarked that Congress, or the Executive authorities of this Government, rather, have encountered great opposition to this scheme, on the part of banks organized or formed under the authority of the States of the Federal Union. That has been particularly the case in Boston, Philadelphia, and New York. They have opposed it because they felt that this system of banking would eventually force them out entirely. They felt that there was something dangerous to themselves in this universal banking system, under which the whole property of the Nation is pledged for the redemption of the bills, and under which there is comparatively little or no discount between here and Boston, or between one end of the Union and the other,—that it would come to be appreciated and approbated, and consequently, speedily availed of and possessed, by the people of the entire country. Hence there has been this strong hostility on the part of those banking institutions. Now, for one, I am opposed to the organization of State banks here which may in their operation interpose their influences against the National banks, or the banks authorized under the National laws.

DELONG—COLLINS.

[July 18.

My colleague (Mr. DeLong) says he supposes that in a few years all these National bank bills will be absorbed, and then perchance we may have no banking institutions. That is the very object of the General Government—to induce the absorption of these notes now in circulation into bonds, and to establish this system of National banks. The consequence has been that already agents are buying up the bills with the view of organizing such banks in the Atlantic States, and perhaps on the Pacific coast also. I have heard it stated by parties who are competent to judge, and my own opinion confirms that judgment, that there never was a system of banking so complete and perfect in all its minutia, and especially in regard to protecting the bill-holders, as this system established by Congress. If such be the case, I ask what is the necessity of establishing a system of State banks? There is no analogy between us and California in that regard. I was in favor of a banking system in California in 1849, and all through the vicissitudes of after years, but now California does not need it, because Congress has established a more perfect system than the State could establish—a system that pledges not only the State, but every State, for the redemption of its issues.

My friend and colleague (Mr. Brosnan) has spoken of the New York banks as constituting a very strong and perfect system; but the strength of that system is not equal to that of these National banks, because only the property of New York is pledged for the redemption of their bills, while under this system the property of the nation is pledged, in so far as these bonds go. There has been a conspiracy entered into on this coast against the Federal currency, and we know how a few capitalists, and bankers, and money shavers in San Francisco, have by the power and influence of their money suborned the entire people of the Pacific coast—all the merchants and all the bankers of the country, in California, in Nevada, and in Oregon—against that currency that should have given us money in abundance, while at the same time the premium on gold has been so great that it is passing from us, and very soon we shall have no money with which to transact our business and commerce. I hope we shall not decide to suspend the rules and further investigate this matter. I do think that Section 6 of Article VIII is ample and abundant to answer all the legitimate purposes of this State.

There is only one objection to the system established by Congress, and that I think the next Congress will remove. It is this, that the law contemplates seven per cent. interest only. Now I think Congress would be willing to allow the banks in each State to adapt themselves to the usury laws of the State in which they are organized. That would give a rate of interest of six or seven per cent. in the Eastern States, ten per cent. in California, and whatever rate may be established by our laws in this State. For these reasons I do not see any necessity at all for an amendment of this section.

I am opposed to it also because it will operate, so far as it can operate at all, to prevent the National Government from resuming specie payments. It was distinctly understood that the National law must almost immediately convert all the bills now in circulation into these Fifty-two Bonds, and that, they being absorbed at an early date, the Government will at an early day resume specie payments. The Government wishes to resume specie payments as soon as possible, and asks our cooperation in this matter, in order that that end may be accomplished.

Mr. DELONG. Will my colleague allow me to make a suggestion? It is with a view to this contingency that I offer this amendment: Suppose that Congress, to use a homely phrase, concludes to go out of business upon the war ceasing. Suppose then it should not desire any longer to maintain a banking system as a national matter, but should withdraw or surrender these deposits. Then in that event, there being no paper currency issued by the Federal Government, would we not be left to fall back upon a metallic currency, with a prohibitory clause against any other kind, and against State banks?

Mr. COLLINS. I know it is said that if the skies should fall men might catch larks, but this contingency to which the gentleman refers is so remote that I do not deem it advisable for us to give the Legislature permission, at least without very great restrictions and prohibitions, to enter into any wildcat system of banking. We had an example here, last summer, of the state of excitement, and rashness of adventure, that may prevail when a community is in the enjoyment of great prosperity. We have suffered injuries from that cause from which it may require a decade to enable us to recover. Every one knows the rapidity with which in times of such excitement prices can be swelled up and inflated, and madness seize upon the body of a people. I have seen many communities that have gone through similar scenes, and I know the losses and the sufferings that are thereby brought upon a community. And although I am a bank man, and always have been up to the present time, yet I am not willing that this Convention should place its veto upon that great banking system on which our Federal Government has entered, and in the conduct of which it has enlisted such an amount of wisdom, of sagacity, and of liberality, in order to introduce a system of State banks, which may war against the Federal currency—against that currency which we are bound, by every consideration of patriotism, in the present condition of our country, and the condition it may be in, for another decade, perhaps, to sustain, or to give all the coöperation that the country requires of us to aid in sustaining.

Mr. DELONG. Will my colleague permit me to ask him another question? It is, I believe, a fact admitted, that since the establishment of paper currency by the Federal Government, notwithstanding the liberal and free systems of banking adopted in most of the States, the Federal currency has driven nearly every State bank in the North out of existence. Now if we have this Federal banking system continued, need we fear that that any private banking system will vie with it?

Mr. COLLINS. What does my colleague mean by private banking system?

Mr. DELONG. I mean associations for banking alone.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman refers to private banks—does he mean different from public banks?

Mr. DELONG. No, sir. I mean as contradistinguished from the national banks. They are called private banks, because they are not based upon the national capital. I do not think we need fear that we shall have any other banks than those organized by the Federal Government, as long as the Federal Government shall continue the banking system; and if it should discontinue that system, I think we can trust the people and their Legislature in that particular. It is only with the view of the possible discontinuance of that system that I advocate this amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. Gentlemen will bear this in mind: If they examine the law of Congress, creating this banking system, they will find that it makes provision that every State having so much population shall have the privilege of investing such an amount in these bonds, for the purpose of establishing banks in that State under the Federal law, so that there can be no excess of such banks, in one State over another. If this State comes into the Union she will be entitled to a certain amount of these bonds, and if that provision is altered, as I have suggested, so as to conform to the usury laws of the several States, then, within a few months, I am confident there will be millions of dollars of capital brought here and invested, and it will be used in financial operations in such a manner as to awaken and stimulate business to such an extent as we have never yet dreamed of. I therefore do not want to see any State banks organized, because just the moment they are organized, and succeed in securing the confidence of the people, they will just to that extent deter capitalists from entering into this national banking system, which has inspired the confidence of the entire people. I do hope, therefore, that my friend, who is so earnest and zealous, and who is almost always right, will withdraw his motion, and let this whole thing die out. We have already a sufficiently good and strong banking scheme, and I want nothing better, except it be the change I have referred to, in regard to the rate of interest.

Mr. DUNNE. I shall not expect to be able to throw light upon this subject, after the very able discussion to which we have listened, but I can give the reasons why I am opposed to the proposition now before the Convention. I do not wish to see too many great and important questions put into the Constitution, for the people to be excited about by the politicians in the canvass before us, and I think that the question of a change of our currency is certainly almost as great in importance as the proposed change of our condition from a Territorial to a State government. I think that while it may be a mooted question whether the people of this Territory, either a majority or all of them, are willing or anxious to have the legal tender notes of the Government adopted as the currency of the country, there is no doubt about the proposition that they are not ready at this moment to determine whether or not they will at once jump into a general banking system. I do not think that is a question that should be put before the people now, at the same time that they are called upon to decide upon other, totally different, and perhaps graver matters. Those gentlemen, however, who have favored this motion thus far, seem to have done so on the ground that they wish to have a clause in the Constitution, under which, at some future day, after the legal tender notes shall have become established, and in view of their possibly becoming finally extinguished by the Government, after a long term of years, the State Legislature may have something to fall back upon; so that after the State shall have been deprived of the legal tender notes as a circulating medium, in consequence of their withdrawal by the Government, they may have a means of establishing such a medium of their own. Now I think that matter can better be provided for under the head of the provision for amending the Constitution.

Mr. DELONG. All right; I have no objection to that.

Mr. DUNNE. Now in regard to the point which has been raised, to the effect that the next Congress, or some future Congress, may repeal the law, or take such action as may deprive us of the legal tender notes, I suppose it will be seen that if this banking law is repealed the great absorption of the legal tender notes contemplated will not take place, so that we shall have either the one or the other. We shall have either the legal tender notes, if the banking system is repealed, or if the banking system is continued we shall have the bank notes. If the legal tender notes are absorbed in the purchase of bonds we shall have the benefit of the general banking system, and if not we shall have the original notes. In either case it must be some time yet before they can be generally adopted and come into circulation, and it must also be some time before they can be all called in and extinguished, because there is an immense amount already in the market. If we have occasion, however, in the future, for the establishment of State banks, all we have to do is to pass an amendment to the Constitution, by two successive legislatures, and submit it to the people for their adoption. For one I am opposed to adopting such a provision now.

Mr. DE LONG. Yielding to the opinions of other gentlemen, I will withdraw my motion. The section was amended when it was before the Convention formerly, so as to make it somewhat different from the original section, and I was not aware of the nature of the amendment.

Mr. TOZER. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment, because I would like to have it prevail.

The PRESIDENT. The motion to suspend the rules has been withdrawn.

Mr. DE LONG. I also withdraw the further motion to recommit.

The PRESIDENT. There is no further question then before the Convention, in regard to Section 6.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. DE LONG. I suppose the only question now remaining unfinished in regard to the article, is that in relation to Section 9, as printed. We have stricken out, or recommended the striking out, of the proviso authorizing the Legislature to grant three millions of dollars for a railroad, and if it is in order, I now move that the Convention adopt the report of the committee, striking out all of that proviso.

Mr. HAWLEY. A member who is now absent has spoken to me in relation to the feasibility of incorporating in that section a provision similar in its character to the provision adopted by the former Convention, but applying to a company which shall build a road between the mining sections of the State and the Sierra Nevadas, connecting the mines with the wood and water of the mountains. I do not propose to offer any amendment myself, but I merely submit the suggestion, in order that if any member feels so disposed he may put it before the Convention in some shape. I do not feel disposed myself to make any motion in regard to it, because, although I should be willing to do something of the kind, yet I see many difficulties in the way. The completion of such a road, for instance, would involve the necessity of the outlay of an immense amount of money, in the freightage of iron and other railroad materials, and that would entail a much larger amount of debt upon the State than I should feel disposed to vote for.

Mr. DE LONG. I think the project is chimerical.

Mr. MASON. I trust that all that portion of Section 9, of Article VIII, which is contained in the proviso, will be stricken out.

Mr. DE LONG. It has been stricken out already.

Mr. MASON. I certainly want to see it stricken out, but I wish it distinctly understood at the same time, that there is no man more ardently in favor of the Pacific Railroad than I am. But I am not in favor of establishing, or of contributing my support to the sustaining of a monopoly. Now I understand that there are two roads in a state of rivalry endeavoring to cross the mountains.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that Section 9, of Article VIII, as printed, has been adopted. Will the Secretary state the precise condition of the question.

The SECRETARY. The section, as it now stands, reads as follows :

SECTION 9. The State shall not donate or loan money, or its credit, subscribe to, or be interested in any stock of any company, association or corporation, except corporations formed for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, or charitable purposes.

The balance of the section has been stricken out.

Mr. MASON. Then I hope the section will be adopted as it stands.

The PRESIDENT. If no amendments are offered, the reading of the article will be proceeded with.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the rest of the article, and the question was stated on its final passage.

Mr. CROSMAN. With regard to Section 9, of this article, so far as I am concerned, I am not satisfied with it. Circumstances now unforeseen may occur under which we may want to aid the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. DE LONG. Then we can amend the Constitution.

Mr. CROSMAN. In answer to that, I will say it is well known that, according to the present programme, we are to have a provision for biennial sessions of the Legislature, and in that case it would take from two to three years to amend the Constitution. The Railroad Company has represented to us, on this floor, through its able President, that the finances of the Company are in a very good condition, and it seems as though they would be abundantly able to push the road forward, certainly as fast as they can obtain the material to do so. But it is well known also, to every member of this Convention, that the Company will have a great deal to overcome in passing the summit. The immense expense of the undertaking will be there. Now, as matters may turn out, their finances may not be as good as they have been represented to us here. They may possibly push the road forward to a distance of thirty, or sixty, or eighty miles, and then be obliged to suspend, and the construction of the road be delayed, so that we should be deprived of the benefits which we hope to derive from the Pacific Railroad for perhaps two, three, or four years longer, in order to get through an amendment to the Constitution, under which we shall not be absolutely prohibited from aiding the road in any way, by legislative action, when at the same time the great mass of the people might feel a strong desire to give them aid. And at that time, too, the people might be abundantly able to aid the railroad without injuring themselves materially, and I think we have reason to believe that by that time we will be in a condition to grant aid to the extent of a few millions of dollars, without any serious injury to ourselves financially. For such reasons I have desired to see a proviso incorporated in that section, which I have rather hastily drawn, and which I will send up and have read.

Now this other matter, in relation to banks, has been passed in a manner which is not altogether satisfactory to me. It has been passed in that way for the purpose of harmonizing and saving time, but I certainly think, for myself, that we ought not to be too hasty in regard to these matters. We ought not to allow an instrument like this to pass from our hands in an unsatisfactory condition. But in this case, what I want to get at is to retain that right which we now hold, or which is inherent, the right to lend our aid to an enterprise which is to be of such great benefit to us. I do not want to tie up the hands of the Legislature upon such a subject, so as to prevent it from ever granting aid, but I am in favor of retaining the right, and empowering the Legislature to grant it, so that if the Legislature two, four, or five years hence, shall feel disposed to pass a law for that purpose, and the people are disposed to sanction it, that can be done, and aid can be granted to this enterprise. That is the right of the people, and I believe that circumstances may occur under which it would be advisable. I think gentlemen will all agree with me that it is of importance to us to push the road forward as rapidly as possible. What I wish to propose is this, and I ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY read as follows :

Provided, That the State may issue bonds to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, after it shall have completed, and have in good running order, eighty miles of its road from Sacramento towards our State, at the rate of fifty thousand dollars per mile as it progresses towards our State ; but no such law shall be in force until sanctioned by the people.

Mr. CROSMAN. That is the amendment I propose, and it seems to me that in adopting our fundamental law, we ought not altogether to tie up the hands of the Legislature in this important matter.

Mr. PARKER. I second the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON. Why does the gentleman specify the Central Pacific Railroad, instead of any other road? Why not leave it open to other roads, since there are two roads? Why should we give our preference to that road?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it is best to have a saving clause there, and I suggest where it says "on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe," that we limit the interest to seven per cent.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will accept that amendment. I do not know as I can throw any further light upon this subject, or upon the subject of the inquiry suggested by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Gibson.) I believe that this is the only road, or at least that this is the only company occupying a position where it is likely to give us any immediate help in the way of a railroad across the mountains. This company has the government aid, and State aid from California, and it is already progressing with some considerable degree of rapidity, and it is the only road that has been laid out up to the State line.

Now one word further as to the distance specified here, of eighty miles. It is said that the distance from Sacramento to the summit is one hundred and four miles, but when they shall have come eighty miles from Sacramento they will have reached a point where immense expenditures will be required. I should like to see this matter placed in such a position that in case the finances of the company should become so much embarrassed that they will not be able to push the road forward, then, if the people of this State wish to do so, they may lend the credit of the State to aid that work.

Mr. MASON. With all due deference and respect to the opinions of members of the Convention, I entertain views with regard to this Pacific Railroad which I would like briefly to present. I would have discussed the subject when it was up before, but the question having been sprung a little differently from what I had anticipated, I was precluded.

Now, sir, I said before, and I say again, that I am decidedly in favor of the Pacific Railroad. But I am not in favor of being generous without first being just. I am satisfied that no contribution from the State of Nevada could be given which would facilitate the building of this road, and even if it could, I, for one, would be opposed to it. I have but very little faith in, and I have but very little love for, these monopolies. I have witnessed them for the last thirteen years in the State of California, and I have witnessed particularly the love and admiration of the people which is cherished by that vast monopoly called the California Steam Navigation Company. I know something, also, of the love, the approbation, and the admiration which the people have for that monopoly. I have seen that when a man of indomitable energy and enterprise has started an opposition, this monopoly has manifested its love for the people by reducing its rates of fare down to a mere nominal sum, and I have seen that when, by the exercise of their power, and the concentration of their wealth, these same enterprising parties have been run off, within twelve hours the fare has been raised by that monopoly from half a dollar to five dollars, for the trip from Sacramento to San Francisco.

Sir, a monopoly, enjoying the exclusive right to run a railroad to this State, might reduce the fare somewhat. They might reduce the price of potatoes five cents on the hundred pounds, perhaps, and it would be a benefit to the miners, and to the community generally, to that extent, I admit. I know it would be a benefit. But their love for the dear people I am satisfied would not be such as to induce them to reduce their prices below a paying point. They would keep them up as high as they could. That is the reason I am opposed to the imposing of a heavy mortgage on the people of this new State—a mortgage of all they have and all they ever expect to have—to this railroad company, and their heirs, as has been done in California. I am opposed to that. While I would be willing to mortgage the dear people of the State of Nevada to a third railroad line—for I am willing to contribute to the third railroad that shall connect the State of Nevada with the navigable waters of California—I am not willing to mortgage them to the first. As to the first railroad, I say, God deliver me from a monopoly of that character.

WARWICK.

And while I oppose this aid upon principle, I say also that we cannot afford it. If we can afford to sustain a State Government, it will be enough—and I think we can afford that. With all respect to the morality, virtue, and piety of the members of this Convention, I say I do not believe there is one member among them who does not pay more for his vices and his luxuries than he does for his taxes. For one, I know I pay ten times as much, and I presume the most pious of us pay more. But, sir, I look upon the establishment of this government as a national call. The Government of the United States says to us—“We want you in our Union; we need your assistance; we want your Senators and your representatives in Congress; we want them for the purpose of enabling us to keep pace with the age; we want them to help amend the Constitution of the United States; we want you to form a State Government, and we ask it.”

I desire to respond to that call. Sir, there is in man an eternal principle of progress, which no power on earth can resist. Every custom, every law, every science, and every religion must fall before it, like Dagon of old before the ark of the living God. And that principle of progress is to-day living, and with unwonted vigor and unrelaxing strength is to-day battling all over the world against the ideas of nobility and privilege. It lives to-day, and it will live forever. It is impossible, sir, to withstand that benign influence. It must and will go forth like a bright angel of God, to unbar the prison doors, to succor the needy, to relieve the distressed, and to pour a flood of life and light into the darkened intellects and dreary hearts of the downtrodden sons of men. That principle is opposed, sir—utterly opposed—to the principle of monopoly. It is in favor of granting equal privileges and favors to all. I want it distinctly understood, Mr. President, that I am an old Democrat—one of the old Jackson school—and I remember the language used by that distinguished statesman on this subject of monopolies. I remember that celebrated protest of Gen. Jackson's, in which, in substance, he says it is not in a splendid government, supported by powerful monopolies, that the people are to find protection for their liberties, and safety and happiness, but rather in a plain system, void of monopolies, granting equal favors to all, and special privileges to none; dispensing its blessings like the dews of heaven, which fall unseen, unfelt, and unnoticed, save from the richness of the verdure which they produce. That is the true doctrine, sir. I want no special privileges, and more especially, no monopolies, and therefore I oppose a monopoly of this character, that would inevitably crush those vital interests which I am here, for one, especially to represent. I hope, sir, that this clause of Section 9 of Article VIII will remain just exactly as it is now in this Constitution. It suits me as it is. In the immortal language of PUNCH—“It suits Crooks.”

Mr. WARWICK. I am glad to learn that it does “suit Crooks;” but I confess that it is very far from suiting me. I was astonished to hear the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason) after his eloquent, beautiful, and thrilling peroration about progress, fall back upon his old stage-coach, his old high prices, and all that, resting satisfied, sir, with things as they are. I was astonished, I say, to see this gentleman, who is one of the most ardent advocates of progress, resting so superlatively satisfied with things as they are, when he knows that he and every one of his constituents are suffering to-day for that great artery of communication which we, or some of us here, at least, desire to assist in opening. I am now, sir, and have always been a friend to the Pacific Railroad, in the Legislature of California, here on the floor of this Convention, and everywhere else. I believe that those who knew me then, and who know me now, will say that I have let no opportunity pass unimproved of rendering every assistance in my power to that great enterprise, or of advocating it so far as my poor ability would permit. And now, almost feeling that in consequence of the superior eloquence with which opposite action is here supported I stand no chance of success, I nevertheless still feel it my duty, before the final passage of this article, to make at least one more effort to have some provision made under which we can hope to sustain, and to assist if need be, this important undertaking. I trust, therefore, that the article will be amended, or referred to a committee for that purpose, and if the pending amendment is not satisfactory, I have another amendment which I hope may be inserted in its place.

Sir, the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Gibson) has inquired why, by name, the Central Pacific Railroad Company has been designated in this amendment. I will tell him. It is because the General Government, in its wisdom, after examining every plan, every survey, which has been presented, has decided that that is the most feasible route, and the one most likely to be finished. It is because there is no other road in existence, or likely to be, and no company formed for the purpose of building any other road connecting our Territory or State with the navigable waters of California. For that reason we desire to hold out our hands to this company, which has shown, by every evidence in its power to present, that it really desires and intends to complete this great national work.

WARWICK—TOZER.

[July 18.

Now these gentlemen who are so adverse to monopolies, it seems to me, had they reflected for a moment, would have perceived that under our present system, sir, we are living under one of the most greivous monopolies that a people could possibly labor under. Is not the present system of tolls on all the roads across the mountains, which swell up the cost of passages and freights, a most greivous and burdensome monopoly? Though five years have elapsed since our Territory began to be developed, has there been any combination yet formed by which to reduce the prices of freight and passage between here and the State of California? How do we stand to-day? Before the Territory of Nevada was organized, while we were still a part of Utah, we could communicate with California at a rate of fare of fifteen dollars. That appears to have been the regularly established price; then our mines were discovered and population flowed in, and we became a distinct and separate territory. The amount of intercourse between us and California increased to an unparalleled extent, but instead of lessening the cost of communication it has risen from fifteen to twenty-five, twenty-eight, and thirty dollars, and there it remains, unalterably fixed. Though we have thousands of tons of freight constantly crossing the mountains, and are expending thousands of dollars daily of our own capital for its transportation, yet we have never been able to reduce the price, or to diminish in any degree the cost of communication between here and California. There are rival routes, with coaches filled with passengers. Five lines of stages a day have been put on. But what is the result of all this rivalry? Has it been to reduce the fare? No, sir. They have put on lines of opposition which are opposed in everything else, but on the question of fare they are always sound, as if it were a thing agreed upon by common consent. We have never been able to reduce the cost of transportation one single dollar. Does not the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. Mason,) groan under a monopoly like that? It is a grievance, sir, which reaches us at the other side of this Territory, for it almost cuts us off from the outer world. Although we have no rugged mountains to cross, yet we have to pay almost twice as much to reach this portion of our Territory, as the passage from here to California. Does the gentleman know that? Does he know that for one hundred and eighty miles, the distance from Sacramento to Virginia, the price by stage is twenty-eight dollars, while for one hundred and eighty miles, the same distance from Virginia to Austin, the fare is fifty dollars? Does he know that this greivous monopoly is crushing us to the earth? The high prices of freight, and the difficulty of communicating with us by lines which are bringing thousands and thousands of men into our midst, to people our hills and valleys, and to develop the wealth which there lies hidden in abundance, constitute the greivous monopoly under which we are suffering.

I look upon this Pacific Railroad enterprise, not as a monopoly, but rather as a needed improvement, and one which is demanded by the whole country. It is one which the United States Government, even in this hour of national peril, has shown, by munificent donations, its desire to encourage. And why? That the people of Nevada may be assisted and enabled to grow in wealth and greatness. And yet now, while the opportunity is afforded, these gentlemen are not willing even to give the people of Nevada the poor privilege of saying whether they want to grant their assistance or not. We ask for nothing that the people cannot grant; we do not ask for legislation to the amount of a dollar. We only ask that the poor but noble privilege shall be granted, that the people, if they find it necessary for their well-being, shall be allowed to say—"We will lend our aid to this enterprise, because it is necessary, absolutely necessary, for our existence." Can it be, after the struggles we have passed through, with all the necessities of the case pressing upon every side, which are so apparent in this community, that a Convention met for the purpose of framing a Constitution for the State of Nevada, shall say to the people, during the progress of this, the greatest national work of this or any age—"We have closed the door against you, and barred it in your faces. You may speak in your Legislature upon any other subject, but you shall not speak upon this, which most concerns your vital interests. We deny you the privilege forever and forever." Why, sir, it seems to me but little short of an outrage to say to this people that they shall not speak upon this question. While we pass anything we please by a bare majority of a poor little body of thirty-two or thirty-three members, yet we are to say to the people that if they, even by an overwhelming majority, seek to take action upon this question, they shall be compelled to wait three or four years before they can effect their purpose.

Now, Mr. President, as it seems to me that the proposition of the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosman) needs some amendment, I hope he will permit me to offer the following as a substitute:

Provided, That the State of Nevada may loan its credit to the Central Pacific Railroad to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, when it shall have completed its road to a distance of eighty miles east from the navigable waters of the Sacramento River; but no appropriation of any character shall be made unless sanctioned by a vote of the people.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's amendment will be entertained as an amendment to the instructions.

Mr. WARWICK. Very well; I respectfully submit that as an amendment to the instructions.

Mr. TOZER. I rise merely for the purpose of

Monday,]

STURTEVANT—PRESIDENT—TOZER—WARWICK.

[July 18.

stating my views on this subject. I am in favor of this motion. I hope this section will be re-committed with those instructions, and when the report of the committee shall come before this Convention I hope the Convention will finally incorporate it into our Constitution. It is scarcely necessary for me to explain why these are my views. My sentiment and opinion upon this subject have been fully expressed by the speakers who have preceded me, and who have advocated the views I entertain on this question. All agree, the opponents as well as the advocates of this measure, that a railroad running from California into our midst, or across our Territory, would be a great public benefit. There is no member of this Convention so bold as to deny that proposition. Now it may be, as my friend from Esmeralda (Mr. Mason) fears, a monopoly.

Mr. STURTEVANT [interrupting.] I rise to a question of order. This is the same question which has once been before us, and which was stricken out altogether by the Convention, and I believe our rules are, that when a subject matter has once been decided by the Convention it cannot be brought up again.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the point of order to be that the amendment is the same as one which has previously been disposed of.

Mr. STURTEVANT. That is it.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has made an examination, and thinks there is a material difference between the two amendments. The point of order is therefore not well taken.

Mr. TOZER. Another great reason why I am in favor of this motion, and shall vote for this reference, is the reason expressed by the eloquent and learned gentleman from Esmeralda.

Mr. STURTEVANT [interrupting.] Will the Chair be kind enough to inform us as to our future action, so that we can act understandingly. I do not wish to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I wish to have the previous instructions read which have been referred to.

The SECRETARY read the amendment which was offered by Mr. Fitch on a previous day, and rejected, as follows:

Provided, That the State may provide for the payment of the interest upon the bonds of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, for a length of time not exceeding twenty years, and at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent., for the completion of the Central Pacific Railroad across the Sierra Nevada Mountains; but no law for the payment of interest as aforesaid shall be effective unless sanctioned by the vote of the people, nor until said road shall have been completed and in running order for a distance of sixty miles eastward from the Sacramento River.

Mr. STURTEVANT. The President will please take notice that at a previous time, several days ago, when this same section was under consideration by the Convention, a question of this same kind coming up, in regard to a road crossing the mountains, this whole matter was stricken out by the Convention. Therefore, I contend, and I suppose I need not go behind that, that this amendment is in reality the same subject matter which has already been acted upon. Although it is different in words, yet it amounts to the same thing.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair does not recollect any proposition which was equivalent to this.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I allude to the printed section.

Mr. WARWICK. The action to which the gentleman refers was taken in Committee of the Whole, and as we are now in Convention I presume it is competent to renew the same proposition, even if it be the same. The status of the article is now altogether different. The Committee of the Whole can no more bind the Convention, by its action, than any other committee can, and consequently it would be competent to offer an amendment in the Convention, although it might have been previously rejected in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that the point of order is not well taken, and will state his reasons.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Oh, it makes no difference about the reasons.

The PRESIDENT. The proposition in the printed copy is not the same as the one now before the Convention, in this, as well as in other particulars, that in the printed copy there is no such limitation as to distance as is contained in this amendment.

Mr. TOZER. I believe I have the floor. I seem to be so peculiarly unfortunate that, although since the first day of our session I have only risen to express my views in the very briefest manner, yet I can never be allowed to say even a few words without some interruption. I have been perfectly content to sit at the feet of the Gamaliel from Washoe and learn wisdom, without even attempting to interrupt him.

The gentleman from Esmeralda (Mr. Mason) has expressed a fear that the railroad might become a monopoly, and thereby injure our interests. I admit that it might be to some extent a monopoly, as the first railroad across the mountains must inevitably be, yet I cannot conceive how even then it can become injurious to us. I believe that a railroad across the mountains, even though it were a monopoly, would still be a great benefit to us. The monopoly to which the gentleman refers on the Sacramento River—the Steam Navigation Company,—although undoubtedly a monopoly, is still a most decided advantage to the people who have to travel up and down that river. So it will be of a railroad between here and California. Though it should become as great and complete a monopoly as the California Steam Navigation Company, yet it would be a monopoly which would save us millions of dollars every year. Therefore, I shall vote in favor of these instructions and for the aid proposed in this section to be given to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, notwithstanding that I fear, as the gentleman from

DUNNE—STURTEVANT—GIBSON.

[July 18.

Esmeralda fears, that it may become a monopoly.

The gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) said to the Convention that he should oppose another amendment because he did not want to see so important a matter submitted to the votes of the people. Now it is for that very reason that I have voted for and continuously favored amendments of this nature, proposed by myself and others. I am in favor of such propositions because they do provide for leaving the question to the vote of the people. I, for one, am willing to trust these questions entirely to the people, and I believe they are fully capable of deciding them. I have the most unflinching faith in the honesty and the capacity of the people, to well and truly, faithfully and honestly, decide all questions of great importance, in accordance with their own best interests, and I trust that I shall never lose that faith in the people. And as this amendment proposes to refer this whole subject matter to the people, I am in favor of it, believing that nothing but the greatest good of the greatest number of the people of this State can possibly result from pursuing that course.

Mr. DUNNE. Will the gentleman from Storey allow me to make a little explanation, at this moment? I wish to explain a misapprehension on the part of that gentleman, in regard to the reason why I voted against the amendment offered a few moments ago. It was not that I was opposed to leaving questions of grave importance to be determined by the vote of the people—not at all. The gentleman labors under a great misapprehension in that respect. It was because I did not wish to see questions of the greatest importance, questions which are of almost as much importance as the question of the adoption of the Constitution itself, incorporated into the Constitution, to be submitted to the people, and voted on at the same time with the Constitution. These matters necessarily involve questions with which the adoption of a State Government has not, or need not have any connection. On the contrary, I voted previously for an amendment allowing aid to be granted to the Pacific Railroad, for the simple reason that it did leave the question to be determined upon by the people at a subsequent time. I believe in leaving all important questions to the people, but I do not believe in incorporating all the important questions in the world into one instrument, to be submitted to the people at one time. I wish the people to retain the power to aid a railroad across the Sierras, whenever they may deem it proper to lend their aid, and I shall vote for any amendment, which is not too loose in its construction, having that object in view.

Mr. STURTEVANT. The ideas of the gentleman last up are very good, but they are unlike those of my worthy friend from Storey, (Mr. Tozer,) who preceded him. The gentleman from Storey says he sees no objection to this motion, inasmuch as the question is going to be left to the people, but I will tell the gentleman the objection which I have to it, and which has been illustrated here for several days past. I am afraid of that enormous vote which the gentleman has the pleasure in part to represent. With that vote they can "wax" all the balance of us. [Laughter.] That is my objection, or at least one of my objections. This mammoth county of Storey can now send delegates here pretty nearly equal, in point of numbers, to all the balance of the Territory. It is much larger than any other county in the Territory, or in the State, as it may be, although I am in hopes, under the present circumstances, that it will not become a State. My objection is, that when it comes to a vote of the people they can beat us all back, if they hang together, and I have no doubt that in this matter they will. The gentlemen who represent Storey County here are all very influential, and no doubt they could carry this question in their county, but gentlemen will remember that the people of the rural districts, and the floating property, have got to pay all the taxes, and they will have a very poor chance, I am afraid, to get in any such restrictions as will prevent the railroad company from taking every thing they want, and running off with it with impunity. Therefore I say, in the first place, that my objection to this amendment is, that it benefits nobody but the owners of mining property, which, as has been already urged here, is the property particularly and peculiarly interested in the railroad, and benefited by it. These mining counties have a tremendous vote, which would be very likely to be cast entirely for their own interests, especially since, through the influence of my friend from Storey County on my right, (Mr. DeLong,) they have got engrafted into the Constitution a provision which "lets them out" of paying any taxes. Not satisfied with driving two horses, they will think they must drive four, and go scooting through the country at a tremendous rate of speed. Money comes easy out of the mines, and goes easy, and it will be easy for them to get votes enough to carry through any railroad scheme. Everything will go easy, except with the rural districts and the floating property. These are my principal objections.

Mr. GIBSON. Gentlemen have been talking here all along of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, just as though there were no other railroad company striving to reach our borders. Now I wish to state to the Convention that there is another railroad in progress, and by the first day of August next that road will have as many miles completed as the Central Pacific will have. At this time they are laying the rails upon their road from Folsom towards this valley, and they will have in running order on the first day of August thirteen miles of railroad this side of Folsom, which will make a few more miles of railroad this way from Sacramento, than the Central Pacific will have. Now, sir, this company has never been asking for State aid to help its road along, but those who compose it have gone to work with their own means. There are now engineers on the route surveying the line of the road from Placerville eastward towards this valley, and they believe they have got, and are at work upon the most feasible route of any of the routes proposed. Not having to tunnel through the Sierra Nevada Mountains, their road can be built, they think, at much less cost than any other, the cost of the road by the Placerville route being only estimated at eleven hundred thousand dollars, running from Folsom, and in connection with that the Freeport road is now in running order, striking the river fourteen miles below Sacramento, and thereby saving an hour and a half of steamboating, and gaining one hour in time.

PARKER—GIBSON—WARWICK—EARL—DUNNE.

[July 19.]

Mr. PARKER. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Has any railroad company ever obtained or asked for a charter to extend or complete a road towards this Territory this side of Placerville?

Mr. GIBSON. I understand that this railroad company have. They are to connect with the Placerville road, running up the American River by way of Strawberry, and then through to this valley.

Mr. WARWICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? Are not the rails of the Freeport road now being taken up to use on that portion of the line between Folsom and Placerville?

Mr. GIBSON. I believe not.

Mr. WARWICK. I believe they have abandoned that road altogether, after five months unsuccessful opposition to Sacramento.

Mr. GIBSON. I only know that some five or six miles of the track this side of Folsom are already laid, and they have not, like the Central Pacific Railroad Company, stopped their work, but are still pushing it forward. Why gentlemen should be so anxious to encourage one road, on which the work has been discontinued, as against another, which is being pushed forward with vigor, I do not understand. If this State shall be able to lend its aid at all, I am in favor of lending that aid within our own borders, and gentlemen are aware that the Central Pacific Railroad is to strike us forty miles from this place and thirty-two miles from the city of Virginia. It will be necessary for us therefore to connect with that road, at that point, and if we have any money to lend, or to give, I hold that we should use it to connect the road with us.

Mr. WARWICK. I understand the gentleman to state that the Pacific Railroad comes only within forty miles of this place. I desire to ask what is the distance which the gentleman estimates between here and Washoe City?

Mr. GIBSON. They do not propose to strike Washoe City at all, but to come in beyond that—the other side of the range.

Mr. WARWICK. The line certainly does not run the other side of the Truckee River, and that is only twenty-three miles from here.

Mr. EARL. The road strikes the State line near Crystal Peak, which is about forty miles distant.

Mr. GIBSON. That is my understanding—that the Central Pacific Railroad strikes the State line forty miles from this place and over thirty miles from Virginia; and in order that it may be of any benefit to us it is necessary to connect from Virginia and from this point with that road. Now I say if we have any money to lend or to give to any railroad enterprise, I think it should be lent or given in this Territory or State, and not in the State of California. My colleague (Mr. Kinkead) has prepared an amendment providing for the loan of the State aid to a railroad to be constructed for that purpose, which I hope he will present for the consideration of this Convention; and I trust we shall not, as this amendment proposes, give all our aid to a road to be constructed outside the borders of our State.

Mr. DUNNE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him. I understand him to say that he wishes to leave this matter so that if there should be any opposition line hereafter we can give the same chance to the State to extend aid to that opposition as to the Central Pacific Railroad line.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to give the same to each road.

Mr. DUNNE. I agree to that, and will be happy to act upon that suggestion. But I will now suggest that it is nearly the time for adjournment, and I think we had better have some consultation on this subject. I suggest, also, that we are apparently approaching the close of our labors, and as both the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Education desire to meet to-night, I will ask for an adjournment of the Convention until to-morrow morning.

Mr. GIBSON. I will give way for that purpose.

Mr. DUNNE. Then I move that the Convention adjourn until nine o'clock, A. M., to-morrow.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, at five o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 19, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock.

On motion of Mr. BANKS, (the President being temporarily absent), Mr. HAWLEY was requested to act as President pro tem., and took the chair.

The roll was called, and the following members responded to their names: Messrs. Banks, Brady, Brosnan, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, Dunne, Earl, Folsom, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, Parker, Sturtevant, Warwick, and Wetherill—19.

Tuesday,] STURTEVANT—LOCKWOOD—HAWLEY—BANKS—PRESIDENT—KINKEAD. [July 19.

On motion of Mr. DUNNE, there being less than a quorum present, a call of the House was ordered.

Messrs. Chapin, Frizell, and Tagliabue came in and presented excuses for their absence.

On motion of Mr. STURTEVANT, there being a quorum in attendance, further proceedings under the call of the House were dispensed with.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. NIMS.

The journal of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

Messrs. Kinkead, DeLong, Gibson, Proctor, McClinton, Murdock, Haines and the President, who had come in during the reading of the journal, severally, upon motion, had their names recorded as present.

THE SCHEDULE.

Some discussion took place in relation to the manner in which the Committee on the Schedule had been constituted.

Mr. LOCKWOOD, at his own request, was excused from service on that committee, leaving it to consist of the following members: Messrs. DeLong, of Storey; Dunne, of Humboldt; Kennedy, of Lyon; Haines, of Douglas; Wetherill, of Esmeralda; Warwick, of Lander; Belden, of Washoe; Proctor, of Nye; Murdock, of Churchill, and Johnson, (the President,) of Ormsby.

REPORTS.

[The PRESIDENT in the chair.]

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Enrollment, presented the following report:

To the President and Members of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Nevada:

Your Committee on Enrollment beg leave respectfully to report, that they have examined the enrolled copies of the Resolution, Preamble, and Article I of the Constitution, entitled "Declaration of Rights," and find the same correctly enrolled—(having carefully compared the same with the engrossed copies as passed)—with the exception of the definite article "the" before "citizens of the United States," in the ordinance; and they recommend, also, the insertion of the word "and" before the words "no person shall be convicted of treason," etc., in Section 19 of Article I as enrolled.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. T. HAWLEY, Chairman,

Mr. BANKS. Those words, I understand, were stricken out by order of the Convention upon the report of the Committee on Phraseology, and therefore no action is required by the Convention. It is only necessary to correct the error which has occurred in the enrollment.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I rise to a question of order. I think it is not in order for the Committee on Enrollment to report anything, unless it is correctly enrolled.

The PRESIDENT. That is the only legitimate report; yet, upon the recommendation of the committee, it would be within the power of the Convention to make the amendments suggested. But this first amendment, I will suggest, seems to be in conflict with the action of the Convention on the report of the Committee on Phraseology, that the word "the" should be left out.

Mr. HAWLEY. If there is no objection, I will withdraw that portion of the report.

Mr. BANKS. As to the other amendment—the word "and"—I think the word should be there, although it is not in the engrossed copy. But I understand that the duty of the Enrolling Committee is to see that an article is enrolled in exact accordance with the engrossed copy, and if it is not so enrolled they should not report it, but have the Clerk re-enroll it.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman is quite correct as to the duty of the Committee; and the object of having a Committee on Phraseology was to avoid bringing up these questions. It is the province of the Committee on Enrollment to see that each article is properly enrolled, according to the previous action of the Convention. Nevertheless, I suppose it is within the power of the Convention to make the amendment, upon the recommendation of the Committee, and it does not seem to make any material difference in what manner it is done.

Mr. BANKS. But I understand the committee to report that this article is wrongly enrolled.

The PRESIDENT. I understand the committee to report only that the enrollment is slightly variant, and they desire to incorporate a word which they regard as necessary to the full understanding of the section.

Mr. DELONG. Very well; let us constitute ourselves a labor-saving machine, and make this slight amendment now, by general consent.

The PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the question will be on the adoption of the report.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Secretary read the report as now amended?

The SECRETARY read as follows:

"Your Committee on Enrollment beg leave respectfully to report, that they have examined the enrolled copies of the Resolution, Ordinance, Preamble, and Article I of the Constitution, entitled 'Declaration of Rights,' and find the same correctly enrolled; and the committee recommend the insertion of the word 'and' before the words 'no person,' in Section 19 of Article 1."

The question was taken upon the adoption of the report as modified, and it was adopted.

Mr. KINKEAD, from the Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement of the Constitution, submitted the following report:

Mr. President—Your Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement of the Constitution have had under consideration Articles II, III, IV, and V, and beg leave to report that in their opinion the several articles should be incorporated in the Constitution in the order in which they are respectively numbered. They recommend the insertion of the word "the" before "members," in the first line of Section 13 of Article IV. Also to strike out the word "nor," in the fourth line from the bottom of section 20, in the same article.

Respectfully submitted,

J. H. KINKEAD, Chairman.

Tuesday,]

BROSNAN—PRESIDENT—DUNNE—EARL—PARKER—DELONG—COLLINS.

[July 19.

The question was taken on the adoption of the report, and it was adopted.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move, if it be in order, that Section 20 of Article IV, which designates subjects which shall not be specially legislated upon, be so arranged in the enrollment that each clause specifying an inhibited subject shall commence with a capital letter, and end with a colon. I think it will simplify that section, and avoid any confusion which might occur from the use of the word "nor," or the word "or." Gentlemen of the Enrolling Committee will find in the Constitution of Indiana a similar section, which may furnish all the guide they will need in the enrollment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it would be eminently proper—taking the Constitution of Indiana as a guide—to make such arrangement of that section.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF ARTICLES.

Mr. DUNNE offered the following resolution, which was adopted :

Resolved, That Article XII, entitled Education, be read by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education; that Articles XIII entitled Militia, XIV entitled Public Institutions, XV entitled Boundary, and XVII entitled Amendments, be read by title and referred to the Committee of the Whole; and that Articles XVI entitled Miscellaneous Provisions, and XVIII entitled Schedule, be read by title and referred to the Committee on Schedule.

The several articles named in the resolution were accordingly read by title, and referred as indicated.

The PRESIDENT. It will be seen that, by this resolution, and by the previous action of the Convention, disposition has been made of all the articles in the Constitution, all of which have now been referred to appropriate committees.

LIMITATION OF SPEECHES.

Mr. EARL offered the following resolution, which was read :

Resolved, That debate be restricted to ten minutes, and but once on the same subject; and that when in Committee of the Whole, the committee be instructed to restrict debate to ten minutes.

Mr. EARL. In offering that resolution permit me to say that I do not wish to cut off any member from speaking a reasonable length of time, but it does seem to me that we are consuming a large amount of time unnecessarily, and that a resolution of this kind will expedite our work.

Mr. PARKER. I call for a division of the question. I see that the resolution instructs the Committee of the Whole to limit debate, and I think that is out of order.

Mr. EARL. Will the gentleman show me wherein it is out of order?

Mr. PARKER. We have no business to dictate to any committee. I have the authority of Jefferson's Manual for that.

Mr. DELONG. I rise to a question of order, which is, that we cannot restrict debate in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EARL. We cannot restrict the number of speeches, but we can certainly restrict the time; at any rate it is so laid down Jefferson's Manual.

After considerable discussion upon the question of order.

The PRESIDENT decided that the point of order was not well taken.

Mr. COLLINS. I think we have proceeded very well thus far without such a limitation, and I do not see the propriety or the necessity of adopting it at this time, when we are probably near the close of our session.

The PRESIDENT. We have already adopted a resolution restricting debate to fifteen minutes, and that is a standing rule in this body, but unless objections are made to a member's proceeding the Chair has not felt himself authorized to enforce the rule. The objection must come from the body of the Convention, and not from the Chair.

Mr. PARKER. Under the ruling of the Chair I withdraw the call for a division of the question, but I would ask if in Committee of the Whole any member can be permitted to speak more than once?

The PRESIDENT. That would be the ruling, if this resolution were adopted in place of our former rule.

Mr. PARKER. I ask if in Committee of the Whole, under this resolution, each member would be restricted to speaking only ten minutes, and only once on a subject?

The PRESIDENT. That would be the understanding of the Chair. If this resolution should be adopted, such will be the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. PARKER. From that decision I will be obliged to appeal, on the ground that, according to Jefferson's Manual, in Committee of the Whole, every member may speak as often as he pleases.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman had better take his appeal from the ruling of the Chair than the resolution is in order.

Mr. DUNNE. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to the wording of the resolution, which says that a member shall speak only once in Convention, but in Committee of the Whole it only limits the time.

Mr. EARL. That was my intention—that members should not be restricted in Committee of the Whole as to the number of times of speaking, but should be limited to ten minutes. I understand that according to Jefferson's Manual any member may speak in Committee of the Whole as often as he pleases, but we can limit the time.

Mr. DELONG. In the discussion of propositions of this character I think we consume more time than would be likely to be wasted in speaking, and besides, if two-thirds of the members desire it they can suspend any such rule, and they would undoubtedly do so, in case any member should desire to explain his action, for instance upon the ground of having been misunderstood. Now we have consumed a great portion of this forenoon, without transacting any business of importance, and I move that this resolution be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first on the appeal.

Mr. PARKER. I withdraw it.

The question was taken on Mr. DeLong's motion to lay the resolution on the table, and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 17; noes, 8.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. DELONG. It has been suggested by one or two gentlemen here, that Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, contains one or two errors, which have crept into it perhaps unnoticed. The article has passed its third reading, and I have been requested to move its reference to a committee of five, without special instructions, in order to point out one or two particulars in which it seems to be erroneous. It is so worded apparently as to disfranchise certain persons, who are good citizens, and it also renders certain other persons ineligible to office. In these and some other respects some change of language may be advisable, and in order to expedite business, and save time, I move that the article be referred, without instructions, to a special committee of three.

The PRESIDENT. It will be necessary first to reconsider the vote by which the article was passed.

Mr. DELONG. Very well; I make that motion.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon the motion to reconsider, and the vote was—yeas, 23; nays, 4—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Taghabe, Wetherill, and Mr. President—25.

Nays—Messrs. Crawford, Hawley, Lockwood, and Sturtevant—4.

So the vote by which the article passed was reconsidered.

The question recurred upon the passage of the article.

Mr. DELONG. I now move to suspend the rules, and that the article be recommitted to a special committee of three, without instructions.

Mr. WARWICK. Can it be recommitted without special instructions?

The PRESIDENT. It can, by suspending the rules for that purpose.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was agreed to.

The question was next stated upon the motion to recommit to a special committee of three.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I would really like to know what is going to be done by that committee. Is it going to strike out the word "white?"

Mr. BANKS. The Committee on Phraseology found it indispensable to have certain corrections made in this article, in order to express clearly what the Convention intended. That committee did not think it their duty, or at least within their province, to report those amendments. It is provided, as the article now stands, by the insertion of a proviso, that persons who are in the military service of the United States in this State, shall not have the same privileges as are enjoyed by persons in the military service of the United States outside of this State. In order to correct an error of that kind, it will be necessary to entirely re-model the section, and I therefore hope the motion to refer to a special committee will prevail.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I should think it would be better to refer it to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DELONG. It is not necessary. The Committee of the Whole have other matters to attend to, and a committee of three could probably do all that is necessary in twenty minutes, leaving the Convention to attend to other business.

Mr. STURTEVANT. According to my idea, this subject of the right of suffrage is about as important as any matter before us, and I think the article had better go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DELONG. The gentleman from Washoe will have an opportunity to vote upon any amendment which may be proposed, and he can see what has been done when the committee shall make their report.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move to amend the motion by referring the article to the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT. I will state that the errors referred to have crept in by inadvertence. It is almost impossible, sitting here in a large body like this, to perfect an article or a section in such a way as to avoid all errors. I think a special committee, to be named, if gentlemen please, by the members of the Convention, would be more likely to perform the required duty well than the Committee of the Whole; and of course their report will be within the control of the Convention, either to adopt or reject it.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I withdraw my motion.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DeLong, to refer the article to a special committee of three, without instructions, and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT subsequently appointed Messrs. DeLong, Kennedy, and Mason, as such committee.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The Convention resumed the consideration of Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations, the question being upon the motion of Mr. Crosman to recommit the article, with instructions, to amend Section 9 by adding after the word "purposes," the following words:

Tuesday.]

GIBSON—KINKEAD.

"Provided, That the State of Nevada may loan its credit to the Central Pacific Railroad Company to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars, when it shall have completed its road to a distance of eighty miles east from the navigable waters of the Sacramento River; but no appropriation of any character shall be made, unless sanctioned by a vote of the people."

Mr. GIBSON. When the hour arrived for adjournment last evening, I had the floor upon this question, and I mentioned that my colleague, (Mr. Kinkead,) had prepared an amendment, which I requested him to present as a substitute for the one offered by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosmen.) I will give way now for him to present it, and to explain its object, if he desires, and afterwards I may resume my remarks.

Mr. KINKEAD. Is an amendment to the amendment in order at this time?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINKEAD. I offer the following as a substitute for the proviso.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

"Provided, That the State may issue bonds bearing a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, to an amount not exceeding one and one half millions of dollars, or guarantee the payment of interest, or principal, or both interest and principal, of bonds to the said amount, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company or incorporation that shall first connect, by a first-class railroad, the city of Virginia with the main range of the Sierra Nevada Mountains."

Mr. KINKEAD. In offering this amendment, Mr. President, I wish very briefly to present for the consideration of gentlemen of the Convention a few hastily arranged arguments in favor of the proposition, being firmly convinced that if it is adopted by this Convention, and its provisions carried out by the Legislature, it will prove of the highest importance to the State, and be the first real solid step towards the permanent development of the vast resources of our country.

I desire to say here, that in presenting this amendment I am actuated by no hostility to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. On the contrary, no one on this floor can have a higher appreciation of the importance of that great work than I have, and there is no one here who would go farther to aid in its construction, by any and all means within our power. I fully realize the almost incalculable benefits which would result from the completion of that road to our State. But, sir, we are yet young, and financially feeble, and it is well perhaps not to be hasty, but to look around and see if the desired object cannot be accomplished, partially at least, in a cheaper and more expeditious manner. The object, as I understand it, of the friends of this railroad proviso, is not so much to benefit the Central Pacific Railroad Company, as it is, by aiding that company to complete their road, to secure a great and permanent good for this State. The proposition almost unanimously agreed to, the other day, by this Convention, was to give to that railroad company which should first reach the border of our State the sum of three millions of dollars, or fifty thousand dollars per mile for each mile constructed, until the aggregate amount would reach that sum. This would insure the building of sixty miles of road, but it could not be even commenced until after a railroad should first have been completed to our State line. Now the most sanguine advocate of the Pacific Railroad, or any other railroad proposed to be built over these rough and rugged mountains, does not believe that the work can be done, under the most favorable circumstances, in less time than six or eight years, and very probably it will require even a longer time. But, sir, I predict that if the amendment I have offered is adopted by the Convention, and acted upon by the first Legislature, this same sixty miles of road will be built, equipped, and running, within two, or at farthest three years, from the time this aid is given, and for half the sum heretofore proposed to be given to accomplish the same purpose. Aye, sir, within twelve months enough of the road would be built to save to the people of Storey County alone, every year, double the amount mentioned in this amendment.

I do not make this statement unadvisedly, Mr. President. I have before me a report compiled with care by a competent railroad engineer, containing statistics gathered from unquestionable authority upon this point. This report I will mention was made to the Territorial Legislature by a railroad company, and it contains an estimate of the cost of a portion of the road, and also an estimate of its probable revenue, showing the difference in cost of transportation of a few prominent articles which are largely used in Storey County, by wagon and by rail. The proposed route of this company commences at Virginia, running thence to Gold Hill, then through American Flat, skirting Silver City, to a point near what is known as the "Half-way House," (there branching to Dayton,) thence to Carson City, and through Washoe Valley to the Truckee River and the State line. This route I may state is the only practicable one from Virginia to the Truckee River and Meadows. It has been surveyed from Virginia to Washoe City, the grades are found to be easy, nowhere exceeding eighty feet to the mile, and the whole route is entirely practicable—the larger portion of the road running through an almost perfectly level country. As an illustration of the benefits to be derived from the construction of this road I will quote certain statistics from the report of the engineer, showing the estimated reduction on the cost of two articles—fuel and lumber. He estimates the amount of fuel consumed in the three towns of Virginia, Gold Hill, and Silver City, at two hundred and ninety-three cords per diem, on which there would be a reduction of five dollars per cord, if the transportation were by rail. He also states the average amount of lumber and square timber used daily in mining and building at one hundred and twenty-five thousand feet, on which the cost of transportation by wagon is twenty dollars per thousand, while by rail it would not be more than ten dollars.

COLLINS.

I will further add that this estimated consumption of these two articles was not guessed at, but obtained from positive, reliable information, and that, too, nearly two years ago. I cannot be far wrong in stating that the daily consumption of these articles is now nearly or quite double what it was then. But, sir, take the amount as shown by this report (made in the fall of 1862) and we find an annual consumption of one hundred and eight thousand cords of fire wood, in the towns of Virginia, Gold Hill, and Silver City. The engineer estimates a saving of five dollars per cord, certainly a very low estimate. Besides, we all know that the difficulty of obtaining fuel at Virginia increases every year, with the increase of the distance which it has to be hauled by wagons, and of necessity the cost must continue to advance in proportion; but even at the low estimate of five dollars per cord we have an annual saving of five hundred and forty thousand dollars. The estimate for wagon transportation of the article of lumber is again too low: the engineer gives it at twenty dollars per thousand feet. I think thirty dollars would be near the proper mark, but say twenty dollars, and still we have another saving on the amount of lumber and timber used of four hundred thousand dollars. Thus in these two items alone a million of dollars would be annually saved to the people of Storey County, and I verily believe, sir, that the true figure at this time would be quite double that amount. The moment the road is finished to the base of these mountains this result is accomplished, to say nothing of the additional saving in the immense amount of other business, passenger travel, etc. Again, the road continued on through Washoe Valley to the Truckee River, opens a water power, unlimited in extent, immediately contiguous to boundless forests of unsurpassed timber—affording the great desideratum of our country—a cheap means of working our lower grades of ores. I would not dare venture, sir, to attempt a computation of the immense wealth which by this means would be speedily developed.

Gentlemen may object to this amendment on the ground of its being special legislation, but I contend that it will benefit the entire State more directly than could possibly be shown by any other enterprise. The road once built from the Truckee to Virginia would necessitate the speedy construction of a like road to Lander and Humboldt counties. And even our friends from Esmeralda would be benefited, not only indirectly, by the general prosperity of the State, but directly, by the introduction of a class of capital that would eagerly seek investment in a railroad to connect their own mines with the unlimited water power of the Walker River country. There is no place, sir, on the face of the globe where railroads will pay such enormous dividends as they will here in our own Territory, and that, too, notwithstanding the great expense to be incurred in transporting all the material by wagon, over the long road separating us from the navigable waters of the Pacific. I am entirely within bounds when I state that a railroad from Virginia to the Truckee would pay a monthly dividend of from three to five per cent. on the cost of its construction and equipment, even with every particle of its material hauled by wagons from Folsom here.

It may be asked, if this is the case, why capitalists do not undertake the work. My answer is, that they are ready and anxious to do so, the moment our own people show their confidence in the enterprise by doing something for it, either in the way of private subscriptions or by public aid. Foreign capital must build these roads. Our own people find only too many demands upon and uses for their cash in opening and developing the mines, and in the prosecution of the various branches of business incidental thereto. The truth is we have no surplus capital with which to build railroads, however much we realize their necessity. But the State can lend a helping hand, that will insure their speedy construction, and at the same time the burden will be felt very lightly by individual citizens. A great imperative necessity exists here for internal railroads, and by encouraging this first entering wedge in a railroad system, I state with great confidence that long before the Central Pacific Railroad can possibly reach our border we will have a railroad of our own at the State line ready to meet it—a road not only sixty, but two hundred and sixty miles in length, extending through our State from west to east, and forming, if you please, a link in the great national chain, connecting the Atlantic with the Pacific Ocean. In this way, sir, we will truly aid the construction of the great Pacific Railroad, and at the same time be opening up the almost fabulous amount of wealth existing in our midst.

I am not here, Mr. President, to advocate the claims, or to seek aid for any particular railroad company. My only object is, to place in the hands of the Legislature the power to aid, if in their judgment they think it wise, the kind of enterprise I have alluded to. I have barely glanced at the importance of this matter. It would take a much longer time than I care to occupy to do the subject full justice. I leave it for gentlemen to consider, and to draw their own conclusions.

Mr. COLLINS. It occurs to me that this amendment provides for aiding a railroad rather too local in its character for a public enterprise that ought to receive an appropriation from the State. If it contemplated that this road should extend as far east as Austin, or to the boundary of the State somewhere to the east of us, so as to be of practical benefit to every portion of the State, as well as to the western portion, or that portion lying directly in the line of the road, I am not sure but I might fall in with something of the kind.

Mr. KINKEAD. I will state that, as I said before, the effect of this road being completed, opening up the region of water power, and lumber, and timber, as far as Virginia, would be to confer a very considerable benefit upon the regions beyond. Very little difficulty, I apprehend, would be encountered in building a railroad to the Reese River region after a road had been completed as far as Virginia. The building and working of this road would absolutely compel the building of a further road connecting with that, and ultimately it would run into and form a part of the great Pacific Railroad. We should have a road completed entirely through between the boundaries of our State, from the east to the west, before the Pacific Railroad could get through so as to connect with it.

Mr. COLLINS. I have listened attentively to the remarks of the gentleman from Ormsby. (Mr. Kinkead,) and I repeat that if the principle involved in his proposition could be extended so as to refer to the eastern portion of the State, I am not sure but I would vote for it. Therefore I hope that the gentleman himself, or some one else, will move to amend it so as to embrace the more extended enterprise. I am really strong in the conviction that the great eastern counties of the State need a railroad vastly more than Virginia does. There they are suffering for the want of lumber, and they have to pay two or three prices for all their freight. While a railroad would undoubtedly be of great advantage to Virginia, certainly it would be of vastly greater to the eastern tier of counties, and I think no such enterprise should receive the pecuniary sanction of a State, which is not going to be of general benefit to that State. I believe that a railroad along on the line contemplated by the Pacific Railroad Company, constructed with a gauge adapted to that road, that should not contemplate the use of the heavy and expensive "T" or "H" rail, but should be satisfied for the time being with a lighter and less expensive rail, until the great Pacific Railroad shall be enabled to tap our State, might possibly be constructed. For such a road, temporary rails of only half inch or three-quarter inch iron, might be made to answer every practical purpose as well perhaps as the "T" rail, for the time being. Such rails have answered a very good purpose heretofore in New York, in New England, and in the western States, and undoubtedly they would here answer their purpose excellently. And I think it would be a piece of extravagance for any company to contemplate or think of freighting over, at the rate of perhaps five cents a pound, rails that weigh from fifty-five to seventy pounds to the yard. With these lighter rails the road could be constructed very cheaply, and they would serve us well enough in the way of transportation across our Territory. Freight could be taken from here to Austin by such a railroad for perhaps one cent per pound, or twenty dollars a ton. That would give them lumber there at fifty dollars, or thereabouts, per thousand, and it would open up to them all those great facilities for mining and reducing ores which exist in Virginia, in Carson, in Steamboat Valley, and in Douglas County, and so the road would benefit the whole people of the State. There might be a branch to Esmeralda, too, and it occurs to me that such an enterprise would be of very great importance, while the Pacific Railroad would be in the meantime lessening the distance between O'Neill's Crossing and the Sacramento, or the tide waters of the Pacific. In a very short time, in that way, our freights would be reduced down to something within the range of the means of all of us.

Mr. DELONG. Where is the proposed line of the Pacific Railroad in this State?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not remember exactly, although I have seen it on the map.

Mr. DELONG. I believe it is east and north of Virginia, and no portion of the route suggested in this amendment is contemplated to be used by the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. COLLINS. The idea I have in my own mind is for this road to come down the Steamboat and Washoe valleys, hugging around the foothills, so as to reach Virginia at the most convenient point, and then take a turn towards the eastern limits of the State. I have not consulted with other gentlemen in regard to it, but that would seem to me to be the most practicable route.

The PRESIDENT. And where would it tap the Pacific Railroad?

Mr. COLLINS. It would tap the Pacific Railroad at some point east and north of Virginia. I do not propose to discuss this idea, but I do hope the gentleman from Ormsby will make an amendment in such a manner that this railroad shall be a State affair instead of being merely a local matter. Let us give these advantages, if at all, not to one section alone, but to all the State.

Mr. FRIZELL. The question at the present time occupying the attention of the Convention is a momentous one. It is a question which might well engage the attention of the most profound political economists, the hearts of the truest and warmest lovers of their country, and the heads of the greatest statesmen. It is therefore with the utmost diffidence that I rise to make a few remarks upon that question.

Our situation here is a peculiar one. We are isolated from the rest of the world. We are hemmed in, as it were, by almost inaccessible barriers. The inducements for the investment of capital here are wonderful, and they are increasing every day. Whilst we are proposing to start out in our career as a State, this question naturally presents itself to the minds of the members of this Convention, what can we do to aid an enterprise which has for its object the opening up of an easy line of communication between us and the rest of the world? Now, sir, I am willing to admit that the motives which have influenced gentlemen in this Convention, which influenced the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Kinkead) in offering this amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crozman,) and which influenced the course of my colleague from Storey (Mr. Collins) on this, and on the former occasion, have been the best in the world. I am not only willing to admit it, but I will say that I know that the motives which have actuated those gentlemen, and which actuate every other member of the Convention, are noble, generous, and praiseworthy. But the experience of almost every American who has lived to the age of thirty years, the experience we have had in this country, and in the settlement, progress, and development of the Western States, rises up in our memory, and stands before us to-day, as a warning that we should be careful, whatever we may do, not to hamper the energies of the people by placing a load of debt upon a young State. Besides that, our position at the present time is peculiar. It taxes our entire intellectual and mathematical knowledge and skill to devise ways and means by which to defray the expenses of the proposed State. That is the principal topic of conversation among the members of this Convention. The idea is such a grand and noble one, and so peculiar to the American mind, of fostering and aiding internal improvements, that we catch at it at once, as the milkmaid did at her green gown. We catch up the idea without stopping to count the cost. By reason of our sense of generosity, and our sense of innate vigor, we are willing to grasp at anything which holds forth hope for the future. But I say it becomes us to consider this question well, before we take any action upon it. I said our position was a peculiar one. Starting out as a new State, with a population few and sparse, we have not only the expenses of our State to provide for, but we have also the taxes imposed by the Federal Government, though I concede that we are all perfectly willing to bear our share of all the burdens imposed by that government, which are looming up before us, both in the immediate and the distant future. Besides, all the wealth of the proposed new State now lies hidden and confined under the hard ribs of rocky adamant, of which our State is principally composed, and it will require labor and capital to bring out this wealth from the hidden depths of our mountains.

FRIZELL.

Now as regards the proposed aid to be granted by this young State to the Pacific Railroad, my views are these: According to the information imparted to the Convention by the President of that railroad company which contemplates this immense enterprise, unless we can help them in overcoming and surmounting the summit of the Sierra Nevada mountains, our aid will be of no practical benefit, for the reason that when they shall have once reached the confines of this young State, their progress thenceforward will inevitably be very rapid, without any further aid than they have already secured. I am almost certain that according to the information which, as I just now said, has been imparted to the Convention by the President of the company, in the course of one year and a half eighty miles of that road will be completed. Now, Mr. President, it is only one hundred and four miles from Sacramento to the summit, and consequently we will necessarily be called upon for this aid, or donation, inside of two years and a half. I think it is plainly demonstrable that even with all the prudence and economy which we must necessarily exercise, in order to bear the expenses of our State government, and our share of the national expenses, we could not afford to give the aid at that time. I think it would be simply an impossibility. Nevertheless, there is another idea which will occur to the mind of every progressive American citizen, namely: that this right to grant aid to that enterprise should really be left as a reserved right to the people, and that therefore we should not, in this Constitution, debar the people from ever exercising that right in the future, in case that Divine Providence, and our own energies—the strength of our own strong arms—should enable us to acquire an amount of wealth which shall place us in a position where we can afford to give such aid.

Now, Mr. President, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Kinkead,) meets my approbation entirely, providing that we shall give our aid to the Pacific Railroad to the amount of a million and a half of dollars. There is no proposition of the kind now before the Convention, but an amendment might be made by which we should also grant a million and a half to the other road, spoken of by the other gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Gibson.) The route suggested by this pending amendment is also, as it seems to me, practicable. It sweeps around from Virginia, along the foothills, touching very nearly the waters of the Carson, then passes around the foothills, close to or in the immediate vicinity of an extensive range of timber, and thence reaches the waters of the Truckee, connecting there with the Pacific Railroad. That would be doing exact justice to the counties lying south of this route running from here to Virginia. It would be doing exact and equal justice to the county which you, Mr. President, have the honor in part to represent, and to Douglas and Washoe Counties; while at the same time it would be the greatest imaginable benefit to Storey County.

In these remarks, I am merely making suggestions which I think it would be well for us to consider, notwithstanding the cold water I threw on the proposition at the start, because I do think it is well never to mislead men, or to throw a false coloring upon anything. I think this matter of granting aid should be a reserved right to the people, and I do hope that in good time they will be able to contribute to this enterprise. I would like to see this section so modeled, arranged, and made up, that—subject of course to the action of the Legislature, and the subsequent approval of such action by the people—a million and a half of dollars may be granted to the Pacific Railroad, and a million and a half more to the road spoken of by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Gibson.) That proposition is broad in its scope and noble in its character; and the only drawback or injury—the only thing about it in relation to which I feel any doubt—is that I fear our inability to contribute seasonably to those noble works. Still, I wish to show, when this Constitution shall be submitted to the people, that this Convention has done all it possibly could do in the way of promoting the interest of railroad communications, and that it has not stricken a blow at two of the noblest principles now extant—one, that of internal improvements, and the other the great principle of hope. I am not willing that this Constitution should go before the people with an entire prohibition on the subject of internal improvements, or that we should say that the State cannot, under any circumstances, contribute to these enterprises, because that strikes at the principle of hope. Let us keep that principle alive in our hearts, and I do hope that when the proper time arrives, we shall be able to do something for the advancement of these great enterprises.

WARWICK—KINKEAD—HAWLEY.

Mr. WARWICK. The ancient historian informs us that an old Roman General, returning from the wars, was met at the gates of the imperial city by a crowd of citizens who rejoiced in his fame, and in the security which he had given them against their enemies, and the aid he had rendered them in maintaining their liberties; and it is related that, impelled by gratitude, they cast their helmets and shields, and ornaments of every character upon him, until the brave old warrior sank beneath the glittering pile; but before he sank, raising his hand above the fatal monument of his fame, he exclaimed: "Save me! Oh, save me from my friends!" As I listened to the array of figures presented by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Kinkead,) and to the deductions he drew from them, of the benefits to be derived to the State of Nevada from the completion of the Pacific Railroad, I conceived that he must be a man most friendly to that enterprise, but I found that he manifested his friendship by casting his heaviest shield, beneath which the old warrior should sink to rise no more.

Mr. KINKEAD. Who is the old warrior?

Mr. WARWICK. I speak metaphorically, of course. I know the gentlemen will pardon my personal allusion to him, and I think I used the highest term of compliment in regard to him when I said he was a "man." Now no man has yet been found in this Convention able or willing to get up here and declare himself opposed to the Pacific Railroad enterprise. No, that would not do, because we know that the people are friendly to it, and therefore every gentleman must declare himself in favor of it in some form. And as nothing else will do, they must endeavor to kill it with kindness. Sir, the great want of this State will be the construction of railroad communications which shall give us connection with the water, and the great difficulty we have to meet is how to secure the construction of such railroad communications. We must have some better means than we now have for obtaining our indispensable supplies. Admitting that we already have our wood tolerably handy, still that is but one article of prime necessity to us. If gentlemen will sum up the extra cost of transportation to our borders of every description of materials and supplies which we consume, they will find that the figures run up to hundreds of thousands, and I have no doubt, to millions of dollars every year. One gentleman, (Mr. Chapin,) who is an able advocate and friend of this measure, has told you that each month of the year you are paying, for the simple matter of teamsters' wages alone, as much as the interest would amount to in an entire year on the whole of the capital proposed to be loaned to the Pacific Railroad enterprise. Another gentleman, (Mr. Mason,) who declares himself to be an enemy of monopoly, has opposed the granting of this aid because he thinks it would go to the benefit of a monopoly, but he evidently forgets that by the terms of its charter the Pacific Railroad Company will be restricted, if you lend them this aid, to very nearly one-half the prices which are now paid for passages between here and California. The charter of the Pacific Railroad Company expressly states that the price of passage shall not exceed ten cents per mile, which for the whole distance of one hundred and seventy miles to Virginia makes the fare only seventeen dollars, while every man knows that we are now paying, and have for the past four years been paying, twenty-eight dollars, by the lumbering stages. That is to be the price, even allowing that the Railroad Company charge the utmost limit of price permitted by the law.

Mr. HAWLEY. They will do that.

Mr. WARWICK. Very well; let them do it. Still we obtain passage for a little more than one-half the present rate.

Now, as to the feasibility of connecting with that other railroad which some sage-brush engineer says may be constructed across the mountains before the Pacific Railroad can be completed. If we expend our energies upon that road what is the result? Why, sir, that railroad, even by the most feasible route that can be selected, would bring up at those great obstacles which God Almighty has not seen fit to remove, and it could only at last be brought into the valley thirty or forty miles from here. But this is not the point. Certain gentlemen think we are abundantly able to be liberal to that road, while with others the poverty of the

HAINES—WARWICK.

[July 19.

State is the great argument against giving any aid to any railroad. Now I think I have a proposition here which will meet that objection, and which, with the leave of the Convention, I would like to read for information :

"Provided, That the State may loan its credit to an amount not to exceed three millions of dollars, for the encouragement of railroad enterprises, the manner of providing for the payment of the above sum to be left to the Legislature; but no appropriation shall be made unless sanctioned by a vote of the people at a special election to be held for that purpose, nor until after the taxable property of the State shall have reached the amount of fifty millions of dollars."

Now, sir, there is a proviso, which I shall offer as an amendment, when it shall be in order; and I should like to know, if that could be incorporated in place of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Kinkead), why it would not meet the reasonable desires of all parties on this subject? It specifies no particular road; it specifies no particular distance to be constructed; but it does specify that our poverty shall not be one of the questions involved, and that until our taxable property shall be double the amount it is to-day, no aid whatever shall be loaned to any railroad. I commend this proposition to the favorable consideration of the Convention. If gentlemen are really in favor of railroad enterprises, but feel that they cannot aid them until such time as the pecuniary condition of the State is better than it is at present, then here is a provision that ought to be satisfactory to them. No special road is named, and no special distance is named, but it simply provides that when the State shall have doubled its present amount of property, it may lend its credit to the extent of three millions of dollars in aid of railroad enterprises. This is a proposition by which every friend of a railroad can come forward and show his friendship in a practical way.

Now, Mr. President and gentleman. I bring this forward as a test question. I want to see the men on the floor of this Convention who are really friendly to railroad enterprises. There is no Central Pacific Railroad here—nothing that compels the Legislature to appropriate a single dollar to any particular railroad whatever—but it says to any friend of the Pacific Railroad, or to any friend of any other railroad within or without our borders, simply that the State may lend its aid to a certain amount for the encouragement of railroad enterprises, but not until after the excuse of poverty shall have passed away. It is not to be done while we are embarrassed as we are now, or at any time during the future, when the contingencies of the present day may possibly occur again, but when the barrier of poverty is removed; when the increase of population and the development of the wealth of the country shall have placed us in a position to help a railroad, whether it be denominated the Pacific Railroad, or the Placerville Railroad, whether to the east or to the west of us, whether within or without our borders, when the people shall have the ability and the will to assist railroad enterprises, they may do so. The matter is not to be foisted upon them by any chicanery or political juggling, during the continuance of our present financial condition, but after we have assumed a proper status among the States of the Union, after our wealth shall have been developed and our property accumulated to the amount of double what it is to-day, then we can come forward if we will, and at a special election, when there is nothing else before the people to distract attention, when they have only and simply the proposition before them of "railroad—yes," or "railroad—no," they may decide to assist these works of internal improvement. If there be any argument against this proposition, I hope to hear it, and I beg gentlemen not to cover it up with any other amendments, but let us vote upon that naked proposition. Let gentlemen say plainly that they are for or against railroad enterprises. Let them not say they are here professing to be the friends, but covertly against all railroad enterprises, but let them say openly, either that they are against all railroad enterprises, or that they are friendly to them. I am here to advocate the cause of no particular company, but by this amendment I leave it open to the entire State of Nevada to say whether they will lend aid to any railroad enterprise, when they shall be able to do so.

Mr. HAINES. Is it intended by the gentleman's proposition, that the money may be used outside of the State?

Mr. WARWICK. It leaves that matter altogether open to the people.

Mr. HAINES. I shall vote against it, myself.

Mr. WARWICK. Well, that is honest, at least. The gentleman votes against railroad enterprises. He is an open opponent.

Mr. HAINES. The gentleman misunderstood me. I am in favor of railroad enterprises, as much as any man, but I am opposed to building railroads in California.

Mr. WARWICK. Does the gentleman assume to-day, because the power happens to be in his hands, that he will prevent, for all time, the exercise of the right of the people to aid any railroad enterprise, when it shall be in their power? Is not he willing to defer to the will of the majority?

Mr. HAINES. The gentleman asks me a question, and I will answer him frankly. So far as my power goes, I shall try to prevent it; I shall vote against it.

Mr. WARWICK. Then having that power, the gentleman would exercise it?

Mr. HAINES. Only so far as my own vote is concerned. I shall vote against it; I shall exercise that power.

Mr. WARWICK. Exactly. We are here clothed with a little temporary power, and now we propose to say to the people, "You shall not, if you will, exercise your right to aid in the construction of works of internal improvement, under any circumstances that may arise." Now this proposition leaves it open to the Legislature. The people have conferred upon us a little power, and the gentleman says he would exercise that power in such a way as to preclude the people, in all time to come, from deciding, by the exercise of their power at the ballot-box, to aid these important enterprises.

Tuesday.]

HAINES—WARWICK—JOHNSON.

Mr. HAINES. The gentleman still misunderstands me, or he wilfully misrepresents me, and I desire to put myself right on this question. The gentleman from Lander knows very well that we are almost bankrupt to-day. We have not the means, and we are not satisfied that we can raise the means with which even to carry on a State Government. And the gentleman in his proposition might as well say "Pacific Railroad" at once, for there is not a member here but knows that the object is to aid that road. However, I am as anxious that the Pacific Railroad should be built as any man, and the gentleman from Lander knows that I am, but at the same time I am opposed to permitting the State by any possibility to be bankrupted by assisting any railroad. First and foremost, I object to leaving the matter to the Legislature. If such a question is left to the Legislature—the gentleman from Lander has seen how it has worked in the California Legislature, and possibly in other legislative bodies—the moment the question is left to them, if it were necessary, there would be a hundred thousand dollars brought here to corrupt the Legislature, and I venture to say that the gentleman has never seen any Legislature yet that was not more or less liable to be corrupted by the influence of money.

Mr. WARWICK. I have serious intentions of settling ultimately in Douglas County, and if I do I shall certainly vote for my friend from Douglas as a member of the Legislature, and I guarantee that not a million of dollars could corrupt him.

Mr. HAINES. Do not be too sure; I might not be invulnerable.

Mr. WARWICK. The gentleman's modesty I am afraid stands in the way of his advancement. [Laughter.] Now he brings up the objection of poverty again, but here is the answer to that, in the language of the amendment, "Nor until the taxable property of the State shall reach the amount of fifty millions of dollars." We must have double our present amount of taxable property.

Mr. HAINES. That point has been discussed considerably. Now by the time we have fifty millions of property, our taxes will be double or treble what they are now. Admitting that we have taxable property to the amount of fifty millions of dollars, we must allow a hundred thousand for stealings in the State Government. That has been the experience of California, at least. I really hope my friend will back me when I say that the State Government in California, since the organization of that State, has not fallen short of an annual cost of three hundred thousand dollars, and I think it will approximate nearly to five hundred thousand. If we take that as a precedent for our calculation we shall find that fifty millions will be a very small amount upon which to raise the means necessary to carry on our State Government.

Mr. WARWICK. The gentleman bases his calculation on a precedent in no wise parallel to our own condition. If I may be permitted, although the discussion of the subject has taken a very wide range already, I wish to refer back to, and controvert if possible one statement made by the gentleman, and that is a proposition not advanced, or at least not altogether originated by the gentleman from Douglas, but advanced also by another gentleman, equally a friend to the Pacific Railroad, to wit, that our expenses as a State would amount to three hundred thousand dollars a year. This I contend is an erroneous statement, and for this reason: The fact is, as both those gentlemen know, that the State of California, in early times, was in an altogether different condition from the State of Nevada at the present time. A series of riots ensued upon the organization of that State to which I believe the world knows no parallel. Again, the affairs of the State were administered in the most extravagant manner, and consequently the expenses ran up to enormous figures. For example, clerks were allowed from twenty to forty and fifty dollars per day.

Mr. JOHNSON. But California had resources to begin with; the money was collected and paid out of the "Civil Fund," as it was called. It was paid over by Governor Riley, for the purpose of setting the State Government in operation, and it came out of the General Government. There was an ample fund for the purpose.

Mr. WARWICK. But how soon was that fund exhausted?

Mr. JOHNSON. So far from being exhausted, there were three millions of this fund paid into the Treasury of the United States, which the Senators and Representatives of California in Congress sought in vain for years to have returned, claiming that it belonged to the State and not to the Federal Government.

Mr. WARWICK. Consequently it did not belong to the State. I had occasion to examine this whole matter, while I was in the Legislature of the State of California, and to show the Convention something of the nature of the extravagances which were perpetrated in those early times, I will mention the beginning of the State Lunatic Asylum. One poor lunatic was picked up in the streets, and ordered to be taken care of, and in the short space of a very few days there was a bill of over two thousand dollars brought in and ordered to be paid on the account of that one lunatic. That was the foundation of the State Lunatic Asylum of California, which has since cost millions. And, sir, what is this Convention as compared with the Constitutional Convention of California?

Tuesday,]

LOCKWOOD—HAWLEY.

[July 19.

I contend that this Convention is a model in its way, at least on the score of economy. So patriotic a body as is met together here, doing its own dancing and paying for its own fiddling, I think is altogether without parallel in the history of the American Union. We come down with our own dollars, asking the State for nought, but feeding on glory, sir. What reason have we, then, to suppose that a State commencing so economically, with such a model before it, will be extravagant in its expenditures? Our people are overwhelmed by the National debt, and the Territorial debt perhaps also, but they will be sustained by a patriotic Legislature and the example of a patriotic Convention like the present, and I look forward hopefully to the future, when all the offices will be filled by patriotic gentlemen, when judges will pay their own salaries out of their own pockets, and administer justice free, gratis, for nothing. I do not believe the patriotism of Nevada is confined exclusively to this little body, but I believe that others will come up to the task and accept of no more compensation than is absolutely requisite, and thus the administration of the affairs of our State will be one of the most economical administrations in the world.

But to return to serious matters. This provision states simply that the State may assist any railroad enterprise to an extent not exceeding three millions of dollars, when and where she will, but not until she possesses the means so to do. That is the proposition. When our means are doubled, when the present hard times are passed away, when the clouds now hanging over us shall give place to sunshine, and our empty pockets grow plethoric with gold, then we say to the people "If you feel that you have the ability, and your necessities require it, we will not bind you to assist any particular road, but you may, within your own borders or out of them, assist any railroad enterprise which you may see fit to aid." I sincerely hope that this amendment, or one substantially like it, may prevail.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to say a few words on this subject, and I will premise what remarks I have to offer by saying that did I consult my own feelings I should certainly support the measure which has been so ably advocated here, and which gentlemen seem to take so much to heart. But, sir, convictions of duty, and the sentiments and opinions I entertain upon all these propositions forbid my voting in the affirmative upon any of them, and I desire to be as brief as possible in stating my reasons.

The question of internal improvements, carried on by the General or State Government, is not a new question. It is a question that has been made one of the most prominent issues in every political campaign since the days of Andrew Jackson. It is a question that has been decided upon, after having been thoroughly canvassed by the American people, certainly since the days of my boyhood. I conceive that the proposition has been settled, and that it has been finally determined upon, in American politics, that it is not politic to lend State aid to internal improvements. I believe, sir, that one of the main issues upon which three or four of our latest Presidents of the United States have been elected has been this very question of internal improvements. I ask gentlemen to cite to me the number of instances where such a policy has furthered the object which was attempted to be furthered by it, or where it has advanced the object attempted to be advanced. And where they can point me to one single instance of the kind, I can point them to hundreds of instances where such a course of policy has been disastrous in its results. Look for instance at the State of California, at the present time! El Dorado County, the county with whose affairs I was more intimately connected, prior to my immigration into this Territory, is groaning under a load of debt which there is no probability of her liquidating, I might say, for at least a hundred years to come. And why?

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment? Does he know the present price of El Dorado County scrip? Is it not worth a higher price to-day than that of any other county in the State of California?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will state this—and I hope this will be the last interruption, for although others may not object to interruptions, I deprecate them for the reason that they destroy the thread of thought; not that I suppose however that that was the gentleman's object—I will state, that I served on a jury there, just before I left the county, and I received three dollars a day in scrip, but it lacked a good deal of paying my board. Just what I sold it for, however, I cannot say.

Sir, the question of granting public aid to internal improvements has been decided upon in almost every political canvass in our country, and it has been negatived. I presume no gentleman will deny that fact. I was going to speak of a law passed by the Legislature of California, which allowed the counties of El Dorado, Sacramento, and I believe some other counties, to vote for or against a proposition to aid in constructing a wagon road over the mountains. There was a great deal of opposition to that measure; in fact, almost everybody seemed to be opposed to it, but through the influences brought to bear by that monopoly the measure was passed triumphantly through, although it was against the best sense and judgment of business men in that community. Although seemingly there was a majority against it, yet the influences brought to bear were such as carried it triumphantly through. I ask if that is not the history of all such appropriations? Judging the future by the past, I say it becomes us to learn the lessons of wisdom from experience, and I ask this Convention whether, with an appropriation of three millions of dollars to back them, they do not think that any corporation of this kind can carry the measure through the Legislature, let the financial consequences be what they will?

I will say further that I do not believe any appropriation of this kind would further the object desired. I really do not believe it, and I think if I had time, and if this Convention were disposed to listen to me, I could prove that proposition to a demonstration. But I will merely make the point, and allow any gentleman to successfully controvert it if he can.

Now, sir, I am in favor of the Pacific Railroad, and if I believed that either one of the measures proposed here was bound to pass, I should certainly favor the one proposed by the representative from Lander, (Mr. Warwick.) Because I believe that the Pacific Railroad is a great national work. I believe that it not only appeals to our interests but also to our patriotism as American citizens, and, sir, if anything can be done to further the prosperity and enhance the growth and development of this people, it is to connect our State with the ocean, to give us access to a seaport. Then we shall have the commerce of the world at our command. But I am opposed in toto to aiding the construction of any road—either the road from Virginia City to the mountains, or any other road, to be built elsewhere, unless the people are interested, in every other portion of the Territory. For a moment let us look at this subject in that point of view. How much are the people of Esmeralda County interested? They are to come up and help to pay the taxes; they are to help, to the extent of their full share, to bear the burdens of the State; but how much are they interested in such a railroad enterprise? And how much are the people of Lander or Humboldt interested in a project of this kind? Can the representatives from those counties go before their constituents and tell them that they have voted for a proposition which is only going to enhance the value of property in the immediate vicinity of Ormsby, Storey, and Washoe counties, and no other, and that they voted for such an appropriation, fully understanding that the people of Lander County, and the people of Humboldt County, and the people of Esmeralda County, were bound to help pay it? I do insist, as I have stated heretofore, and I have made I think an accurate calculation, that even if the property in this Territory should reach the amount named in the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick.)—even when it reaches fifty millions, we must still be subjected to a tax of about four times as much as we are paying at the present time, if we vote to grant these three millions of dollars.

Sir, I call upon the representatives of the mining interests here—those who claim to be the representatives more particularly and especially of that interest—to deal justly in this matter, now that they have decided in this Convention that the mines are not to be taxed. For we have virtually decided here that the mines shall not be taxed, by declaring that only the proceeds shall be taxed, because last year, as we all know, under a law of a similar character, only five hundred dollars was collected from the mines, and that was paid out for attorney's fees, in trying to collect more. I think I can safely venture to say that under the provision as it now stands not a single dollar will ever be collected from the mines. Now, sir, I say to the representatives of the mining interest, inasmuch as you have incorporated that provision into our fundamental law, I call upon you to make the burdens as light as possible upon those who will have to bear them.

It is proposed here that this State shall give three millions of dollars for railroad enterprises. I would not object so much, or so strongly to that proposition, provided it were at all commensurate with our means, and our relative interest. But what does the State of California give? That is a State whose grand and magnificent resources challenge the admiration of every other State, and of the whole world—the great State of California! She certainly has an equal interest with us in this important work, and more so, because it is claimed that one of the great objects of the Pacific Railroad is that the Pacific coast may be protected against foreign invasion. I claim that California has more than double the amount of interest in this work that we have, and yet that great State only proposes—and I say she is magnanimous in making even that proposition—to give a million and a half of dollars.

Mr. WARWICK. I suppose the gentleman does not wish to misstate the facts, and therefore I will ask leave to correct him. Now I candidly admit that there is a great deal of difference between a State and the people of a State, but nevertheless the people go to make up the State, do they not?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARWICK. Well, sir, the people of the State of California have contributed to the Pacific Railroad as follows: In San Francisco six hundred thousand dollars, or a million altogether for railroad purposes; in the city and county of Sacramento three hundred thousand dollars; in the county of Placerville about the same amount. And taking all these together, with the amount paid by the State of California, the total amount of the contribution paid by California towards the Pacific Railroad is something over three millions of dollars.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. But these appropriations were made by the different counties that are more immediately interested in the construction of the work—not as a national measure, nor as a State measure, but as a measure in which they were more immediately and locally interested. And no sooner, sir, was that appropriation sought to be obtained in the city and county of San Francisco, than they began to use every legal means to avoid its payment. They have got sick of their bargain already.

WARWICK—LOCKWOOD—BANKS—DELONG.

[July 19.

Mr. WARWICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me further.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to say one word; and that is that the gentleman is entirely mistaken as to the people of San Francisco repudiating or repenting any bargain of the kind.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Well, the Board of Supervisors, then—they are the agents of the people.

Mr. WARWICK, [in his seat.] No, sir; only Supervisor McCoppin.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. But they tell us that we distrust the people. Now, sir, under a republican form of government I claim, and admit, that all power is in the people; but whenever the people delegate their power, we look to the persons to whom such power is delegated as the representatives of the people. Now I ask, gentlemen, if the object of a fundamental law is not to mark out and define, by plain and legible land-marks, the courses and boundaries of future legislation? We have been called by the people to assemble together here, if I understand correctly my position as a delegate in this Convention, to see if the people will be willing to go into a State organization and form a State government, under certain restrictions. Those restrictions are that the Legislature, in legislating upon this or that subject, shall be allowed to go so far and no farther. Why is it that those gentlemen who now throw this charge of unwillingness to trust the people in our faces, have said that the Legislature shall not tax mines and mining claims? Why did they not leave that to the people, to whom those gentlemen now seem to look for their relief? Why not trust to their intelligence and their judgment upon that question? Why did these gentlemen say, in another provision of the Constitution, that after the State debt shall have reached a certain specified amount, no debt shall be incurred beyond that amount, and that any appropriation that may be made beyond that will be null and void?

These are constitutional restrictions, and we are not arrogating to ourselves that power or that wisdom which we do not possess by establishing them, because this instrument is to be submitted to the people after our final action upon it, and they will decide whether it shall be the fundamental law of the new State or not. I do claim that in taking such action we are not arrogating to ourselves any superior wisdom, or saying that wisdom will die with this body. We have said that the Legislature shall provide for the segregation of the homestead; we have said that the Legislature shall do this and that, and that the Legislature shall not do this or that; and I claim that it is perfectly consistent for this body to restrict the Legislature in like manner, in regard to appropriations for internal improvements.

But I place my objection upon the basis that we are unable to give three millions of dollars, or anything like it, to a railroad—that, in a business point of view, for we ought to look at it like business men, when the Territory is groaning under the burden of taxation, when ninety-five thousand dollars only per annum are collected of Territorial taxes—if they propose to saddle upon us even the interest, amounting to two hundred and ten thousand dollars a year, we cannot endure it, and ought not to undertake it. Is that business like? Would any business man attempt to proceed on a basis like that? No. Now if the vote to be taken here were only to say that we are in favor of any measure, consistent with the public welfare, which is calculated to aid this great national work, I would vote "aye" so loud that you could hear me all over town. If it were merely a resolution that it is the sense of this body that we are in favor of doing all in our power for the construction of this great work, I would vote "aye;" but while I would do that, I claim that we are really not able as a State to give anything. It has been the study of every member of the Convention to proceed upon such an economical basis, in establishing our State Government, that the revenues may be equal to the expenditures. And, sir, that has been the most difficult problem to solve—the most difficult one that has been or can be presented to the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. The hour for adjournment has arrived.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. DELONG. Before the Convention adjourns I would like to make a report; it will not take a moment.

The PRESIDENT. The report will be received, if there is no objection.

Mr. DELONG, from the Special Committee to whom was referred Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, presented the following report:

The Special Committee to whom was referred Article II of the Constitution, entitled "Right of Suffrage," beg leave to report the same back, and recommend the following amendments:

Amend Section 4 by striking out the words "absent from this State," occurring in the third line of that section. Also, amend the amendments heretofore made to that section, by striking out all after the word "cast" in the first line, to and including the word "officers" in the second line. Also, amend Section 7 by striking out the proviso added thereto.

C. E. DELONG, Chairman.

The report having been read,

The PRESIDENT, at 12 o'clock, declared the Convention at recess until 2 o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at two o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. DELONG. I ask of the Convention a suspension of the rules, which will not occupy a moment, in order to take from the file Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage, which was reported from the special committee just before recess, for the purpose of placing it on its final passage. The Enrolling Committee have enrolled up to Article II, and unless that is acted upon, so as to give the Enrolling Clerk work, we may have to wait a day or two after we get through our work, to enable him to catch up.

The PRESIDENT. For my own satisfaction I should prefer that the report should not now be taken up, as I would like to examine it during the afternoon.

Mr. DELONG. I was going to explain the amendment, by the leave of the Convention, and it will take but a very few words.

The first amendment is to Section 4. It reads now in the section in this way—"The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same, who may be absent from this State in the military or naval service of the United States," etc. Your committee deemed that the words "absent from this State" would be construed to imply that persons in the military or naval service of the United States, in this State, should not be permitted to exercise the elective franchise, and consequently they have recommended the striking out of the words "absent from this State," so as to read "The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same who may be in the military or naval service of the United States," etc. Then if any man is in the military or naval service, whether in the State or out of it, he will be entitled to the elective franchise.

The next amendment is an amendment to the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosman.) It reads now, "Provided, the votes so cast for officers of a lower grade than State officers shall be made to apply to the county and township of which said voters were bona fide residents at the time of their enlistment." The committee recommend the striking out of the words "for officers of a lower grade than State officers," so that it will read, "Provided the votes so cast shall be made to apply to the county and township of which said voters were bona fide residents at the time of their enlistment." It was thought that the vote of the soldier should properly be made to apply as well to State officers as to county officers.

The third amendment was to strike out the proviso relative to the oath, leaving the matter in the hands of the Legislature, to prescribe such rules, regulations and restrictions as they may deem proper, as a condition to the right of voters to have their names registered. These are the only amendments recommended by the committee.

The PRESIDENT. So far as I am concerned, my only desire was to have an opportunity for further examination of these amendments.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was agreed to.

The SECRETARY read the several amendments proposed by the committee.

[Mr. COLLINS in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not desire to delay the action of the Convention in relation to this matter, but I am not at the present moment prepared to vote with a proper understanding of the effect of striking out this test oath. The laws now in force in the Territory will doubtless be continued in force until they are repealed or other provision is made upon the same subject, and furthermore, the laws in reference to elections, under our existing organization, will undoubtedly be applicable until other laws are enacted to supersede them. I am satisfied of that; but as to a further proposition, namely, in regard to the question whether or not, under this provision, the Legislature would have power to incorporate into a law regulating elections any test oath, I am not prepared to come to any conclusion at the present time.

I have had occasion heretofore to present my views on the subject of a test oath, to the Convention. While I was earnestly desirous of striking out this test oath, in the relation which it then occupied in the Constitution, requiring the voter to take the oath at the time he proposed to cast his ballot—whilst I was opposed to that for reasons which were satisfactory to my own mind, (and I have had no occasion since to change my views in that respect,) on account of the impracticability, and the probability of delays, which might prevent many persons from exercising the elective franchise—yet I thought such a provision, requiring a test oath to be administered, should be incorporated somewhere in the Constitution, and that the most appropriate method was to give this power to the registrar to administer this oath, only in cases where the person might be challenged on the score of disloyalty. I am apprehensive that the effect of this proposed amendment will be a denial of any power to the Legislature to make any provision for a test oath, whilst in my judgment, such an oath, in its proper place, is necessary.

I hope this matter will not now be acted on, but that we shall be allowed a further opportunity to examine it. I am willing to go as far as the farthest of those who favor a test oath of this character, but at the same time I am not prepared to say now, as I said before, what the effect would be, and I am unwilling to place this matter in such a position that the Legislature might possibly be inhibited, if it were deemed proper or advisable to perpetuate a law similar in its character to that which we now have on our Territorial statute books. I do not charge that it is the intention, nor do I think it is the intention of my friend from Storey (Mr. DeLong) to prevent the Legislature from exercising that power.

Mr. DELONG. On the contrary, the committee think it does not. We have had the subject under consideration for some time, and we have all come to the conclusion that it does not. Nevertheless it is possible that the gentleman's views may be correct.

Tuesday.]

JOHNSON—DELONG—WARWICK—BROSNAN.

[July 19.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I am satisfied that the gentleman does not desire to forbid the Legislature from exercising this power, and I certainly do not; but for fear that it may be so inhibited, and in order that we may have an opportunity of investigating the subject a little more thoroughly, I trust that the matter may be laid over for the present time. My impression, from the hasty examination I have given to the amendment is, that by its adoption the Legislature would have no authority to enact such a law, and therefore I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion and give us further time to examine the amendment. It may be that after such examination, I will, for one, concur in its adoption.

Mr. DELONG. If we have got to discuss this matter, we may as well discuss it now as at any time. The committee drew up the report after careful consideration, and fully believing that the section as it stands would give the Legislature full power, whenever they see fit, to incorporate that test oath. A number of propositions were advanced in the committee, and the committee unanimously came to the conclusion, as did every other gentleman in the room at the time, that the Legislature would have full power, with this amendment, to impose as a condition of registration, any condition it might see proper to specify.

Mr. WARWICK. I call for the reading of the section as it will be if amended.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

SEC. 7. Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the counties of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment by proper proofs of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage as hereby established, to preserve the purity of elections, and to regulate the manner of holding and making returns of the same.

Mr. WARWICK. I am really inclined to entertain the same doubt that occupies the mind of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson.) That is the way it strikes me at present. I really cannot, from merely hearing that amendment read, judge what the ultimate effect would be, or how far the Legislature would be justified and sustained by it, in providing a test oath. If an assurance can be given which will satisfy my mind that in this amendment there is no sacrifice of principle, I shall be willing to support it. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Convention at this moment, in the further consideration of the subject, but if the gentleman from Storey will withdraw his motion and allow the matter to remain for the present, until we can have a little further consideration of it, I may possibly be in favor of supporting this amendment; otherwise, with the light before me at the present moment, I am not sure but I shall be opposed to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is one proposition which I will suggest as incontrovertible, and that is, that when certain qualifications of voters are prescribed in the Constitution, unless there be an express reservation, giving to the Legislature power for the imposition of additional restraints or qualifications, it is beyond the power of the Legislature to prescribe any other or further conditions or restrictions.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will suggest that the Supreme Court of California have held that a new oath prescribed by the Legislature for persons obtaining office or holding office to which they are nominated or appointed, although different from the oath laid down in the Constitution, was nevertheless constitutional. In the Constitution of California there is a test oath provided—an oath for every one holding office in the State—and the Constitution says that this shall be the only test oath required; nevertheless, the Legislature devised and enacted another oath, different from the one which all officers under that State Government had been required to subscribe to, and some parties raised a question upon it, maintaining that the law was unconstitutional, because it prescribed an oath other than the constitutional oath of office; and recently the case went to the Supreme Court of that State, and that tribunal held that the Legislature was competent to prescribe such an oath, notwithstanding the restriction in the Constitution that no other test oath would be required.

Mr. DELONG. We have no such restriction here.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the gentleman from Storey must be mistaken as regards such a decision.

Mr. BROSNAN. The case I refer to is that of the People ex rel. Highton, the respondent having refused to take the oath prescribed for attorneys and counsellors-at-law, in San Francisco.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the gentleman will find that to be entirely a different case. The oath there prescribed refers to an office not known, recognized, or even suggested in the Constitution of that State. I will say, however, that with the limited understanding I have of the amendment, derived from a hasty examination, I am now prepared to discuss it, either in its constitutional or legal bearings, or perhaps as a question of expediency, and we should endeavor, by all means, to avoid any hasty, and possibly inconsiderate action on such a matter.

I was proceeding to remark, before the explanation was made by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) as to the nature of the case to which he referred, that I recollected no such decision of the Supreme Court of California, and if that court ever rendered such a decision, while I have a higher appreciation of the decisions of the Supreme Court of California than some gentlemen here, or at least one who has alluded to the decisions of that tribunal, at the same time whoever might have been responsible for such a ruling, I will take upon myself the responsibility of saying that I can point to decisions of the courts of nine out of ten States where the adverse position has been held. It is absurd to say that when a form of oath has been prescribed in a State Constitution, and by express language, declaring that no other or further test shall be required, a Court may yet give a judicial construction, notwithstanding those inhibitory words, to the effect that the Legislature may add to or subtract from that prescribed form of oath. It is a proposition altogether untenable, and it amounts only to this, that if the Supreme Court of California ever made such a decision, it erred most glaringly, and is not supported by the decisions of the courts of any other State.

DELONG—BROSAN—JOHNSON.

But light has been shed upon the subject by the explanation of the gentleman from Storey, that the oath is only that in relation to attorneys and counsellors-at-law, for no form of oath for them is prescribed in the Constitution. That subject is therefore left for the wisdom of the Legislature, in the exercise of its legitimate power, while the form of the oath for the officers of the State, under the Constitution, is prescribed and fixed. Therefore I take it that this is not a case in point. To use a familiar legal phrase, it has "no applicability to the question at bar."

Upon referring to this provision of the California Constitution, it will be seen that it expressly specifies, in the language of the section itself, what it refers to. It defines what it means, and therefore defining what it does mean—specifying those officers to whom it does apply—the conclusion is, by a familiar rule of legal interpretation, that it excludes all others from its operation, and therefore, in respect to other officers, the power would necessarily devolve upon the Legislature to regulate the matter. But the difficulty here is that when we prescribe a form of oath for executive, judicial, legislative, and all civil officers, it is not within the scope of legislative power to add to, or subtract from the form of that oath, or to make any change or addition to it. I repeat, as a legal proposition, which cannot, be successfully refuted, that the Legislature can have no such authority. This is the provision of the California Constitution :

"SECTION 3. Members of the Legislature, and all officers, executive and judicial, except such inferior officers as may be by law exempted, shall, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: 'I do solemnly swear, (or affirm, as the case may be,) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the State of California, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of _____ according to the best of my ability.' And no other oath, declaration or test, shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust."

MR. DELONG. That is just the language of our own Constitution, relative to men who are elected or appointed to office. There is no oath prescribed in the Constitution, however, in reference to what shall constitute the qualifications of a voter, and what point is there, then, in the argument that the Legislature may not prescribe any other oath? There is an established oath for office-holders, but none prescribed for voters, and therefore we leave the Legislature full power to provide any other means they please, even to the examination of witnesses, if they deem it proper, to test the question whether or not a man is qualified to vote.

MR. BROSAN. I think I did not state my proposition in relation to the ruling of the Supreme Court of California in the case to which I referred, so as to be clearly understood. This was not, as I understand it, an oath to be taken upon the admission of a lawyer to the bar, but it was an oath required to be administered to him, and which in this case he had refused to take, in the prosecution of a suit, he having been previously admitted to the bar. The Legislature had provided by law that any person refusing to take that oath should not be permitted to defend or prosecute a suit. Mr. Gregory Yale contested the law at one time on the same point of constitutionality, but afterward he took the oath. The argument against the law, as I understand it, was this, that an attorney-at-law is a judicial officer, and therefore not compellable to take any oath save that prescribed for judicial officers in the Constitution. The decision of the Supreme Court I understand to have been that an officer of a court is ex vi termini, a judicial officer, coming within the category of judicial officers, and discharging the duties of his office as such, and that attorneys being in that category must take the oath. It is not disputed that he is a judicial officer, under the section of the Constitution which the gentleman from Ormsby has read. The grounds of objection being that he should not be required to take an extra oath, and that its requirement was in contravention of that section which prescribes the oath to be taken by all judicial officers, and that attorneys therefore need not take any oath, except the one prescribed in the Constitution itself, the Supreme Court ruled to the contrary. Hence I said that in my judgment, and I based it on the decision of the Supreme Court of that State, I apprehended that there was no legal force in the suggestion of the gentleman from Ormsby.

MR. JOHNSON. I am constrained to fall back upon my original suggestion, that it is a proposition of law sustained by not a single respectable court, save that of California; and for such a ruling I have no respect, even though it emanates from men possessing the legal learning, and undoubted professional reputation, which distinguishes the judges who constitute that Supreme Court Bench. Now, sir, I regret exceedingly that I am forced to take that position. I know full well that those judges occupy a much higher grade in professional repute than I do, but, sir, I do not retract what I have said, and I am willing to be placed on the record as dissenting from such a decision. I think, however, that my friend from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) must be mistaken as to the extent and scope of the interpretation given to that section of the California Constitution by the Supreme Court, for I cannot conceive that it is possible for gentlemen who occupy so exalted a position as that of members of the highest appellate court of the State of California, ever to nullify, by their decisions, the plain, unmistakable language of the State Constitution—language which, as I understand it, is susceptible of but one construction.

But the other gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) says there is no point in these objections, because we have not provided a test oath for voters. Here is the very point involved. As we have once provided such an oath, if we now strike it out a query is suggested to my mind whether the Legislature would have the power to establish it. It is just here where the doubt is suggested. Now I do not desire to discuss the matter at this time, and have asked for a postponement, because, with my present understanding, I should be compelled to vote against the amendment, whereas, being afforded an opportunity for investigation, I might coincide with the views of the gentleman from Storey. It is for the reason that I doubt the power of the Legislature, and fear that by force of other provisions, it would be beyond its power to prescribe an additional test oath, or any test oath whatever, if we strike this out, that I desire further time for consideration.

I repeat that from the reading here, and the limited time I have been able to give to examining the article and the amendatory sections, I at least fear that this power will be placed beyond the scope of legislation. I understand that the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) does not wish to place this subject beyond the power of the Legislature, but on the contrary desires that the Legislature may have full power in the premises. I concur with him so far, but at the same time I do not want, to use a vulgar expression, to "go it blind." I do not want to take such an action as perhaps may place it beyond legislative control. The laws of the Territory will, I suppose, be continued in force until they are repealed, but can be operative only so far as they are not inimical to this Constitution.

Mr. DELONG. Why not offer an amendment to the section, rather than vote it down? If the gentleman is afraid of it, I will offer an amendment to meet his objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the Convention will bear with me one moment further. Gentlemen will bear witness that I have expressed no fear. I only say that I think the section would not confer that power on the Legislature, and I agree with the gentleman from Storey in desiring to give the Legislature that power.

Mr. DELONG. I have only to say in reply, that some twenty or twenty-five members of the Convention agree that the provision does give that power to the Legislature. If the gentleman from Ormsby thinks it does not, let him offer an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that I should recognize the right of the gentleman from Storey to speak for twenty or twenty-five members.

Mr. DELONG. I will read what I proposed to offer as an amendment, to meet the gentleman's views.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman will pardon me; when I want to offer an amendment, I think, with all respect, I can find the language which will express my wishes. But here, upon the spur of the moment, I say I do not desire to discuss the legality or the illegality of the proposition. I do not want a hasty vote on so vital a question. I have repeatedly explained that I am not prepared now to say whether it is correct, or incorrect, but I fear it is not proper, and with a view of further examining it I have asked its postponement.

Mr. DELONG. I ask again, does the gentleman fear that it does not give the power to the Legislature which we think it does give? If so, will it take long to remedy it? I do not think it need take two minutes to perfect an amendment to say here that the Legislature may prescribe any other test, or may prescribe any oath. Let the gentleman offer the amendment he wishes, and it will be supported, I have no doubt. But in order to facilitate the business of the Convention, in order to have the Enrolling Clerk go on and keep the enrollment up, so that we may be able to adjourn as early as possible, I desire to dispose of this matter now.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am informed by the Secretary that there is ample business to keep the Enrolling Clerk at work until to-morrow, so that argument is without foundation. As to the other matter, of an amendment, I want to embody no surplusage in this Constitution. If it is found that this section has already vested the power we desire in the Legislature, I am content to agree with the gentleman in supporting it. For myself—and I am speaking for myself alone, and not for twenty-five or thirty members of the Convention—I say if it does give the Legislature that power, I shall ask for no amendment; but, on the contrary, if it does not, I shall undoubtedly be compelled to present an amendment embracing that feature.

Mr. EARL. Three-quarters of an hour have now been consumed in arguing this question. I presume we have all made up our minds, and I hope the Convention will not be detained longer in argument. I call for the question. ["Question! question!"]

Mr. WARWICK. There is no time when I have risen to address this Convention that I have felt so deeply upon the subject pending as I now feel. What I am about to say may possibly be wrong, but, sir, I feel my heart almost sink within me. I have tried, while sitting here and listening to the speech of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) to refrain if possible from speaking on this question; but, to me, sir, it assumes an importance which no other question has, and whatever may be the result to me, I cannot abstain now, nor do I desire to, from giving breath and utterance to the feelings which sway me. I fear that, in the amendments here proposed, I see a concession to those to whom we have no right to concede, a pandering toward an interest to which we have no right to pander; a looking for aid from those from whom we have no right to expect aid. I fear we are asking from our enemies, and from the enemies of our government, assistance which we ought to be ashamed to take. That is what I fear, sir. I fear to go back to my constituents and tell them that when this question came up, and when the outside pressure was brought to bear in regard to the success of our Constitution, although feeling that I was right, I was afraid to stand up for the right, lest the Constitution should sink and I should sink with it, but rather sought to pander to the wrong, as one of the elements of success. If I could assist the gentleman from Storey, I would assist him, but I cannot.

When I was preparing to leave my home on the eastern border of our Territory to come to this Convention, an old man, one of the most respectable of my constituents, approached me and said: "Be sure of that test oath!" And again, just as I was about leaving, he came to me and said: "Do not forget the test oath!" And why? Because, sir, the importance of that measure impressed itself upon his mind. As I pressed his hand, I said: "You can rely upon me"—and so he can, to the last. What is the reason that at this time, after we have had a full and mature consideration of two or three days upon this very question, this amendment is sought to be incorporated here? I ask if it is not on account of the outside pressure which has been brought to bear? Is it not on account of the promises of assistance which we have no right to look for, and which we should spurn—aye, spurn!—if it were offered to us?

I have never in my life consented to sacrifice principle to expediency, but that I have subsequently had occasion to regret it. Trust to expediency and see where it will lead us. Under despotism it has hurried the purest, the bravest, and the noblest to the scaffold and the dungeon. But high over expediency rise justice, right, and truth. High over it rises another principle, that rests in the heart of the statesman who cherishes there only the good, the sole good, of his country. We are now at a point that requires something more than the ordinary attention and interest of the Convention. I fear we are—I regret to say the word—about to pander to an interest that every member who hears me may regret to the last of his life ever having sought to conciliate. Rather perish and die, I say, than live by means which we should ever after reprobate. Why, sir, suppose the success of this great issue before us were trembling in the balance, and the assistance we could borrow from this source might insure its success, how much would we have to congratulate ourselves upon in after time? Place it in whatever light you will, it is that interest which is hostile to our government which we are seeking to conciliate, for the purpose of carrying this Constitution before the people. That is it. We are seeking the aid of an unworthy interest, in order to secure the passage of this instrument. Than it should pass by such unworthy aid, I would rather see it sink—aye, sink forever—even though I were to perish beneath its ruins. Having once made up his mind to the path of right, the man who sways from that path, to the right or the left, though it be only for an instant, has taken that first false step which will ultimately secure, I fear, not only his political but his eternal damnation. I tell you, Mr. President, that this question, let it be sought to be covered up and hidden by as nice an arrangement of words as you please, is the most important question that has yet come before this Convention.

Mr. CHAPIN, [in his seat.] Except the railroad question.

Mr. WARWICK. No, sir; let the railroad and all other interests be annihilated rather than this thing should be done. It is not a question of a railroad; it is not a question of internal improvements; but it is a question of eternal rights. It is a question of principle, of a principle that was living before the railroad was thought of, and which shall live till the last railroad on earth shall be annihilated. I look upon that question of a railroad as altogether unimportant, in comparison. This question does not occupy the same status that it did the other day. It comes up under a different phase. We have made up our decision upon it already, and have said that such and such a test shall be incorporated into the Constitution, and why? Because we then considered it right. But since then has any pressure been brought to bear upon the Convention? Have gentlemen thought the Constitution would not be sustained by so large a number of the elements of strength as would support it if this amendment were made? What element do they expect to secure? It is the evil element of disloyalty, which we are here to oppose. It is the element which is now arrayed against the government and seeking its overthrow. It is the element against which the band of every loyal man is, and should be raised. We have been seeking its life, as it has been seeking for ours, and not ours alone, but, above all, the national life, the great heritage which we are to send down to our children, and our children's children, as long as the republic shall last, as long as the earth shall endure.

This is a question of right, sir, which arises not merely in political conventions, but which takes its birth with the life of man, and survives his decay. Can we afford to sway a little to the right, or to the left, for the sake of expediency? The gentleman from Storey thinks we can. He thinks if we strike out this test we shall receive the aid of a certain element in this community which will be arrayed against us if we incorporate it into our Constitution. Sir, does that test give offence to any loyal man? Does it give pain to the heart of any loyal man who wishes for the welfare of his country? Does any true patriot shrink from that test? I venture to say, not one. It was a question of expediency, the other day, as to whether the oath should be applied to everybody, simply because it did not seem to be absolutely necessary that loyal men should be put to the trouble of taking the oath, but the Convention in its wisdom decided that it should be applied to all alike, in order to make the provision as little odious as possible when the amnesty shall come—in order that no man should feel that he was thrust out of the pale of forgiveness. Notwithstanding that his great sin is written in ineffaceable scarlet letters upon the folds of his garments, still the Angel of Mercy may unfold her broad wings to encompass all, even traitors of the darkest dye. For that reason we said to them—“We insist upon no test for you which we are not willing to take ourselves. We impose no test, to which any man who loves his country will not willingly and freely submit.” In order to remove the sting and barb as far as possible, that it may not rankle in the hearts of these men and recall the memory of the evil deeds they have committed, we said—“We will submit to the same test which we propose to you.” That was a wise and merciful provision, and an honor to the gentleman who first proposed to incorporate it in this article. But now, when we have made our election, when by the vote of a large majority that oath is placed in our Constitution, it is sought to be removed thence, for the sake of securing the support of those men who are arrayed against the Government. Our Government needs no such aid.

DELONG—WARWICK—HAINES.

Sir, we were called together here for the high and noble purpose of assisting to remove a great blot existing upon the escutcheon of the United States—for the purpose of enabling the United States of America to stand before the world as the great home of American Freedom, as the home of the oppressed of every land, of the down-trodden of every clime. This is not a question of party. High above parties and factions is the glorious American Union. The names which have distinguished the divisions of political parties shall perish and be forgotten; the names even of those who have been honored by them shall be forever ignored; the smoke shall pass away from the hundreds of battle fields, and the grass grow green again over the graves of the slain; the thunders of battle shall give place to the peaceful hum of industry; the mournful relics of those who have given their lives for their country shall rest in green and peaceful meads, and waving grass and blooming flowers of returning spring shall rise lightly as a canopy above them; and even when almost the memory of this desolating strife shall have passed away, still this Union shall live and endure for countless generations. But, sir, if the Union is to live and endure, it will not be because questions of expediency have risen superior over questions of right. I tell you, sir, that even this little amendment, worded so carefully, covered up so nicely that it seems to signify nothing, has a great and important significance. It has a meaning which I, for one, am not willing to go back to my constituents and defend.

I did not intend when I sat down the last time to speak upon this question again, but when the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) had used every conceivable argument apparently in vain, in endeavoring to secure an opportunity for investigating the subject, it impressed me so powerfully that I could not sit here in silence and see this matter passed upon by the Convention without entering my protest against it, without raising my voice and saying, “Gentlemen, pass it if you will, but I am the bitter enemy of that compromise, now and forever.” That is the way I feel on this subject. It may be carried by this Convention, and the gentleman from Storey says, if I understand him correctly, that some twenty or more members have agreed to support it.

Mr. DELONG. Oh no, sir; I said simply that as many as twenty or more members considered that that section, as it is proposed here to be amended, would give the Legislature power to impose any oath they pleased.

Mr. WARWICK. Then I will withdraw that. It appears, then, that eighteen or twenty members of this Convention differ from me. I very much regret it. They are gentlemen whose wisdom I would acknowledge, gentlemen whose venerable aspect, and experience, and judgment justly entitle them to honor and respect and deference, while I am but an humble individual. Could I follow in their pathway most willingly would I do it, but feeling as I do that no question of so much moment has ever before been raised in the Convention, feeling that the question of expediency is seeking to override the question of right, I say again, most solemnly, that I cannot go with you. I wash my hands of the measure. Adopt it if you will, but I am its enemy, now and forever.

Mr. HAINES. I had intended to keep my seat and say nothing on this subject, but on more careful reflection I have concluded that I cannot do justice to myself and to my constituents, without offering a few remarks in addition to those which have been submitted by gentlemen more able than I am to present the subject in a clear light.

Only a few days ago we had this question under discussion, and it was then very fully and ably discussed, and the section in its present form was adopted by quite a large majority. Many of the gentlemen then voting in the affirmative, expressed themselves anxious to have the oath incorporated; they were not merely desirous, but strenuously anxious to have it incorporated. But there seems for some reason to have been a change in the minds of gentlemen. Then the taxation clause had not been sprung upon the Convention, and gentllemen were not fully satisfied as to the financial condition we should stand in when we should have disposed of that clause. When that question came up, and was argued at length in the Convention, we were told that certain members would withdraw from the Convention, unless a certain measure should pass—unless the taxation clause should be so modified as to exclude certain portions of the property of the State from taxation—and those gentlemen have so far succeeded, that we are deprived of the support of about three-fourths of the property of the State, in bearing the burdens of the State; we are deprived of the assistance of about three-fourths of the property of the State, in the navigation of that new ship which is about to be launched. Those gentlemen then expressed themselves satisfied, and so far from opposing the Constitution, as they had previously declared they would do, they are now very anxious that the Constitution shall be ratified by the people. They are not only anxious for it, but they are working for it in every possible way. I have no doubt they will go before their constituents and tell them—"Gentlemen, you bear no portion of the burdens of the State Government about to be inaugurated. You can well afford to vote for it, because you are not taxed and will have no portion of the burdens to bear."

Then, again, it has been said here that consistency is a jewel, but some of these very consistent gentlemen were opposed to the railroad proviso. They were opposed to advancing anything toward the construction of the Pacific Railroad, but as soon as the article on taxation was so modified as to exclude from taxation three-fourths of the property of the State, leaving the provision so vague that no two members can understand it alike—(although I am satisfied in my own mind that it was never meant to impose any tax upon the mining property of the State, and not a dollar will ever be derived from that source)—then these gentlemen suddenly become very anxious to render aid to the Pacific Railroad, and they are perfectly willing now to donate three millions of dollars to help that road over the mountains.

Mr. DELONG. Will the gentleman name some one to whom he refers in that connection?

Mr. McCLINTON. I would like to have the gentleman point out a single individual.

Mr. HAINES. I do not know as it is necessary for any gentleman to take it up who is not hit; there are plenty who are hit.

Mr. McCLINTON. Was I in favor of the Pacific Railroad proviso before the clause in respect to taxing the mines was adopted? Or have I been since then in favor of it?

Mr. HAINES. I think it will not hit the gentleman from Esmeralda; but I believe there are many gentlemen in the Convention who view this matter just as I do. We have several members here who did oppose the Pacific Railroad clause before the taxation clause was adopted, and afterwards were in favor of it.

I assign no reason for that. They have excluded a great portion of the wealth of the State from taxation—a portion which I and others have contended ought to bear its equal proportion of the burdens, either of a State Government or of any other government.

Mr. BROSNAN. I rise to a question of order. I dislike to interrupt my friend from Douglas, but he is reflecting upon the past action of the Convention, which is not in order; and besides, he is not speaking to the question before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. I think the gentleman has been taking a very wide range in his remarks.

Mr. HAINES. I am only referring to our action as we pass along, but it can all be left to the remembrance of members here of the Convention, and the people I have no doubt will understand it without any trouble.

Now as to this question of taking an oath of allegiance, I do say that to my mind there is no question whatever of the propriety of obliging everybody to take an oath of that kind before being allowed to vote. If it can be shown to me that it is going to work a great hardship, or be any vital injury to the loyal voters of the new State, when it shall be organized, to oblige them to take a test oath, then I shall be prepared to say that I can vote with these gentlemen for this new proposition which they have submitted. But after carefully looking over the subject I can see no such hardship, and I shall vote against the amendment, and for the section as it stood originally. I only mentioned the past action of the Convention to show the inconsistency of some gentlemen who were in favor of this section as it stands, until after the taxation clause was adopted, and are now opposed to it, just as they changed their views when the railroad clause came up the second time, and showed themselves willing to appropriate three millions, or five millions if necessary, in aid of that work.

Mr. DUNNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAINES. I have yielded the floor, but I will answer if I can.

Mr. DUNNE. I wish to know whether the gentleman intends to convey the idea that members who had been opposed to the Constitution were now in favor of this measure for the purpose of gaining votes for the Constitution?

Mr. HAINES. I only made that as a suggestion. As it strikes me, that is the position they occupy.

Mr. DUNNE. Does he say that those who have been opposed to the Constitution are now in favor of this measure, in order to obtain votes for the Constitution?

Mr. HAINES. I do know that it was so reported, and said to have been expressed here—that unless that taxation clause was modified, certain gentlemen would withdraw from the Convention. It was so reported, and I have heard it said here several times, that it was de-terminated in caucus to withdraw from the Convention if they did not succeed in that matter, relative to the taxation of the mines.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. This discussion is taking altogether too wide a range.

Mr. DUNNE. I am speaking to a question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. DUNNE. I am, I believe, the only man who came into this Convention openly opposed to the adoption of a State Constitution at this time. I offered a resolution to the effect that the Convention adjourn sine die, without proceeding to frame a Constitution. Now the gentleman from Douglas—

Mr. HAINES. So far as the gentleman from Humboldt is concerned, I will say that I had no reference to him whatever.

Mr. DUNNE. I am satisfied with that.

Mr. DELONG. I have no parliamentary question or device to present. My views on this subject are simply these: This State Constitution will be inoperative of course until it shall be adopted by the people, and even then it will still continue to be inoperative until the Legislature shall meet, and pass laws to carry out the provisions of the Constitution. Until such time, then, as the Legislature shall have assembled, and passed such laws, all gentlemen must admit that any oath prescribed in our Constitution will have no effect, and no bearing whatever upon the citizens of the State. Everybody can vote just as freely, if the oath is incorporated in the Constitution as if we only empowered the Legislature to provide by statute for a test oath. The only question therefore is, is it wiser for us to incorporate that oath in the Constitution which is to operate for all time to come, looking to the future as well as to our present circumstances, or is it wiser for us to authorize the Legislature to make it a statutory requirement? That is the only question involved in this report.

Now gentlemen get up here and make declamatory speeches, arrogating to themselves all the honesty and all the patriotism in the country, claiming that no other man is actuated by conscientious or patriotic motives, but that all are governed by expediency, or by a desire to pander to some particular interest. I submit that that is hardly a correct line of argument, with which to meet a proposition like this that has been made in good faith. I believe there are other gentlemen than the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) who have come here influenced by the highest motives of patriotism. I believe the most of us have as loyal constituents as those who have indorsed him, and that we are as loyal as those who deciaim loudest, and send the American eagle highest toward the sky. Now I say that this is the only real question before the Convention—whether this test oath should be made a Constitutional provision, or a legislative enactment? There is nothing in the question about a Pacific Railroad, which was suggested by the gentleman from Douglas; nothing in it about taxing the mines, and nothing in it about bolting from the Convention, upon which he made another portion of his speech. I confess that I could not see the point of that argument in relation to this amendment.

Now, inasmuch as a test oath, if we have one, will operate just as quickly to prevent any disloyal man from voting, if we leave it to the Legislature to provide for it by an enactment, at the next session, as it will if we place it directly in the Constitution; as we have Territorial laws which must be enforced until modified or repealed by the State laws, and they require a challenge of the same character, on the ground of disloyalty, so that we lose no time in respect to the matter, for the Territorial law will continue until superseded by the State law, and disloyal votes will thus be shut out all the time; therefore, I say, I can see no objection whatever to this amendment, leaving the matter in the hands of the Legislature. The only question, I repeat, is whether we shall put it into the Constitution, or leave it to the Legislature to enact such laws as they deem proper, with the power of modifying or changing them from time to time, according to their existing circumstances. The passions of men may subside in time or give way to calmer reasoning, and more careful and discriminating legislation may be required.

Now what object gentlemen could have in getting up here and impugning the motives of other gentlemen by making statements of such a character as those which have been made here, I cannot tell. For one, I will say that I have concurred in this report with two other gentlemen on this floor, the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) and the gentleman from Esmeralda (Mr. Mason) who are on that committee, and, as I stated before, it so happened that the report being on my desk, I showed it to a number of gentlemen, and asked them if it met their views, and, as I said to the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) they all agreed with me that it would give the Legislature ample power to pass such enactments as might be desired, and therefore I had no doubt it would. And when the gentleman from Ormsby made the point that the Legislature would have no such power, I suggested that he should offer an amendment, if there was any doubt on that point, although I did not think there was any. I think the Legislature would have, under that section as we have amended it, full power to prescribe any such conditions as may be deemed fit and proper.

Mr. WARWICK. I desire to say that if I did, in the heat of a somewhat excited argument, impugn anybody's motives, more especially those of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) for whom I have the highest regard, I certainly sincerely regret it. I think I said that I feared there was a desire to conciliate a certain interest, and if I did not give that qualifi-

JOHNSON—DELONG—PROCTOR—HAINES.

[July 19.]

caution to my remarks, at least I intended to. I certainly should regret having impugned the motives of any gentleman in the Convention.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am sure the gentleman from Storey did not address his remarks to me.

Mr. DELONG. No, sir; my remarks were intended to apply to the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) alone, and I meant to say before I sat down, that although in the heat of argument he may have said what he did not intend, nevertheless, if he will reflect a little he will remember that he certainly did use language to the effect that there had been a pandering to the disloyal portion of the community, and a yielding of principle to expediency, in the amendment as here proposed, which would meet his condemnation, he said, now and forever. I submit that that was saying directly that those gentlemen who had made this report were pandering to the disloyal sentiment in the community, and were sacrificing principle to expediency.

Mr. PROCTOR. As this matter of a disloyal sentiment has been spoken of quite frequently, I wish, Mr. President, to say this, in regard to pandering to any disloyal sentiment. I believe I am the only representative of the Democratic party in this Convention; but we do not recognize as a fact the imputation that the Democratic party is in any sense a disloyal party. Certainly I do not recognize any such fact, myself, and I will say so far as relates to pandering to any disloyal sentiment, that this amendment proposing to strike out the test oath, is not asked for by the Democratic party. A number of gentlemen have come to me, in this town, and told me, as American citizens, that they did not like the idea of being compelled to come up and take the oath of allegiance, and they have asked me why I did not object to such a provision, presuming that I would be the first to object. I said to them—"Gentlemen, we are willing to take any test oath that you Union men are, and if you are willing to take that oath, we are." I want it distinctly understood that this amendment does not come from the Democratic party, and we do not ask it. We may oppose this Constitution and we may not. We shall be governed by our judgment of what is right and proper in that respect, at the expiration of the session of this Convention.

But I do not want it charged that this proposed amendment has come from the Democratic party at all. If it originates with that party, I, for one, know nothing about it, and I wish to place the Democratic party right on that point. We, as Democrats, know very well that you Union men have the majority here, and full control of this Convention. We know furthermore, that there are two objects for forming this State Government. One is the amendment of the Constitution of the United States, for the purpose of abolishing slavery, and we say give us a good State Constitution and we are willing that you should do that. The other object is, that there is a remote possibility that the election of the President of the United States, soon to take place, may not be decided by the people, but may be thrown into the House of Representatives, and we are cognizant of the fact that in such an event Nevada, if admitted as a State, would have just as many votes for the next President of the United States as the State of New York. But we are willing to grant that, too. Give us the right sort of a local Constitution and frame of government, and I pledge you my word that, knowing all these things, we will nevertheless support it. But I do not want you to place us in an improper light. I believe that there are more Union men than Democrats who will refuse to come up to the polls and vote under that test oath provision, and I do not want this amendment charged as coming from the Democratic party, or as having been demanded by the Democratic party.

Mr. DELONG. I certainly know that it did not emanate from the Democratic party, because I do not happen to belong to that institution, and I was the one who proposed in the first place that it would probably be better to leave this matter to statutory enactment, rather than to embrace it in the fundamental law. I made no secret of my position, and other members of the committee did not of theirs. Now, sir, what is the use of talking about motives here? Every member's motives are presumed to be correct, until he is convicted in some way of bad motives. The gentleman from Douglas talks about our desiring to have things our own way in the Convention, or threatening to bolt from it. I suppose the gentleman's shaft was aimed at me, and I am willing to receive it.

Mr. HAINES. I had no reference to the gentleman from Storey; in fact, I did not know who the party was.

Mr. DELONG. I will state this, that I would consider it my bounden duty, as a member of this Convention, if I should find I cannot conscientiously support the Constitution, either to rise and state, as the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) did, that it is my intention to oppose your Constitution, thereby forewarning all other members that there is among them an enemy of what they are framing, so that they may govern themselves accordingly, or else the moment that, in the process of framing the Constitution, anything should be incorporated into it which my conscience would not permit me to recommend my friends to vote for, to withdraw from the Convention. In such an event I should certainly feel it my duty to withdraw, not out of any disrespect to the Convention, but on the contrary on account of my respect for the Convention, and my respect for myself. These are my own peculiar views, and other gentlemen may entertain different views. My idea was that the very moment anything was adopted in this Constitution which I could not indorse, it would become my duty to let the Convention know that owing to that fact

STURTEVANT—PROCTOR—BANKS—CHAPIN.

[July 19.

I could not vote for the Constitution, and that therefore, being an enemy to the Constitution, I should not have any further hand in its construction. But this is merely a question of taste, on which the best of men and finest of gentlemen might differ. But I did not pretend in any spirit of hostility to foreshadow any such course. And right in this connection let us examine this idea a little further. There are other men here I believe who have threatened to leave the Convention, or to oppose the Constitution, if their views were not carried out, but they have not left us. Now are there any of these gentlemen in the Convention who are determined to oppose the Constitution, and who desire to so frame it as to secure its defeat before the people? I do not say there are any such, but I do say that there have been mutterings of discontent here. They have been heard on both sides. But that is a privilege which belongs to all men, and which is invariably exercised whenever they fail in some cherished object of their own.

These, however, are all matters foreign to the question before us. I deny that this amendment is pandering to any thing, to any sentiment, or to any party. I deny that it is a sacrifice of any principle, or that it is in any sense a yielding of principle to expediency. I say it is purely a question for men of sense to consider, as a practical question. Shall we put this test oath here in the Constitution where it will not be subject to any alteration hereafter, although all the loyal men as well as all the disloyal men in the State may wish to change it in some respects, or shall we leave it, like other subjects, to the Legislature to provide for, according to its discretion—subject to the action of succeeding Legislatures, elected to represent the peculiar views of their constituents? Now I believe, for one, in the propriety of making it a statutory rather than a constitutional provision. If others disagree with me in that I do not attack their motives, and I do not wish them to attack mine.

Mr. STURTEVANT. This thing may all be fair enough, but there is one thing you may all swear to at any time, and that is you will never find me on the fence, and if you do you may knock me off with a pick handle. [Laughter.] This looks to me like a kind of flunk movement. Now the majority of the Convention having got things all their own way, it is policy for them to secure all the votes they can. It does not matter if it is a negro that votes, his vote is just as good as a white man's if it is received, and counts just as much. And if a Copperhead votes, of course his vote counts as much as my own, or the vote of the gentleman from Storey, or any other man. My understanding of this matter, and I think it is correct, and that the whole Convention will bear me out in it, is that whenever you strike this oath out it will suit the Copperheads. "That is a pretty good Constitution," says the Copperhead, "now they have struck that oath out."

Mr. PROCTOR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If a man is challenged now, on the ground of disloyalty, even without this provision, what kind of oath does he have to take?

Mr. STURTEVANT. Well, if I administered it, it would be a mighty strong one. [Laughter.]

Mr. PROCTOR. But would it be any stronger for being incorporated in the Constitution?

Mr. STURTEVANT. That would depend on what kind of a law we had. If I had my way I would give him such a strong oath that if he was a Copperhead it would kill him sure, to take it. [Laughter.] Now I do not like the idea of making this amendment here, because I am satisfied it is designed only as a sort of compromise, to cool things down a little, so as to gather in as many votes as possible from those who think in a certain way. I am not a Buchanan man, nor a peace man of any kind. I believe that when the defenders of the country are in a tight place we ought to send help, and I do not believe in allowing the forts which belong to the country to be torn to pieces without a fight for it. This question looks to me about in this shape: This oath is a very good one, a reasonably strong oath, and I cannot see for the life of me why we should not leave it where it is. When we had to refer it, as I remarked this morning, why should we not have referred the whole thing to a committee of five? I say it was a kind of flank move, a kind of masked battery movement—this referring it without special instructions. It was good generalship, I acknowledge, but I hope this amendment will be defeated for all that.

Mr. BANKS. Now, sir, a great deal has been said here about matters of policy and duty, and references have been made to gentlemen's motives, and beautiful things have been said in a very handsome manner, all of which I should have appreciated if this had been a school for declamation. But really, as I understand, there is but one question involved to which gentlemen ought to be addressing themselves here, and that is this: Does that provision of the proposed Constitution, amended in the way it is now proposed to amend it, provide that the Legislature shall have power to prescribe any such oath as this, or not? Now there is some doubt, among candid, thinking men in regard to that matter, and for the purpose of having an opportunity to examine the proposed amendment in connection with the original article, as we have it only on the clerk's desk, and not before us here in print, in order to consume as little time as possible in making up our minds whether the copy as we have it engrossed here does or does not authorize the Legislature to prescribe an oath of this kind, I will move to pass the article over on the file for the present. Then I understand it will come up at the head of the file to-morrow morning.

Mr. CHAPIN. The gentleman had better move to lay it on the table, and then we can call it up whenever we get ready.

Tuesday,]

EARL—DELONG—JOHNSON.

[July 19.]

Mr. EARL. I hope that motion will not prevail. Now, sir, I have opposed the incorporation of this oath in the Constitution, and I have given my reasons. I do not care who may doubt my loyalty; I am as loyal as the next man. But I say, let the Legislature prescribe that oath, and do not let us fill up the Constitution with legislative provisions. It seems to me that the effect of our incorporating that oath in the Constitution will only be to show the community that we are afraid they will doubt our loyalty. This is no place for such an oath, and I hope we shall leave it to the Legislature. I have the utmost confidence in that body.

Mr. DELONG. There is no question in my mind as to the propriety of this amendment, but what surprises me is the fact that those gentlemen who do not believe that this provision would leave it to the Legislature, nevertheless, have so little confidence in their own judgment that they cannot propose an amendment that will. That is what astonishes me. I cannot say that I ever saw or heard of a question which I could not amend so as to suit at least my own views. Now if any member has any real and sincere doubt as to whether or not this matter is left to the Legislature, let him move an amendment. I proposed to offer an amendment here to the gentleman who first raised that question, which I thought placed it beyond all possibility of a doubt, saying in so many words that "the Legislature shall have power to prescribe any other or further test as a condition of voting;" but that would not give satisfaction, or the amendment might have been offered and acted upon, and consequently it appears to me that, for some reason which I cannot understand, unwarrantable delay is desired. I would like to know the object of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I surmise that the inquiry of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) if I understood him correctly, was addressed in part to me. I did not know, at the first impulse, whether I ought to reply or remain silent; but fearing that silence might be misconstrued, fearing that a doubt might be suggested to the minds of some members regarding a matter concerning which no sentiment I have uttered or vote I have cast in this Convention, justly renders me amenable to doubt or suspicion—that is as to whether I was or was not sincere—my own self-respect prompts me to reply to the gentleman from Storey. Otherwise I might deem it a question which called for no reply from me.

Now I will say in regard to the question of sincerity, upon this or any other subject, that I flatter myself there is not a member in the Convention who has disagreed with me upon any subject before the Convention, who has ever had, up to the present moment, the right to excite a well-grounded suspicion that I was insincere in any vote, or any expression of opinion upon such subject. For if there is any one peculiar characteristic of my nature, it is a disposition to utter boldly and freely my sentiments, whether, as to the public, they happen to be popular or unpopular, or whether they are such as would be likely to meet the approval or the disapproval of my fellow members in this Convention.

I have endeavored, and shall continue so to do, to reconcile the action of this Convention with the views and wishes of my constituents, so far as they are in accordance with my own ideas of justice and propriety.

I have had occasion to speak heretofore of the matter of a sacrifice of principle, although in the present instance I conceive that the question of policy or expediency has little to do with the question immediately before the Convention. But I repeat—and I flatter myself that the Convention will believe I mean what I say—that it was not for the purpose of clogging, or delaying, or postponing the discussion of this matter, that I asked to have the report laid over. It was simply that I might have an opportunity to examine and determine for myself as to the effect of the language employed. It was with no desire for delay, and it is no test of my sincerity that I declined to offer the amendment which the gentleman from Storey prepared beneath my nose, which appears in his hand-writing, and which he says he thinks is well calculated to meet my views. I say if, upon a careful and critical examination, such as is due to myself, in order to obtain a proper understanding of the subject before I vote upon so important a question; if after such deliberation as I ought to give, in deference to the people who sent me here, I find that these amendments are applicable to the original article, if I find the article so amended really does give the Legislature the power which the gentleman from Storey contends it does, to prescribe a test oath for electors, then I shall be ready to concede the point, and unite with him in support of the proposition. But whilst I am willing to do this, I will not, on the spur of the moment, consent to be put to the test, and required either to adopt the amendment which the gentleman from Storey suggests to meet what he conceives to be my views, or declining so to do, without the opportunity of making due examination, to place myself on the record in opposition to the entire proposition. I do not desire to occupy any such position until I have had an opportunity to con the matter over in my own mind, to ascertain the fit place for any amendments I may desire to offer, in order to meet the case as presented.

Mr. DELONG. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? Did I understand him correctly as saying that I thrust an amendment under his nose?

Mr. JOHNSON. I mean to say that the gentleman prepared an amendment for me to present.

Mr. DELONG. No, sir; it was handed to me by another gentleman, and I merely asked him if it would meet his views; that was all.

Tuesday,]

JOHNSON—McCLINTON—BANKS—DELONG—STURTEVANT—CROSMAN.

[July 19.

Mr. JOHNSON. I knew of no other paternity for the amendment.

Mr. McCLINTON. I wrote it and proposed it.

Mr. JOHNSON. It matters not who may have written it; I think I can propose an amendment which will suit my views when I desire to do so. I find no fault, however, with the gentleman from Esmeralda for proposing it, or with the gentleman from Storey for asking me to accept it; but when the gentleman presses that as a reason for refusing to postpone, and makes it the basis for asking the other question—"Are gentlemen sincere in their views?"—I do find fault. I should not have thought of the matter of the amendment but for the question which followed it. The gentleman takes the ground that, because he had prepared an amendment to meet the objection raised by myself, necessarily that amendment should be received and adopted, and I should claim or accept the paternity of that amendment.

Now I do not know as it is required that on this question or any other, I should constantly disclaim a desire to discuss the point involved, or to delay the question. I only suggested the idea that such might be the effect of the section as proposed to be amended, and I think it was no more than proper that an opportunity should be afforded for investigating the matter. I do not feel authorized to speak for others. My colleagues may speak for themselves, as they are capable and well prepared to do; but I am to be placed on the record on this question, and whilst I claim no more responsibility than any other member, I believe that none other has greater responsibility than I, and claim the right, therefore, to judge and to vote upon all questions for myself. It was with that view that I asked the gentleman from Storey to postpone the consideration of the report until to-morrow, and if this had been acceded to, a long discussion would not have been necessary. At least I am sure that a greater length of time would not have been consumed upon it than has already been.

Mr. BANKS. For the purpose which the gentleman from Ormsby contemplates, I move that this report be returned to the general file. It will then, I understand, come up the first thing to-morrow, being at the head of the file. I see no better way to dispose of the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. (Mr. Collins) suggested that there was some doubt in regard to the propriety of this motion, as the Convention had taken up the report by a suspension of the rules upon a two-thirds vote.

Some discussion followed on the question of order involved.

Mr. BANKS withdrew his motion, and moved instead that the report be made the special order for to-morrow, at ten o'clock.

Mr. DELONG. I wish to say a word in explanation. The only thing which called forth from me the remark in relation to the sincerity of gentlemen was simply this, that when it was proposed to suspend the rules in order to consider the matter at this time, not a single voice was raised in objection, but after the rules had been suspended, and when the report was before the Convention, with full power to act upon it, and amend it, or adopt it without amendment, or do any thing else with it, then only the objection of want of time to examine it was raised. That was the only thing that led me to consider the question of sincerity, for it did look extraordinary, that after we had suspended the rules in order to consider the matter, gentlemen should raise the question of want of time to consider it.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Is the gentleman aware that we did not know what the report was until after the rules were suspended? It was referred to a select committee, without instructions, and we knew nothing in regard to it.

Mr. DELONG. I am not aware what the gentleman from Washoe knows.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I was not here when the proposition was first made, and it seems to me that the whole afternoon has been consumed to no purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was in the chair when the motion to suspend the rules was made, and the only opportunity I had to speak upon the subject was after I had vacated the chair, and called the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) to my place.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. Banks to postpone the subject until ten o'clock, A. M., to-morrow, and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 13; noes, 13. So the motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the report of the committee.

Mr. CROSMAN. If it is in order, I will move to amend the report of the committee, by inserting the language which was quoted here a short time ago. I am not prepared on the cursory examination I have been able to give to this subject, and with the little knowledge I have of it at the present time, to vote in favor of an amendment of that character. I am in favor of leaving the matter to the Legislature, to prescribe the oath to be taken. Let the Legislature be empowered to prescribe such an oath as they think best, but let us put it beyond cavil, so that when the matter is acted upon in the Legislature no question can be raised as to the constitutionality of such action. That seems to be the only objection, and I therefore move to amend the report by substituting in place of the proviso proposed to be stricken out, the following words:

"And the Legislature shall have power to prescribe any other or further rules or oaths, as may be deemed necessary, as a test of electoral qualification."

Mr. JOHNSON. I have had occasion to say to this Convention before—and I regret very much the necessity of again addressing the Convention on the subject—that one of the reasons why I objected to the consideration of this matter to-day was that there may be no necessity for any further amendment. Probably it is all right as it is, and if so I do not desire to insert any extraneous matter or surplusage. By taking a short time for examination we can ascertain whether this language, as reported, covers all the objections or not, and if it does we shall not require any further amendment. I hope, therefore, that the consideration of the report will be postponed, and for that purpose I move that it be made the special order for to-morrow at eleven o'clock, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and noes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I fully coincide with the remarks of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) and I have no doubt but that he will satisfy his own mind in regard to the matter; but the subject has now been discussed at least two hours, and it seems to me that there has been ample time for any examination necessary in regard to it. Now I venture to say that if it is postponed until to-morrow it will take up an hour or two then, and a majority of the Convention will not at that time have examined the report, nor the amendment which may be offered by the gentleman from Ormsby.

Mr. FRIZELL. I heartily concur in the remarks of my friend from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) because it is a very important question, and I desire that every member may satisfy his mind upon it. As to my own views, as I said on a former occasion, I honestly think that the matter should be placed in the hands of the Legislature. But I am not a very able and thorough constitutional lawyer, and I have heard views advanced here to-day by my friend from Ormsby, which I think ought to be investigated. If the Legislature would be prevented or inhibited by this section, as amended, from passing a law prescribing this oath, although I have been one of the most ardent friends of leaving the whole matter to the Legislature, yet I would certainly prefer to allow the oath to remain in the fundamental law. For that reason I hope that this motion of the gentleman from Ormsby will prevail, and that we shall all take time to consider this important question.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to make an explanation of my vote, as gentlemen with whom I have had some conversation might otherwise think it very strange that I should vote against putting this matter over. It will be remembered that I contended, at the time this oath was inserted, that it was altogether unnecessary, and that by the plain reading of the Constitution the matter was left in the hands of the Legislature. I considered it so at the time, but in the face of statements made here to-day by very reliable gentlemen, upon whose legal opinions I for one should certainly be willing to trust an important suit at law, to say the least, I am not prepared to say there is no doubt on the subject. Gentlemen who know, or who certainly ought to, and I believe do know a great deal more about this matter than I do, differ in regard to the power of the Legislature to prescribe an oath of this kind. Therefore I say, if there is reasonable room to doubt whether any Legislature, acting under this Constitution, would be empowered, by any provision of the Constitution here, to enact a law which would prevent persons from voting who are disqualified from the exercise of that right by Section 2 of this Article, then certainly I am in favor of giving the matter a more rigid examination.

Mr. DELONG. Has the gentleman, or anybody here, any doubt, or can he have any doubt, that if this amendment now proposed is adopted the Legislature will have that power?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I certainly do not doubt it, but I see no reason to satisfy my mind why it should not be further considered. The question is an important one, and as to occupying time I am as much opposed to that as anybody, because I am as poor certainly as any other member.

Mr. WETHERILL. Now if this subject is put over, it will probably consume another day. There has been already a long debate upon it, and I think every gentleman's mind is fully and entirely made up. There is a doubt here, but it can be removed without any further discussion, on this floor or elsewhere, by a simple amendment lodging with the Legislature the power, beyond any question, of prescribing rules and regulations for voting. I want to leave that power with the Legislature beyond the possibility of a doubt, but I would like to have the question decided at once, and not be left to consume to-morrow, and perhaps another day besides.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the motion of Mr. Johnson to postpone the report until to-morrow at eleven o'clock, and the vote was—yeas, 14; nays, 15—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Crawford, Frizell, Folsom, Haines, Hawley, Kinkead, Lockwood, Murdock, Proctor, Sturtevant, Warwick, and Mr. President—14.

Nays—Messrs. Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Parker, Tagliabue, and Wetherill—15.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Crosman.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to state my position upon this matter, without going into any argument. As between the proposition of leaving this unrestricted and dangerous power in the hands of the Legislature, and that of the insertion of the oath in the fundamental law, I shall vote for retaining the oath in the Constitution. I do not want to place such a dangerous power in the hands of a majority of the Legislature as to allow them to prescribe such an oath as their prejudices or passions may happen at the time to dictate, and therefore I prefer to allow the oath to remain in the Constitution, and shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. FRIZELL. As there have been but two reasons as yet advanced why this amendment should not be adopted, one by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) and the other by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,)

Tuesday,]

FRIZELL—KINKEAD—HAINES.

[July 19.

who has just taken his seat, I beg leave to say that I differ entirely from both those gentlemen. Inasmuch as ours is a representative form of government, the people electing their own representatives every year, or every two years, and those representatives, thus chosen, coming up to the Capital to represent in the Legislature the interests, and feelings, and political sentiments of the people, I do think that this question, when it is placed in their hands beyond a doubt, beyond all peradventure, is placed exactly where it should be, and therefore I differ diametrically from my friend from Humboldt.

So far as the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) is concerned, his objection was that the language employed might be mere surplusage. Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that all who heard the amendment read must admit that it is direct, concise, and perfect in its construction and meaning, and therefore no man can say that it can by any possibility be construed as surplusage. Again, as has been said, under our present circumstances the passions of men are, as it were, like a furnace seven times heated. Human nature, sir, is different and varied in its forms of manifestation. There are some men who, upon occasions, or under circumstances like those which now surround us, and which may surround us hereafter, act very differently from other men in like circumstances. I impeach no man's motives; nothing could be further from me, I hope, than that. But I do say that under present circumstances, any man who cherishes sentiments of patriotism, truth and loyal conservatism, any man who has been reared under the Constitution and Government of the United States, may manifest his true and loyal sentiments without going to these extremes. In order to be a patriot, and a true man, he need not ride on the crest of the wave, and tear the American eagle all to pieces, not leaving so much as a feather of that national bird. He need not, on the one hand, like the gentleman from Ormsby, be so very much afraid of his constituency, or on the other hand, like my friend from Lander, who took that old man by the hand, go into patriotic paroxysms. No doubt that was a good old man. I hope so, certainly; and I hope he will live to see his country free, enlightened, contented, and prosperous.

But I say there is another class of men whom it would be well to look after and control, when the great waves of passion are surging, and boiling, and seething, and driving us God knows where—it may be toward the rocks and breakers of destruction—I say it is the duty of men who are cool, if they think there is danger, to guide and direct those waves and storms, and hold in check the turbulent passions of men. They should not get up, under such circumstances, in a deliberative body like this, and seek to inflame men's passions. Why, sir, gentlemen would make you believe here that all the past history of the United States goes for nothing. I would like to know if the Constitution of the United States, which is a simple, concise document, does not govern us, and if we are not bound also by the act of Congress under which we are framing the fundamental law of this State?

Now if I have been in anywise harsh in these remarks, I can only say that I regret it, for I have not intended to reflect on any man. But these are my views. I am not willing to come here and sit three weeks, expending my money and taxing my brains, and then have it all go for nothing, on account of this little question of expediency, which I do believe is entirely correct and not violative of any principle. The question which arises here, is merely this: There are probably from fifteen hundred to two thousand voters in this Territory, the great majority of whom are true and loyal men, although they may have been in the State of Missouri, or the State of Kentucky, or some other of the border States, at some stage of this rebellion, and may have had muskets on their shoulders and fought on the side of the rebellion against the Federal Government. Nevertheless, those men are in the main loyal men, although they adhere to old names, old principles, and old tenets. The name of "Democracy" is dear to them. They think this oath should not appear in the Constitution, and nevertheless they are loyal men. Now if you call it a question of expediency, I will admit it to that extent; but we provide that the Legislature can enact that provision, and I have no doubt that they can and will do it. I do admit, because I always endeavor to speak my true sentiments, that it is to a certain extent a question of expediency; but do gentlemen doubt the loyalty of the Legislature which is to be elected? Look at the Union resolutions which were adopted by our last Territorial Legislature. In the sterling patriotism of their language they are equal to almost any State paper ever put forth in the United States. I have read them time and again, and think them perfectly beautiful. What reason, then, have gentlemen to doubt that the incoming Legislature will be equally patriotic and loyal? I think we ought to adopt this amendment, and leave this matter entirely to the Legislature.

Mr. KINKEAD. I ask that the section may be read as it will stand, if the amendment is adopted.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

SEC. 7. Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the counties of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment by proper proofs of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage as thereby established, to preserve the purity of elections, and to regulate the manner of holding and making returns of the same; and the Legislature shall have power to prescribe any other or further rules or oaths, as may be deemed necessary, as a test of electoral qualification.

Mr. HAINES. I want to ask if it is necessary to inform the Legislature that they have the power to prescribe any such oath? Or does it make it in any way binding upon them by our adding that last amendment? If they have the power, is it necessary for us to say so?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman has heard the amendment discussed, and must judge for himself. The Chair cannot be called upon to give an opinion.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment proposed by Mr. Crosman, and the vote was—yeas, 19; nays, 10—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Earl, Frizell, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Proctor, Tagliabue, Wetherill, and Mr. President—19.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Crawford, Dunne, Folsom, Haines, Kinkead, Lockwood, Sturtevant, and Warwick—10.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BROSAN. I move the adoption of the report as amended.

Mr. DUNNE. I did not wish to interrupt the calling of the roll by an explanation of my vote, but with the leave of the Convention I will make it now. I am opposed to the amendment, because I am opposed to leaving so important a question to the conflicting tides of legislation. I am opposed to it, also, on the ground of policy. It looks too much like setting a trap. I do not suppose it is necessary for me to say—as some gentlemen have been in the habit of saying—that I do not intend to reflect on any gentlemen, but as that seems to be the general practice, I will disavow any such intention. I say it looks to me too much like saying to men of a certain class that we will strike out this provision, in order to get all the votes we can, and after we get their votes we will, in the Legislature, pass whatever provision we please. I am opposed to it on that ground; and if the amendment should prevail, I would prefer to take the whole thing out of the Constitution altogether. I should prefer to see it left in that way, rather than with an amendment of this sort, leaving the power in the hands of the Legislature to make any tests they please. I would prefer to leave it so that no new tests can be made in the future, but that every man whose name is registered shall be required to take an oath of allegiance. If that is provided in the Constitution, and any men or set of men shall in the future desire to get it out, they can only do so by an amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. FRIZELL. I would like to have an opportunity to explain my vote. I am opposed again, diametrically, to the other gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne.) A very wise and great orator of Athens once said—"Observe, I beseech you, oh Athenians, how different your conduct appears from that of your ancestors." Now Americans, in these latter days, have grown very wise and statesmanlike. Heretofore, until the present year, Americans all over this broad republic were extremely jealous, and held it as an inalienable principle that in fundamental laws only certain bold landmarks should be set up, and all the details affecting the particular interests of the people should be left to the Legislature. But in these latter days men have grown more wise, and insist that everything which suits their peculiar views shall be put into the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair will suggest to the gentlemen that the proper time to explain his vote is when his name is called.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the report as amended.

Mr. DUNNE. I call for a division of the question. There are some amendments which we may all vote for, and I want a separate vote upon each amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. said a division of the question having been called for, the first question would be upon the amendment to Section 4, striking out the words "absent from this State," so as to read—"The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same, who may be in the military or naval service of the United States," etc.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not wish for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The question was stated on the adoption of the second amendment—to strike out, in the same section, the words "for officers of a lower grade than State officers," so as to read—"Provided, the votes so cast shall be made to apply to the county and township of which the said voters were bona fide residents," etc.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. said the question would next be upon the adoption of the several amendments as a whole, the third amendment having already been amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman.)

Mr. DELONG said he understood that the question now was on the adoption of that section as amended on motion of Mr. Crosman.

Mr. JOHNSON. The question, as I understand it, is now on the report of the committee as amended. A division was called for, and the first and second amendments were acted upon. It occurs to me that the vote having been taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) the question now is on the section as reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair will so decide.

Mr. DUNNE. I certainly do not understand it so.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the report of the committee.

Mr. BANKS. As the question is now presented, I certainly do not understand it. I understand that the report was amended, and that a division was called for. We then voted on two of the propositions embraced in the report, and they were adopted, and now we are to vote on the third.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. No, sir; we have

Tuesday,]

voted on the third, and now we are about to take the vote on all the propositions as a whole, each proposition having been adopted separately.

Mr. DUNNE. I have been waiting for the question on striking out the proviso in Section 7. Those who wish that part of the section to remain, have the privilege of amending it first, so as to make it as perfect as possible; and I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosman) to have been made for the purpose of perfecting the section, before voting on the proposition to strike out. With that understanding, I call for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is no question presented as to striking out. It was simply an amendment to Section 7. A division of the question has been had, and the question comes now upon agreeing to the report as a whole.

Mr. BANKS. But the gentleman from Douglas (Mr. Hawley) calls for the yeas and nays on the last amendment. I certainly understood that the vote was to be taken next on that, and I was waiting for that vote.

Further discussion took place relating to questions of order.

Mr. DUNNE. In order to get to a direct vote on striking out the oath from Section 7, I will move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by Mr. Crosman was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Did the gentleman vote with the majority?

Mr. DUNNE. I really do not know; the question was so mixed. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I voted "aye," and I move the reconsideration.

The question was taken on the motion to reconsider, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the report, as amended, and the vote being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas, 17; nays, 12—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Earl, Frizell, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Tagliabue, Wetherill, and Mr. President—17.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Crawford, Dunne, Folsom, Haines, Hawley, Kinhead, Lockwood, Proctor, Sturtevant, and Warwick—12.

So the report was adopted.

During the voting—

Mr. HAWLEY. For substantially the same reasons which have been given by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) I shall vote "no." I believe in taking no step backward, and I will never consent to emasculate this instrument in the manner proposed by the report of the committee.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I shall vote "no" on this amendment for the reason that I do not believe in throwing out any inducements to gain the copperhead influence, even though we needed help ever so badly.

[The PRESIDENT in the chair.]

The result of the vote having been announced, as above stated—

The question was stated to be on the third reading and passage of the article, as amended.

The SECRETARY read the article, as follows:

ARTICLE II.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 1. Every white male citizen of the United States (not laboring under the disabilities named in this Constitution,) of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have actually resided in the State six months, and in the district or county thirty days next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are or may hereafter be elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors at such election.

SEC. 2. No person who has been or may be convicted of treason or felony, in any State or Territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and no person who, after arriving at the age of eighteen years, shall have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted to such by the Federal Government, and no idiot or insane person shall be entitled to the privilege of an elector.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student of any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum at public expense; nor while confined in any public prison.

SEC. 4. The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same who may be in the military or naval service of the United States; provided, the votes so cast shall be made to apply to the county and township of which said voters were bona fide residents at the time of their enlistment; and provided that the payment of a poll tax or a registration of such a vote shall not be required as a condition to the right of voting. Provision shall be made by law, regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such elections, wherein other provisions are not contained in this Constitution.

SEC. 5. During the day on which any general election shall be held in this State, no qualified elector shall be arrested by virtue of any civil process.

SEC. 6. All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and all elections by the Legislature, or by either branch thereof, shall be viva voce.

SEC. 7. Provision shall be made by law for the registration of the names of the electors within the counties of which they may be residents, and for the ascertainment by proper proofs of the persons who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage as thereby established, to preserve the purity of elections, and to regulate the manner of holding and making returns of the same, and the Legislature shall have power to prescribe any other or further rules or oaths, as may be deemed necessary, as a test of electoral qualification.

SEC. 8. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll tax of not less than two, nor exceeding four dollars, from each male person resident in the State, between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years, (uncivilized American Indians excepted,) one half to be applied for State, and one half for county purposes; and the Legislature may, in its discretion, make such payment a condition to the right of voting.

SEC. 9. All persons qualified by law to vote for Representatives to the General Assembly of the Territory of Nevada, on the 21st day of March, A. D. 1864, and all other persons who may be lawful voters in said Territory, on the first Wednesday of September, next following, shall be entitled to vote directly upon the question of adopting or rejecting this Constitution.

Tuesday.] McClINTON—PROCTOR—WARWICK—HAWLEY—STURTEVANT—BANKS. [July 19.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the Article, and the vote was—yeas, 25; nays, 4—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Earl, Frizell, Folsom, Haines, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Parker, Tagliabue, Wetherill, and Mr. President—25.

Nays—Messrs. Dunne, Proctor, Sturtevant, and Warwick—4.

So the article was passed.

During the voting—

Mr. DUNNE. I shall vote “no” for the same reasons which I gave in regard to the amendment.

Mr. McClINTON. I did not avail myself of the opportunity to explain my vote upon the passage of this amendment, but I will do so now. I shall vote “aye” for the reason which I have stated frequently in this Convention—that I do believe that, from the commencement of our session, we have arrogated to ourselves too much power. We have incorporated many provisions already, in this Constitution, which I think belong properly to the Legislature. I will state further, too, that I should have voted against striking out this oath had not the provision been amended so as to meet what I deem the necessities of the case. But the provision as it now stands meets my approbation. Had not the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosman) been adopted I should have voted “no,” but as it now stands I vote “aye.”

Mr. PROCTOR. I vote against the article because I do not like it, nor any part of it. I vote “no.”

Mr. WARWICK. I desire to be excused from voting on this question, for the following reasons: It is well known to most of the members of the Convention that when it was sought to incorporate this oath it met with my approval, and I advocated it warmly. Now I have seen no reason since to change my opinion, and when the amendment was proposed I opposed it, as I oppose it now. And therefore, not desiring to have that oath stricken out, and looking upon the measure as a compromise, and one which I cannot sanction, yet not wishing to offer any factious opposition, I wish to be excused from voting.

Mr. DeLONG. I object to his being excused.

Mr. WARWICK. Then I vote “no.”

Mr. HAWLEY. I have voted in the negative, but I would like to have my vote changed from “no” to “aye,” because I do not want it to go on the record that I vote against this article. Although I protest against the action of the Convention, still I will vote in favor of the article. I vote “aye.”

Mr. STURTEVANT. I voted “aye,” but I do not like to see the other side left entirely alone, and I will vote “no.”

The result of the vote was then announced, as above stated.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The Convention resumed consideration of Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations, the question being upon the amendment offered by Mr. Kinkead, to substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. Crosman, the following as the proviso in Section 9:

“Provided, That the State may issue bonds bearing a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, to an amount not exceeding one and one half millions of dollars, or guarantee the payment of interest or principal, or both interest and principal, of bonds to the said amount, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company or incorporation that shall first connect by a first class railroad the city of Virginia with the main range of the Sierra Nevada Mountains.”

Mr. BANKS. After the elaborate discussion which has been had upon this proposition, and matters generally pertaining to the Pacific Railroad, I do not propose to do more than simply state the reasons, by way of explaining my vote, why I shall vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Kinkead,) and in favor of the amendment of which notice has been given by the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick.)

Uniformly, through the sitting of this Convention, I have voted in favor of granting aid to the grand work of this age, the Pacific Railroad, in the construction of that work across the Sierra Nevada Mountains, where such aid is absolutely demanded, and where, without aid, I fear no road like this will be constructed. The proposition of the gentleman from Ormsby is to lend the aid of the State in constructing what is purely a local work; one that will not materially benefit all parts of the State, and to which, if aid must be given, the counties interested should come to the rescue and advance that aid. Now I can conceive how the mines in all parts of the State will be benefited by the construction of a railroad connecting the State with the navigable waters of the Sacramento River, but I do not see how Humboldt County, or Esmeralda County, or Lander County, and other remote counties, are likely to be much benefited by such a measure as lending the aid of the State to the amount of a million and a half of dollars in aid of a road which will be nearly parallel to the Sierra Nevada Mountains. If aid is desired for a local work of this kind, for it will be almost entirely for the local convenience and profit of the counties in which the road is situated, I will most heartily advocate any proposition to authorize the counties interested to lend their aid. But I do not believe that the people of the distant parts of the Territory—and other gentlemen I think entertain the same views in that particular—are willing to lend their aid to a work which by no manner of reasoning can be shown to be of general usefulness to the people of the entire State. I hope therefore that the proposition of the gentleman from Ormsby will be voted down, and I hope he will reserve it for

DELONG—PROCTOR—WARWICK—PRESIDENT—CROSMAN.

some measure involving the question of county or corporate aid, and if the people of this city and Virginia, or the people of Storey, Ormsby and Washoe counties, desire it, I trust they will have ample power, under this Constitution, to contribute whatever amount of means they are able to spare for such a purpose. As to the proposition of the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) as it has been stated by him, it is one which in the main does not meet my entire approbation, because in practical efficiency I do not believe it comes up to what is actually required; but in preference to anything else which is before the Convention I shall vote for it, and I think possibly it may do much good.

Mr. DELONG. Now I think that argument is about as baseless as that of the old Dutchman in New York, who, when the proposition was laid before him to aid in constructing the Erie Canal, voted against it because the canal did not run by his own house. We cannot run a railroad to every portion of the State, but if we connect the mines with the mountains, so as to convey lumber to the mining regions and ore to the mountains, it will enhance the value of property so much that taxation will bear far less heavily on the people of the distant counties, and thus we shall be enabled in time to extend the railroad gradually to those distant portions of the State to which the gentleman refers.

Now one word to my "cow county" friends—and I would call the particular attention of the gentleman from Douglas, (Mr. Hawley,) but I observe that he has gone out of doors and cannot hear me—I wish to say, nevertheless, that we have been accused of being particularly and peculiarly the representatives of the miners. We have been charged with having first secured the passage of this mining clause, and then having attempted to appropriate three millions of dollars to the Pacific Railroad. They say we first go to work and provide in the Constitution that the mines shall not be taxed, and then we turn around and favor this donation to the Pacific Railroad, thereby voting to impose all the burden of taxation upon the farming interest. They complain of this, and tell us it is all a trick; that we first vote out the Pacific Railroad in order to be able to vote out the taxation of the mines, and then, having got our own axe ground, we turn around and put in the three million clause again. Now I will show these gentlemen my own good faith in that matter, by voting upon these propositions according to the wishes of the cow county delegates. I do believe that the appropriation of a million and a half of dollars will cause a railroad to be built from Virginia City to this place, and thence down to the Truckee country; and that when that is done, it will enhance the value of the property of the State to a degree scarcely imagined at the present time. And Esmeralda and Humboldt Counties, though they might not feel it as immediately as Storey and Ormsby Counties, would yet feel it in a very great degree, and find it a benefit which would far more than compensate them for the amount which they would have to be taxed in order to bring about that result. But if the "cow counties" vote against it, I will vote against it also, if it is their wish, so as to show them that I have not got the words "mines and mining claims" stricken out of the taxation clause in order to trick them, or with any view of afterwards putting in a railroad appropriation.

Mr. PROCTOR. Is an amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT. An amendment to an amendment is already pending.

Mr. WARWICK. I call for the reading of the amendment now before the Convention.

The SECRETARY again read Mr. Kinkead's amendment.

Mr. WARWICK. If I understand the question rightly, Mr. President, this amendment is offered by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) who accepted in lieu of his own, the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The Chair will state the position of the question. The original amendment was presented while I was not present, but I am informed by the Secretary that the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) accepted an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) and that must necessarily be regarded as the original amendment. To this the gentlemen from Ormsby, (Mr. Kinkead,) offers an amendment, and the question now is on the amendment proposed to the original amendment, that which was offered by the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) taking the place of the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman.)

Mr. CROSMAN. I would ask for the reading of my amendment as it now stands.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

"Provided, That the State of Nevada may loan its credit to the Central Pacific Railroad Company to an amount not exceeding three millions of dollars when it shall have completed its road to a distance of eighty miles east from the navigable waters of the Sacramento River; but no appropriation of any character shall be made, unless sanctioned by a vote of the people."

The PRESIDENT. This, as just read, is the original amendment, and to it the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Kinkead,) moves to amend by substituting the following:

"Provided, That the State may issue bonds bearing a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, to an amount not exceeding one and one half millions of dollars, or guarantee the payment of interest or principal, or both interest and principal, of bonds to the said amount, on such terms as the Legislature may prescribe, to the company or incorporation that shall first connect by a first-class railroad the City of Virginia with the main range of the Sierra Nevada mountains."

Mr. WARWICK. When I offered my amendment yesterday afternoon, I did so with an earnest desire that some compromise might be arrived at on this railroad question, by which the hands of the people would not be tied in the future, but that the people of the new State,

Tuesday.]

DELONG—WARWICK—KINKEAD.

if they should feel themselves able, might at some future time be at liberty to lend their credit towards the construction of this great national work. Every step towards affecting this object which has been taken by me, has been taken in a spirit of compromise. It has been my earnest desire, in view of the fact that this work receives the sanction of the entire United States, and that it appears to have been the earnest desire of every member on the floor of this Convention, to signify the fact that he is not an enemy to the project, to so far perfect or amend this proviso, if you please, as to bring it within such limits, or into such a shape, that it may receive the sanction of a majority of this Convention. It was in that spirit that I drew up the amendment which I did this morning, proposing to offer it as a substitute for the one I offered yesterday. But I saw that it gave offense to some members of the Convention, to nominate particularly the Central Pacific Railroad, for some reason best known to themselves; and seeing that it did appear to give offense to a certain portion of the members of the Convention, I therefore, acting still in the spirit of compromise, as I stated before, was induced to offer another amendment, striking out that obnoxious portion, and leaving it simply to specify only a railroad enterprise or enterprises. I prepared this amendment, which I will read again with the leave of the Convention:

“Provided, That the State may loan its credit to an amount not to exceed three millions of dollars for the encouragement of railroad enterprises; the manner of providing for the payment of the above sum to be left to the Legislature. But no appropriation shall be made unless sanctioned by a vote of the people at a special election to be held for that purpose, nor until after the taxable property of the State shall have reached the amount of fifty millions of dollars.”

That was the proposition which I advanced this morning. I put in that last clause, because some gentlemen had spoken of our present poverty, and argued our inability to render that assistance which every one expressed his willingness to render. Our taxable property is now, I believe, a little over twenty-five millions of dollars, and before this proposition can possibly apply, the taxable property of the State must be doubled. Therefore, in that way, I remove the very strong barrier, which some gentlemen have placed in the way of lending our aid to this important enterprise.

Mr. DELONG. If the gentleman will allow me, the taxable property of the State is forty-three millions now.

Mr. WARWICK. Is that the case? I will ask our Treasurer, the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Kinkead,) if that was the basis of taxation last year?

Mr. KINKEAD. I presume the gentleman from Storey refers to the gross proceeds of the mines. That is yet to come.

Mr. WARWICK. That is the precise position—not a prospective, but a present benefit. I mean by this amendment, not what will be, but what has been. The amendment provides that the appropriation shall not be made “until after the taxable property of the State shall have reached the amount of fifty millions of dollars.”

Mr. DELONG. That is what it is, very nearly; I am speaking of what it is now.

Mr. WARWICK. But they collected last year on less than forty millions of dollars.

Mr. DELONG. But the tax has been held legal on the whole amount. If it was not collected, it was not the fault of the law. It was assessed, and on appeal, the Supreme Court has affirmed the legality of the assessment.

Mr. KINKEAD. I think the gentleman is a little wrong in the amount; he is about five millions out of the way, I believe.

Mr. DELONG. I am not speaking of what was assessed, but of what was liable to assessment.

Mr. KINKEAD. To take what was assessed, is the only way to get at it.

Mr. WARWICK. Very well; I would like to know, then, if I insert here—because I want to see gentlemen show their hands—

The PRESIDENT [interrupting.] The only question before the Convention occurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lyon, modified on the suggestion of the gentleman from Lander, and to which another amendment is proposed, as a substitute, by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Kinkead.) The gentleman from Lander is at liberty, of course, to read the amendment, which he now proposes, for the information of the Convention, but not to discuss it.

Mr. WARWICK. I would inquire if it is not competent for any member to state his reasons for not sustaining the pending amendment? Can I not give my reasons why we should not attempt to provide for a road connecting with Virginia City?

The PRESIDENT. It is not competent for the gentleman to discuss the proposition which he holds in his hand, because it would not be in order to submit it to the Convention.

Mr. WARWICK. Then I will address myself to the proposition to grant aid to a railroad from here to Virginia City. Now, sir, I contend that it would be impossible to construct that road, or at least it would be a moral impossibility, and a financial impossibility, as it must appear to every one here upon reflection. The reason is that it is impossible to get the materials here except at such a cost as to render it impossible to raise the necessary funds for the construction of the road, especially when we consider the high rates of interest in this State.

Mr. KINKEAD. Has the gentleman made any calculation or estimates upon the cost of the materials, and the cost of getting them here by the wagon roads?

Mr. WARWICK. I suppose the iron will cost three cents a pound, to bring it here from Sacramento. But then, again, the iron is not the only material to be furnished. All of your rolling stock will have to be transported in the same expensive way. The consequence, is that if you attempt to build a first-class railroad here, with "T" iron, you will find it one of the most extravagantly expensive roads ever built in the United States of America.

Mr. PROCTOR. I rise to a question of order. I believe the gentleman from Lander has occupied some fifteen or twenty minutes in all, in discussing this same question heretofore, and he has occupied about ten minutes now. We are approaching the time of adjournment, very nearly, or I would not have raised the point of order.

The PRESIDENT. The question of order is not well taken. Although the gentleman may have exceeded the allotted period of fifteen minutes the first time he spoke on this question, yet the rule only restricts him to not more than fifteen minutes at any one time.

Mr. WARWICK. As there is only a brief time, I will give way for any farther business.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that when this Convention adjourn, it adjourn until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARWICK. I believe the Convention is already in possession of my views on this subject, and I am quite willing to come to a vote without any further remarks upon it.

Mr. KENNEDY. In order that we may reach a final vote on this question, I move that the time of adjournment be extended until half-past five o'clock.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. And in order that we may come to a vote on this question, I move the previous question, and I do so because each member is allowed, according to the ruling of the Chair, to explain his vote, under the previous question, and that will take up the entire half hour.

The question was taken—"Shall the main question be now put?"—and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 14; noes, 14. So the previous question was not sustained.

The PRESIDENT stated the question to be first upon the amendment offered by Mr. Kinkead, which was read again by the Secretary.

Mr. CROSMAN. If that amendment is adopted, what will be the condition of the section?

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen must judge for themselves the effect of the amendment.

Mr. CROSMAN. Well, sir, I say that one effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby, would be to provide that the Legislature may make this appropriation without submitting the matter to the people. A simple act of the Legislature, under that amendment, would absolutely donate a million and a half of dollars, without submitting it to the people at all.

Mr. KENNEDY and others demanded the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 8; nays, 21—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Brady, Crawford, Earl, Folsom, Hawley, Kinkead, Parker, and Mr. President—8.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Frizell, Haines, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, and Wetherill—21.

So the amendment proposed by Mr. Kinkead was not agreed to.

During the voting—

Mr. DELONG. I wish to be excused, until I see how the cow counties go.

Mr. HAINES. I wish to explain my vote. I shall vote "no," from the fact that, as I have stated here before, I am opposed to bankrupting this new State for the benefit of any railroad, except it may be for such a one as shall first reach our boundaries in running order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I will wait a while before I vote.

Mr. DELONG. I hope not; I want instructions from these gentlemen, as to how I shall vote.

Mr. COLLINS. Inasmuch as the benefit from this road would be confined to a few counties, I will vote "no."

Messrs. Hawley, Sturtevant, and DeLong, then had their names recorded as given above.

The result of the vote having been announced, as above stated—

The PRESIDENT said the question recurred upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) as it had been modified.

Mr. HAINES. I have an amendment to offer. I propose to amend the proviso by adding the following:

"And further provided, that no portion of any such appropriation shall be expended for the construction or equipment of a railroad outside of the limits of this State."

Mr. DELONG. I have only to say in regard to that amendment, that the Hon. Leland Stanford, President of the Pacific Railroad Company, has stated on this floor that when that Pacific Railroad shall reach the confines of this State, they will not want anything—that the appropriations of the General Government will then be sufficient to enable them, with the addition of the proceeds from the earnings of the road, to extend the road as rapidly as it can be built through this State, without any aid from the State, and they would not want any such aid.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. And he stated still further, that he spurned the offer which had been made, if coupled with the proviso that the aid was to be given to the first road which should reach the State line. I was very particular to note that carefully, and I wrote it down exactly as he stated it. I was very particular about it, and covered a whole sheet of foolscap with my notes. The question was asked if he would rather be let alone than to have the munificent offer stand, which had been made to his company, coupled with the fact that it was made with that proviso, and he said he would rather the offer should not be made at all. Now I hope that fact will be kept before the Convention.

Mr. McClINTON. I believe it is generally conceded by gentlemen on this floor that we are not able now to give anything in aid of the Central Pacific Railroad, or any other railroad whatever. I do not believe that we shall be able to give anything before that railroad will reach the State line, with the means it has already at its command; and if the Central Pacific Railroad does not want us to help it afterwards, I shall be very glad of it, because I do not want to give it anything, any way, while we are in our present financial condition.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Haines, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. Crosman.

Mr. HOVEY asked that it be read again, and it was read by the Secretary.

Mr. HAINES. I cannot possibly vote for that proviso. Why, sir, it seems to me as if gentlemen were crazy and wild, when they cast their votes for a proviso like that, and if we do vote for it we shall regret it a thousand times. I venture to say that if this aid is granted it will all be consumed before the Pacific Railroad ever reaches the summit, and I know that every member here will regret that he ever gave his vote in favor of granting aid to that road before the time of its reaching the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

Mr. FITCH. If the gentleman from Lyon will accept it, I would like to have the rate of interest restricted there, so as not to exceed seven per cent. per annum. I will move, if the gentleman will accept it, to insert these words, in their proper place—"at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum."

Mr. CROSMAN. I accept it, and I wish to say, while I have the floor, that I hope the members of the Convention will keep in view the fact that we are not by this proposition voting any money to any railroad. We are simply reserving this right to the people, as one of their reserved rights, and the question is not upon making the appropriation at all. After the representations which we have heard here on the subject, if I were in the Legislature, and the question were to come up now, I should certainly vote against it. I hope gentlemen will also keep in view the fact that it is provided that the road must reach within twenty-four miles of the summit before any aid can be granted.

Mr. HAINES. Then the assistance granted would not exceed one quarter of the amount appropriated, because they would sell the bonds for not more than twenty cents on the dollar, and it would all be expended outside of this State. It seems to me that gentlemen are voting in favor of a wild-cat financial scheme, when they vote for this amendment, because it is almost impossible now to raise a dollar on our bonds.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon Mr. Crosman's amendment, as finally modified, and the vote was—yeas, 6; nays, 23—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Crosman, Fitch, Frizell, Hovey, and Warwick—6.

Nays—Messrs. Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Folsom, Haines, Hawley, Hudson, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Wetherill, and Mr. President—23.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DELONG. I believe the question now recurs upon the passage of the article, and I move that the reading of the entire article be dispensed with, and that it be read by title.

Mr. McClINTON. If the article passes as it now is before the Convention, will or will not this entire proviso in Section 9 be left out?

The PRESIDENT. That proviso has heretofore been stricken out by the action of the Convention.

The question was taken on the motion by Mr. DeLong, to dispense with the reading of the article in full, and it was agreed to.

The question was stated on the final passage of the article.

Mr. EARL. Is an amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir; it is too late now.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the article, which, as previously amended, read as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

MUNICIPAL AND OTHER CORPORATIONS.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall pass no special act in any manner relating to corporate powers, except for municipal purposes; but corporations may be formed under general laws; and all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed.

SEC. 2. All real property and possessory rights to the same, as well as personal property in this State, belonging to corporations, now existing or hereafter created, shall be subject to taxation the same as property of individuals; provided, that the property of corporations formed for municipal, charitable, religious, or educational purposes may be exempted by law.

SEC. 3. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law; provided, that corporators in corporations formed under the laws of this State shall not be individually liable for the debts or liabilities of such corporations.

SEC. 4. Corporations created by or under the laws of the Territory of Nevada shall be subject to the provisions of such laws until the Legislature shall pass laws regulating the same, in pursuance of the provisions of this Constitution.

SEC. 5. Corporations may sue and be sued in all Courts, in like cases as individuals.

SEC. 6. No bank notes or paper of any kind shall ever be permitted to circulate as money in this State, except the Federal currency and the notes of banks authorized under the laws of Congress.

SEC. 7. No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation, until full compensation be first made or secured therefor.

Tuesday.]

DeLONG—STURTEVANT.

[July 19.]

SEC. 8. The Legislature shall provide for the organization of cities and towns by general laws, and restrict their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit, except for procuring supplies of water.

SEC. 9. The State shall not donate or loan money or its credit, subscribe to or be interested in the stock of any company, association, or corporation, except corporations formed for educational or charitable purposes.

SEC. 10. No county, city, town, or other municipal corporation shall become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever, or loan its credit in aid of any such company, corporation, or association, except railroad corporations, companies, or associations.

The result of the vote was—yeas, 26; nays, 2—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Fitch, Frizell, Folsom, Haines, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Parker, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Wetherill, and Mr. President—26.

Nays—Messrs. Earl and Warwick—2.

So the article was passed.

FINANCE AND STATE DEBT.

Mr. DeLONG. It will be necessary now, having stricken out this railroad appropriation from Article VIII, to amend Article IX. In Section 3 of that article occurs this language:

“Provided, that the further amount of indebtedness authorized by Article VIII, of this Constitution, shall be deemed legal and valid whenever said debt shall be incurred in accordance with the provisions therein expressed; and said debts shall be separate and independent of the State debt herein provided for.”

I move to recommit Section 3 of Article IX, to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to strike out the entire proviso which I have read.

The PRESIDENT. Before the motion can be entertained, it will first be necessary to get the article before the Convention.

Mr. DeLONG. I move, then, to take it from the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DeLONG. Now I move to recommit Section 3 to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to strike out all that portion which I have read.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

On motion of Mr. DeLONG, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the chair,) for the consideration of Section 3, of Article IX, which had been referred to the committee, with special instructions.

Mr. DeLONG. I now move that the Committee of the Whole rise and report the section back to the Convention, and further report that we have stricken out the proviso legalizing the aid to the Pacific Railroad, in accordance with the special instructions of the Convention.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Secretary reported that the Committee of the Whole had, in accordance with the instructions of the Convention, amended Section 3, of Article IX, by striking out the proviso therein contained.

The amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole, was agreed to.

The question being on the third reading and final passage of Article IX, as amended, it was read by the Secretary, as follows:

ARTICLE IX.

FINANCE AND STATE DEBT.

SECTION 1. The fiscal year shall commence January 1st.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for an annual tax sufficient to defray the estimated expenses of the State for each fiscal year; and whenever the expenses of any year shall exceed the income, the Legislature shall provide for levying a tax sufficient with other sources of income to pay the deficiency, as well as the estimated expenses of such ensuing year or two years.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of enabling the State to transact its business upon a cash basis, from its organization, the State may contract public debts; but such debts shall never in the aggregate, exclusive of interest, exceed the sum of three hundred thousand dollars, except for the purpose of defraying expenses, as hereinafter mentioned. Every such debt shall be authorized by law for some purpose or purposes, to be distinctly specified therein, and every such law shall provide for levying an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest semi-annually, and the principal within twenty years from the passage of such law, and shall specially appropriate the proceeds of said taxes to the payment of said principal and interest; and such appropriation shall not be repealed, nor the taxes be postponed or diminished until the principal and interest of said debts shall have been wholly paid. Every contract of indebtedness entered into or assumed by or on behalf of the State, when all its debts and liabilities amount to said sum before mentioned, shall be void and of no effect, except in cases of money borrowed to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, defend the State in time of war, or if hostilities be threatened, provide for the public defense.

SEC. 4. The State shall never assume the debts of any county, town, city, or other corporation whatever, unless such debts have been created to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or to provide for the public defense.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the article, and the vote was—yeas, 26; nays, none—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, Brady, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Earl, Fitch, Frizell, Folsom, Haines, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Wetherill, and Mr. President—26.

Nays—None.

So the article was passed.

TAXATION.

The Convention resumed the consideration of Article X, entitled Taxation, the question being on the final passage of the article.

Mr. Sturtevant. I move that the Convention adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. Sturtevant. I made the motion to adjourn, hoping that the Convention would consent to adjourn until to-morrow, so as to give us a little time on this matter. I wish to enter my protest, although I do not know as that will help the matter any. I wish to protest against the adoption of this article. I will endeavor to give the Convention some of my reasons. One of my material objections is this—

Mr. DeLONG. I submit that all debate is out of order, unless by leave of the Convention.

Mr. STURTEVANT. What is the objection? You have got this thing all safe.

Mr. DeLONG. It is not that; but the time fixed for the adjournment is nearly up. [Question! Question!]

Mr. STURTEVANT. One of my principal objections to the adoption of this article is, that during the last session of the Legislature there was a certain agreement entered into by you mining representatives, and that agreement was supposed to be sacred. There was an agreement entered into by the representatives of all of you, which you are responsible for, and we are not. ["Oh! Oh!"] Some of these agreements were patriotic, and among them was one to set aside to the volunteers already raised, and to be raised, for the service of the United States, to aid in suppressing the rebellion, a certain amount of money.

Mr. DUNNE. Time! I believe the time is up.

Mr. EARL. I move to extend the time.

Mr. DeLONG. I move to extend it ten minutes.

The question was taken on Mr. DeLong's motion, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Now if gentlemen will not make more noise than a pack of hounds after a wolf, I will try to finish my remarks. Gentlemen know what this provision is to which I have referred, although some may not have heard me state it on account of the noise. There was an agreement, as I stated before, entered into with a distinct understanding, and I call the attention of the Convention to that matter. The revenue bill, which was passed at the same time, provided the means of carrying out this agreement; and I call attention to another thing, and that is, that this bill making the appropriation for volunteers would not have been passed had not you, through your representatives from the mining counties, agreed with us that the mines should be taxed to raise the money. But now in your wisdom you have seen fit to back down, and in so many words to repudiate your own action, thereby throwing the responsibility and the burden of this tax, all of it that has been incurred, upon the surface property of the Territory. That will be one of my main objections, which I wish to embrace in my protest.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HAINES. I would ask if the Convention cannot be induced to insert the word "gross" in this article, before the word "proceeds?" It is all so very vague now that it ought not to be satisfactory to either side of the House. I think that gentlemen representing the mining interest ought to extend that courtesy, at least, to us who feel deeply wounded in regard to this matter. Money will be used in the Legislature, and we all know for a certainty that it would be possible to convince the Legislature that only the net proceeds are intended here. We all know what a corrupt body a Legislature may be made by the use of money, and a sufficient amount of money used for the purpose may suffice to make them believe that the article means net proceeds, or gross proceeds, or whatever proceeds men may choose to construe it to mean. And in my opinion there is not a possibility, under that provision, of getting a dollar of revenue from that source. I presume that nobody will deny that if money enough is used, the Legislature can be made to say that the provision means "net proceeds," and the consequence will be that we shall never in the world get any revenue from the mines.

Mr. HOVEY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that if gentlemen want to get a vote they had better not ask any questions.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move that Article X be recommitted, with instructions to insert the word "gross" before the word "proceeds."

Mr. FRIZELL. I second the motion; and, Mr. President, as I am a representative of a mining county, I want to say that I do honestly wish that our action on this subject may be reconsidered. I have talked with my brother delegates from the agricultural counties on the subject, and I say we wish and intend that the gross proceeds of the mines shall be taxed. I am informed by pretty nearly all of the members from the agricultural counties, that if we do that they will be satisfied with our action, and that is all we can do. Representing in part the mining constituency of Storey County, I say to those members from the agricultural counties that all we can do is to tax the gross proceeds of the mines. I do not know that I can speak for others, but I will say for myself, that so far as your interests are concerned, gentlemen of the agricultural counties, they are our interests. Our interests are reciprocal, and so far as I am concerned, and I think I may speak also for the remainder of our delegates, we do not wish to deceive you on this subject; and I say if you are willing to vote for that proposition, making it gross proceeds, I am willing to have it done; and if the people are not willing to adopt it when it is amended in that respect, then let them vote it down. I am willing to concede that point.

Mr. HAINES. I certainly do ask it as a favor, so far as I am concerned. I do not want to go home to my constituents and tell them that we can expect no assistance in sustaining the State Government from the vast and enormous amount of wealth which exists in the mining counties of our State. As it now stands, that certainly is the case, because the Legislature will undoubtedly decide that the article means "net proceeds." I have seen those corrupt bodies where money was used, and I know that a sufficient amount of money will always secure a certain result. I hope the Convention will concede that point. Give us that, and we ask no more.

Mr. DELONG. It is now pretty near the time to adjourn, and as this is a very important question, and some members desire to have a little time to reflect upon it, I will move that we adjourn until to-morrow morning, and then let this matter come up as unfinished business.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, at twenty minutes before six o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 20, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, A. M.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, the President being temporarily absent, Mr. BANKS was requested to act as President, and took the Chair.

The roll was called and all the members responded except the following: Messrs. Ball, Collins, DeLong, Hudson, Jones, Kennedy, Morse, Nourse, Parker, Proctor, Wellington, Williams, and Mr. President. Present, 26; absent, 13.

Subsequently Mr. Collins came in, and at his own request was recorded as present.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. RILEY.

The journal of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

On motion of Mr. CRAWFORD, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. Kinkead.

SALARIES.

Mr. FITCH. I move that the Convention now go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of Article XI, entitled Salaries.

Mr. DUNNE. Would not that require a suspension of the rules, inasmuch as we have other business pending?

Mr. FITCH. We have no business I believe until eleven o'clock—the time for the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The next order of business is the general file.

Mr. FITCH. I find I am mistaken as to the special order, and yet I know that there is an impression among the members of the Convention that the mining tax amendment was made the special order for to-day at eleven o'clock. However, I do not wish to press my motion at all. I would like to have Article XI considered as soon as possible, as I wish to get some amendments before the Convention, and therefore I have made this motion, under the head of motions and resolutions, to go into Committee of the Whole upon that article, and I will leave it to the Convention.

The question was stated on the motion of Mr. Fitch.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. Does not that involve a suspension of the rules, requiring a two-thirds vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair is of opinion that it does, because it involves the order of business.

Mr. FITCH. Then I will move a suspension of the rules for that purpose; but if the Convention do not wish to consider the article now, I shall not care to press the motion.

The question was taken, and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 13; noes, 10—so the rules were not suspended, less than two-thirds of the Convention having voted affirmatively.

TAXATION.

The Convention took up, as the unfinished business on the general file, Article X, entitled Taxation.

Mr. HAINES. I was under the impression that that article had been made a special order for 11 o'clock. I think the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) our President, made such a motion yesterday.

Mr. FITCH. I suggest that the article had better be postponed until eleven o'clock. I know that several members who are now absent would like to be here when it is considered, and they are under the impression that it has been made a special order. I move that it be postponed until eleven o'clock.

The question was taken, and upon a division the motion was agreed to—ayes, 16; noes, 7.

SALARIES.

Mr. DUNNE. I move now that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole, the President remaining in the Chair, for the purpose of considering Article XI, entitled Salaries.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President pro tem. remaining in the Chair,) and took up Article XI, entitled Salaries.

The SECRETARY read the article, as follows:

ARTICLE XI.

SALARIES.

SECTION 1. The Governor shall receive an annual salary of six thousand dollars. The Secretary of State shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars. The State Controller shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars. The State Treasurer shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars. The Attorney General shall receive an annual salary of eighteen hundred dollars. The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars. Such salaries shall be paid quarterly. Said officers shall receive no fees or perquisites to their own use for the performance of any duties connected with their offices.

Mr. FITCH. I offer a substitute for that article.

Wednesday.]

FITCH—JOHNSON.

[July 20.]

The SECRETARY read the substitute proposed by Mr. Fitch, as follows :

ARTICLE XI.

SALARIES AND APPROPRIATIONS.

SECTION 1. For the first ——— years succeeding the formation of a State Government, the salary of the Governor shall not exceed ——— dollars per annum; the salary of the Secretary of State shall not exceed ——— dollars per annum; the salary of the State Controller shall not exceed ——— dollars per annum; the salary of the State Treasurer shall not exceed ——— dollars per annum; the salary of the Surveyor General shall not exceed ——— dollars per annum; the salary of the Attorney General shall not exceed ——— dollars per annum; the salary of the Superintendent of Public Instruction shall not exceed ——— dollars per annum; the salary of each Judge of the Supreme Court shall not exceed ——— dollars per annum; the pay of State Senators and members of the Assembly shall not exceed the sum of ——— dollars for each day of actual service, and ——— per mile for mileage.

SEC. 2. For the first ——— years succeeding the formation of a State Government, the Legislature shall not appropriate more than the sum of ——— dollars per annum for the support of the State Prison, nor more than ——— dollars per annum for the support of Common Schools, nor more than ——— dollars per annum for Public Printing, nor more than ——— dollars per annum for the payment of the interest on the public debt, nor more than ——— dollars per annum for the contingent expenses of all the departments of Government. The whole amount appropriated by the Legislature for the support of the State Government for the first ——— years succeeding the formation of said government shall not exceed the sum of ——— dollars per annum.

SEC. 3. For the first ——— years succeeding the formation of a State Government the Legislature shall make no appropriation for the erection of public buildings, and the annual tax levied by the Legislature for the support of a State Government shall not for the first ——— years succeeding the formation of a State Government, exceed the sum of ——— upon each one hundred dollars of taxable property at the assessed valuation of the same.

Mr. FITCH. I have offered this substitute more with the view of calling out the opinions of members upon the advisability of the course there suggested, than with any expectation that, without considerable amendment, the proposition will pass. As a general principle I am opposed to restricting the State Legislature in an organic law, in the manner proposed in this article, for I do not consider it altogether good policy to tie up a legislative body to that extent. But we cannot be oblivious to the fact that there is the nucleus of a very strong opposition to the Constitution now existing, that it is active and energetic, and that a very great effort is likely to be made to defeat the acceptance of the Constitution, to defeat the adoption by the people of a State Government, on the ground of its cost. The parties about to oppose the ratification of the Constitution say that the Territory is in no condition to afford the expense; that a State Government will cost a large sum of money; that to adopt it will necessitate the levying of a large amount of taxes; and that the people are too poor, in the present condition of our affairs, to undergo the expenses which will be involved. Now when the last Constitution was submitted to the people the same arguments were used,

The salaries were limited in that instrument, but those who opposed it said with great force that the salaries of the State officers constituted but a mere drop in the bucket, and the great items of expense in a State organization would be the appropriations. Now I desire that this Convention shall, if practicable, remove that ground of opposition, by tying up the Legislature for a period of years in respect to appropriations—that is, to prohibit them from exceeding a certain amount of expenditure for the first few years after the adoption of a State form of government. If we can do that, and especially if we can adopt this last clause relative to the rate of taxation, (and that is a mere experimental clause, I admit, and I have some doubt respecting its practicability,) we shall have done much to strengthen the Constitution before the people by removing the most important ground of opposition. I have conversed with a number of my fellow-citizens in Storey County, some of whom are most active in the opposition—whose names are now mentioned most prominently in the opposition to a State Government—and they have informed me that if the Convention can and will so tie up the Legislature, for the first two or three years, that it will be impossible for them to spend more than a reasonable sum for a State Government, they are ready and willing to withdraw their opposition. I have offered this substitute, with blanks unfilled, merely for the purpose of getting at the views of members of the Convention on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the gentleman's proposition is deficient in one respect. He should have had an additional section there, and I am surprised that he did not incorporate it, providing that after the first blank years the Legislature shall not convene at all. Then his system would have been complete. Now, sir, on this floor, and more outside of this Convention, I have heard objections urged to the old Constitution on the ground that it contained so much legislation that it left nothing for the Legislature to do. I think that even without the additional section, which I have suggested to carry out the principle embodied in the gentleman's proposition, there would be more cause for complaint against this Constitution, if this substitute should be adopted, on the ground of its restriction of the legislative power—of the power of the people through their Legislature—than could be found in any single article or provision embodied in the old Constitution. And, sir, of all propositions which have emanated from any gentleman on this floor, of an extraordinary character, I think the one offered now by the gentleman from Storey, contains the most extraordinary features.

In the first place, I am willing to go further, probably, than some gentlemen on this floor, judging by the expressions of opinion which I have heard on the subject, in the establishment of salaries. I would be willing, so far as salaries are concerned, to fix them, for a period of time,

JOHNSON.

[July 20.

beyond the power of the Legislature to change them. Beyond that I am not willing to go, and beyond that, perhaps, the majority of this Convention is not willing to go. When we have done that, I conceive that we shall have done all that is legitimately and properly within the scope of our powers.

Now I desire for a moment to refer to some of the peculiar features of this amendment. Passing over the question of the salaries of the various officers—for they are all left blank, and I do not find any especial objection to that part of the gentleman's proposition—we come next to this clause :

“For the first — years succeeding the formation of a State Government, the Legislature shall not appropriate more than the sum of — dollars per annum for the support of the State Prison.”

How does the gentleman know, or how can he conceive, what the expenses of the State Prison will be? Can the embodied wisdom of the Legislature approximate to what the necessary expenses of that institution will be? There may be other gentlemen here who are better acquainted with this question than I am, but who can foretell what may in the future be the action of our Courts, or how many or how few criminals will be sentenced to the State Prison, for whom accommodations are to be provided? No one can predict what will be the number of convicts at any future period, although we know the number already there, and it is impossible for any one to more than conjecture what will be the amount of the future expenses of that institution.

Next, the proposed amendment says :

“Nor more than — dollars per annum for the support of common schools.”

Well, I would commend that part of it to the careful attention of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) who is the Chairman of the Committee on Education. Probably he may have considered this matter already, for I know that no member of the Convention has given more earnest thought and considerate attention to the common school system, either as to its present or its prospective condition, than he has. If he cannot form an estimate as to the amount which the public schools will call for from the State Treasury, I cannot, and I do not believe the members of this Convention can.

“Nor more than — dollars per annum for the public printing.”

Well, the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) as he has been connected with that art, may possibly be able to conjecture what amount would be proper to allow for the printing, and possibly any of us might be able to approximate to an estimate on the subject of the public printing.

“Nor more than — dollars per annum for the payment of the interest on the public debt.”

On that subject there is a variety of opinions, but possibly we might approximate very nearly to the amount which will be required each year for the payment of the interest on the public debt. But upon all these matters, those embraced in the last clause, and in the preceding and succeeding clauses, I apprehend that no gentleman on the floor of this Convention will assume any other position than this, that whatever is absolutely necessary should be appropriated and no more. Whatever amount may be necessary, in each case, let the Legislature appropriate. But who are to be the judges? Are we, in advance, to fix the appropriations for two or three years? I say not. Let the Legislature ascertain what is necessary, and then appropriate it. It is incumbent upon us to make provision here investing the Legislature with the power, and devolving upon it the duty, of making the necessary appropriations at the proper time; for all these expenses have to be borne, be they five thousand, ten thousand, twenty thousand, fifty thousand, or even a million of dollars a year. Whatever they are, more or less, they have to be borne, and paid by the people of the State. The same remark applies to all these specifications. We know what the bonded debt of the Territory is at the present time, but we cannot know what will be the condition of our indebtedness when the State Government shall take the place of the Territorial Government, although we may approximate to an estimate. But with reference to some of these other items specified here, we cannot even approximate to an estimate.

“Nor more than — dollars per annum for the contingent expenses of all the departments of Government.”

Where is the man who can speak from knowledge and experience in these matters, and come sufficiently near to making an estimate of these contingent expenses, to warrant us in fixing the amount in the Constitution? We can approximate to an estimate sufficiently near to judge of what will be the probable aggregate amount of the expenses, generally speaking, of the Government; but even upon that, judging from the different opinions which I have heard on this floor and elsewhere, I am of opinion that our conclusions would be exceedingly variant. I have heretofore indicated what my judgment is on that point, and generally the proposition at that time seemed to meet with no denial, although I subsequently heard gentlemen name figures far below any estimates which I could make, upon the most economical and judicious system we can possibly devise.

Next, we have this :

“The whole amount appropriated by the Legislature for the support of the State Government, for the first — years succeeding the formation of the State Government, shall not exceed the sum of — dollars per annum.”

Now, sir, this is, of all the propositions I have heard suggested in this Convention—the gentleman from Storey will pardon the term I must use in connection with it—of all the propositions which have emanated from any member or members of the Convention, this is the most absurd—I must use that term—which I have yet heard suggested.

Wednesday.]

FITCH.

[July 20.]

Now we come to Section 3.

Sec. 3. For the first — years succeeding the formation of a State Government, the Legislature shall make no appropriation for the erection of public buildings, and the annual tax levied by the Legislature for the support of a State Government shall not for the first — years succeeding the formation of a State Government, exceed the sum of — upon each one hundred dollars of the taxable property at the assessed valuation of the same.

This is entirely in keeping with that which precedes it. As to this matter of public buildings, I care nothing. Considerations of delicacy might inhibit me from discussing that point, and I do not propose to say anything upon it. But I say there is nothing in this section which should find a place in our fundamental law, save and except, perhaps, that inhibition in respect to the erection of public buildings, and if it is the wish of the Convention to insert that, I shall care nothing for it.

Now as to salaries, we might, as I have suggested, fix them for a period of time, and possibly I might be willing to go further, and establish them for a longer time than some other gentlemen might. But as to the balance of this proposition, it is impossible for us, in my judgment, to make any estimates that will correspond with the future wants of the State. In some cases we might exceed, and in others we should be apt to fall short of the wants of the government. The same remarks will apply to all these sections, and every specification, from beginning to end, except those to which I have referred. The gentleman desires an expression of the sense of the Convention, I understand, on the policy of this substitute, and I will only say, that if his system is to be adopted, I do earnestly beseech gentlemen to carry it out by an additional section, providing that after — years the Legislature shall not convene at all. That would simply be resolving this Convention into a Legislature for the State, for one, two, or three years, and it would be better to do that, so that the people might know not only what expenses they have to incur, but also what laws are enacted, and then they can judge of the merits of the system we devise, as compared with their Territorial Government. Let us carry out the system to its utmost limits, if we adopt it at all, and make it practicable. Let the people know what expenses they have to meet, and what laws they will have to endure during this entire period, long or short, as it may be.

Mr. FITCH. I entirely agree with my friend from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) in regard to the theory upon which he bases some portion of his opposition to the amendment suggested by me, and I entirely disagree with some other portions of his remarks. I think I stated distinctly—and if I did not, I will state it now—that the theory of tying up the hands of the Legislature in the manner proposed by this amendment, is not agreeable to me or consonant with my ideas of sound public policy. I believe the largest amount of discretion should be left to the Legislatures, as a general proposition. But this measure ties them up only for a limited period. I have left that period blank, so that we can insert one, two, or three years, just as to the Convention may seem most proper. I have offered it as a question of expediency solely, I confess. I think the principle is one which should not be incorporated into the Constitution to continue for any great length of time. But perhaps this little evil may be done, in order that a great good may come of it; and I believe that it will very materially aid in securing the adoption of the Constitution. As I have stated heretofore, my first object is to secure a good fundamental law, and next, to aid in so shaping the policy of this Convention, that that fundamental law will be adopted by the people. We sit here in this Convention, all of us, with one exception perhaps, in favor of the adoption of a State Government. We go out into this thriving city, filled with inhabitants who indulge in the hope that it will be the capital of a great and prosperous State, and we hear many people saying that they are in favor of the adoption of the Constitution. And at night we go to bed imbued with the idea that we are the people of this Territory. Now, Mr. President, we are no such thing; and I strongly believe that unless we adopt some such provision as this, tying up the Legislature, so that for two or three years to come, the expenses cannot exceed a limited sum per annum, the trump of doom against this Constitution has already sounded. I think the great County of Storey, which cast as large a vote in proportion to its population, against the old Constitution, as any county except Humboldt, the county that holds the balance of power, by which can be secured either the adoption or the rejection of the Constitution, will be against it. I believe, after having been there for two days, after conversing with lawyers, merchants, and miners, endeavoring to obtain the true sentiments of the people, that two-thirds, if not three-fourths of the people of that county are opposed to the adoption of the Constitution, to-day; and I believe, further, that the only measure by which their votes can be secured, is the adoption by us of an inhibition similar in character to the one I have proposed, against a large amount of taxation. The people are afraid of the Legislature. I agree with the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson,) that we could safely leave the matter with the Legislature, and if we did so, I believe that they would be guided by their knowledge of the resources of the State, by the amount of taxable property, and their knowledge of what the people could really stand. I believe they would so shape their appropriations as to cover no more than the proper amount, and raise only a reasonable sum for the State Government. But although I believe all this, yet you cannot make the people believe it. They have the example of California held up as a warning light to keep them off the breakers; and as soon as we leave this Convention, we shall find men on every stump telling the people of the enormous taxes that will have to be raised; that the State Government of California costs millions of dollars, and that they will be required to pay an enormous tax for revenue. And if we simply restrict the salaries of State officers, they will tell the people, and what is worse, the people will believe them, that the salaries are merely a drop in the bucket, and that the Legislature can make the most extravagant appropriations. And because of their telling the people this, and the people believing it, they will vote against your Constitution. Now the only way in which we can secure the vote of the people and spike the guns of our adversaries, is by an inhibition of the nature which I have proposed.

EARL—NOURSE—FITCH.

[July 20.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) in another point, and that is, that we cannot estimate the amount of the appropriations which will be necessary. I admit that whatever is required should be provided for, and that this restriction is legislation, but I believe that we can approximate at least to the maximum sum which will be required for the next two years. We can tell how much the State Prison and how much the Common Schools are going to cost us. We can tell how much the State Printing will cost us, and all the other usual expenses of administration. We know how much they have cost, under the Territorial Government, and for the first two years, at least, we can fix a maximum sum, and say that they shall not cost an amount to exceed that. It was very properly said by the gentleman from Ormsby that we cannot foretell what will be the expense of the State Prison—that we cannot know beforehand how many convicts there will be, and how much will be required to support them. But we can fix the maximum sum. The expenses of the State Prison are now about fifteen thousand dollars a year, and we can fix the maximum of the appropriation at forty thousand, or fifty thousand dollars, if you please, or at all events we can name some specific sum which shall not be exceeded. In that manner we can meet the arguments of those who are about to oppose the State Government. We can refer them to Article XI, of the Constitution, and say in answer to their allusions to the extravagancies of the State of California, and the warning that State affords, and all their arguments and figures upon that basis, that our State Government cannot cost more than a certain sum, because for a period of years the Legislature is limited, and cannot exceed that sum in expenditure. Now while I agree with the gentleman from Ormsby in strongly doubting, and in fact in absolutely disbelieving, in the theory of tying up the hands of the State Legislature, yet I submit whether, as a question of expediency, it is not better to do so in this case, and for a limited period, in order to secure the adoption of a State Government.

Mr. EARL. So far as the question of expediency is concerned, I have been, for one, in favor of leaving to the Legislature certain powers, but upon inquiry on certain matters I find it does not always do to leave the Legislature with full and unrestricted powers. In relation to the State Prison, I think that is one of those things, in regard to which it is entirely proper to restrict the Legislature, although it might, in another view of the question, seem to be impracticable to do so. But we have only to look back to the history of California, and see what the State Prison cost that State in the days of Estelle, and the notorious prison contractors, about whom there has been so much legislation and litigation, to learn a lesson of wisdom. And again, here in this Territory, look at that pile of rocks within sight of this building, which has already cost the Territory eighty thousand dollars. Until yesterday I knew nothing of the particulars of that matter, and if I had I would never have preached here the doctrine of allowing the Legislature to have that unrestricted power. In relation to the officers of the State, I do believe in tying up the hands of the Legislature, in the manner set forth in this proposition. We can and should name a sum which the Legislature is not to exceed. For instance, we can say that they shall not exceed eight thousand dollars, if you please, for each of the Supreme Court Judges, and five thousand dollars for the Governor, and so on. I think that is entirely consistent. Give the Legislature sufficiently wide boundaries, but say to them that inside of those boundaries they must keep. That is one of the great systematic principles which we ought to lay down here for the State to be guided by. I think we can do it, and do it consistently. There is no doubt at all in my mind but that our friend from Storey (Mr. Collins) can make a sufficiently accurate calculation in regard to the cost of the schools. Let the estimate be a liberal one. We are all capable of figuring it out here, and then let us leave a proper margin. I shall go for the proposition of my colleague first, last, and all the time, and especially in relation to the penitentiary. I think the Legislature should be restricted in respect to that institution, if not in regard to anything else.

Mr. NOURSE. I have an amendment to offer, which perhaps the gentleman from Storey will accept. The gentleman suggests that the expenses of the penitentiary should be limited, and I believe so too. It has been argued here that possibly if the number of persons convicted of crime should be greater than we might estimate, the amount fixed upon might not be sufficient for their support, and in order to provide for that difficulty I send up this amendment.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

Mr. FITCH. My amendment is a mere skeleton anyhow—none of the blanks being filled.

Wednesday.]

NOURSE—FITCH—BANKS—CHAPIN.

[July 20.]

Mr. NOURSE. I know; but the amendment I offer is, I think, an important one. As the object of the gentleman's proposition seems to be to adopt a stump speech to send before the people, in order to remove what objections they may have against the Constitution, it seems to me that the further amendment which I propose is necessary.

The SECRETARY read Mr. Nourse's amendment, as follows:

"That no more than — persons shall commit crime within this State within — years, nor shall more than — persons be convicted of crime and sentenced to the State Prison within — years from the adoption of this Constitution."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. FITCH. Gentlemen seem disposed to amuse themselves with this proposition, but I have offered it in good faith, and I trust it will receive fair consideration. If the Convention does not desire to adopt it, let it be rejected.

Mr. BANKS. I can appreciate neither the wit nor the sarcasm which have been dealt out in relation to this amendment. I understand that the proposition is only a skeleton, which the gentleman from Storey has offered, embodying a certain policy, and presented in this form for us to act upon, and in case we adopt it to perfect it in its details as we may think proper. Now in order that we may act intelligently upon it, I suggest that we have a division of the question, so that if we see fit we can strike out Article XI, and then incorporate so many of the propositions of the gentleman from Storey as we think best. In that way we will be able to confine the discussion to the particular points upon which we wish to act directly. There are some portions of the amendment of the gentleman from Storey which I think will meet the approbation of the majority of the Convention, as they certainly do mine. I do not see anything in this Section I of the original article that so corresponds in its nature with any portion of the substitute as to justify moving an amendment to that section, and I think the better course would be to take the question first on striking out Section I. I therefore call for a division of the question—first, on the motion to strike out, and then on the insertion of these several sections, in their order, as proposed by the gentleman from Storey.

The CHAIRMAN. I will suggest here, in order that we may get this matter in a proper shape, that the various amendments, taken in the aggregate, must be regarded as an amendment to Section I as it stands now; and the vote should therefore first be taken on the several amendments, in order to perfect them, before the vote on striking out.

Mr. BANKS. I understand the gentleman to move his entire proposition as a substitute—to strike out Article XI entirely, and insert the several sections he has offered.

Mr. FITCH. Under the ruling of the Chair, I will withdraw the substitute for the present.

Mr. BANKS. Then for the purpose of getting at the matter properly, I move to strike out the original section.

Mr. CHAPIN. I am in favor of striking out this section, and I have some reasons to present for striking it out, in order that a proper substitute may be inserted. During my absence from the capital for two or three days past, I conversed as extensively as I could with citizens of every class and standing in society, in my county, and I do not hesitate to state here that in Storey County, if the vote were taken to-day, with the present impression upon the minds of the people, it would be largely against the Constitution. Their fear is, that the expenses of the State Government will be rolled up to an enormous amount, and I think that nothing under heaven can save the Constitution but the assurance of a safeguard thrown around the Legislature, so as to limit them in the amount of their expenditures for two or three years to come, until we shall have recovered somewhat from the depression and hard times under which we are now suffering. As much as we may boast of the wisdom of the Legislature—and I have been anxious to leave a great many things to the Legislature which I felt were not proper to be incorporated in this fundamental law—as much as we may say we are willing to trust the Legislature, the people are afraid of it. Most of them are Californians, and they have had experience in California Legislatures. The Legislatures of that State have been made up from year to year—in its early days, at all events—of men who did not expect to remain in the country more than twelve or fourteen months perhaps, at the most, and I regret to say that many of them were found ready to mortgage the whole State, at any time, for some grand swindling operation, by which they and their friends might be benefited. Now how much we differ in our circumstances from that State in its early days, I cannot state, or at least I will not state; but I will give it as my impression, that for a year or two to come we will have a great many members of our Legislature who will not be permanent citizens. A portion of them will be our best men—farmers and ranchers, and men who have settled here permanently—but is it not reasonably to be expected that another and a large portion of them will be of the same class as those who have dishonored the Legislature of California?—men who are transient residents here, men who have no abiding interests among us, but who desire only to make money, to grasp all they can get, and then to go where they please. At all events, such is the impression of citizens outside of the Convention; certainly it is the impression of the citizens in Storey County. You cannot argue them out of it, and the only thing we can do is to satisfy them that under our Constitution they cannot be ruinously run into debt. If we can do that the Constitution will be carried. I submit whether it is not important for us to go down to the bed rock at once, and lay such a foundation for the State Government, that all will say

Wednesday.]

CHAPIN—COLLINS—BANKS.

[July 20.

they are willing to risk it? For one, I am willing to do it. I do not want to adopt the Constitution, unless we can keep out of debt. I do not want to adopt it, and then follow in the footsteps of California. If we do not want to have the ruinous taxation of California, then I say let us adopt some such safeguard, and if not, we had better stay as we are. I do not want to see the State run into debt, simply because we have assumed the responsibilities of a State Government. Wherefore should we branch out, and go into extravagant splurges, simply because we have assumed the dignity and privileges of a State? I see no reason in that. On the contrary, I believe it is our bounden duty to exercise the closest economy within our power—just as much as we would as a Territory—for two or three years to come at least, and unless we do it, we who expect to remain permanently here will soon find ourselves groaning under burdens which we shall wish never had come upon us. I say, let us take such action as shall secure us against this extravagance, and then we may go along prosperously.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Banks to strike out Article XI, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. Now I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of then submitting a motion to refer this matter to a committee of seven, in order to perfect its details. Otherwise it must consume a great deal of time.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not know but the proposition of my friend on my left (Mr. Chapin) is a good one. But this matter will have to be ventilated in the Convention, let it come from a committee of seven or from any other source, and I do not see any better time for us to measure this whole subject than now, in Committee of the Whole. It is one upon which there is a great diversity of sentiment in the Convention, and out of it. I have made up my own mind, most thoroughly, that if we cannot devise the ways and means, if we cannot mature and adopt some plan upon which we can organize this State Government, upon principles of the most rigid economy, by which we can put the brakes upon that system of extravagance with which our people, who have mostly come from California, have been vaccinated, and which will tend in its operation to duplicate the same system of extravagance in this State that has prevailed there,—I say for one I do not want a State Government, and I say for one that a State Government cannot be afforded in Nevada. The people of this Territory are suspicious that the same system of operations which has prevailed in California will characterize the future operations of this coming State. Our people have, financially speaking, the most extraordinary notions. The whole system under which we live has conspired to produce them, and it will require most stringent measures on the part of this Convention, in organizing a State Government, to bring the State down to that economical system which characterizes men in their individual capacity, and which ought to characterize the State in its assembled capacity. I rejoice in one thing in connection with the hard times which are now upon us, for I do regard these times as the most auspicious possible for launching a State Government. Because now, when we create an office, we shall scrutinize well the importance and value of it, and when we fix a salary we shall begin to count the cents in the dollar and the value in the cent. And the sooner we come down to that system, the better for us. I know it is hard for those who have been brought up under a different system. I know it is difficult for those brought up under the operations of that system which has so long borne sway in California, and which has almost, I was going to say, bankrupted that State, to bring themselves down to a system of cheap simplicity. But I tell you, Mr. President, that a cheap government is a premium on political integrity, and just in proportion as you give way to extravagance, and the squandering of money, just in that proportion do you open up a field for corrupt political combinations, and lobbying influences, like those which have been so long known in the State west of us, and which will bear ruinously upon the permanent tax-payers of the State of Nevada. I hope, therefore, that we shall go on with the consideration of this subject in the Committee of the Whole, and let the views of gentlemen be presented upon it. I do not know what the views of members may be, or whether it would be proper to refer the subject to a select committee. There may be great hostility to it. When gentlemen have expressed their opinions we may find it impracticable to refer it, and may decide to indefinitely postpone the whole subject. Let us measure our respective views here. Let us throw them into the common treasury, and when we have ascertained what the desires and wishes of the Convention are, if we find that we are generally in favor of organizing a cheap State Government, let us then refer the matter to a committee, to be there digested.

Mr. BANKS. It has been suggested that the action of the Convention should be to refer this matter to a special committee at the present time. Now I would like, before the Convention acts finally upon the amendment, to have it referred to a committee, but I think it well for us first in the Convention, or in Committee of the Whole, to determine as proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) what we will restrict legislation upon. I think the sense of the Convention is decidedly in favor of restricting and limiting the Legislature, at least so far as salaries are concerned, but there might be material differences of opinion in regard to the other propositions contained in the substitute. I hope, therefore, that we shall continue in Committee of the Whole, confining ourselves to the matter of the subjects of limitation, and then afterwards we can refer the proposition to a committee, to procure the facts and prepare the figures upon which to base the necessary action.

Mr. EARL. I hope the suggestion of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) will be agreed to. We can adopt in blank certain sections, making these restrictions, and after that it will be wholly a question of figures, and it seems to me unnecessary for the whole Convention to sit here and deliberate upon questions of figures only.

Mr. FITCH. I think the course suggested by the gentleman from Humboldt is the best we can adopt. We can take up Section 1 and discuss it, and if it is the sense of the Convention to restrict the Legislature in that particular, we can refer it to a committee to fill the blanks, and so on with the remaining sections.

Mr. CHAPIN. For the purpose of getting at the sense of the Convention, then, I will withdraw my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. FITCH. I trust that a vote will be taken in the committee on Section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has withdrawn his amendment, but it will be in order to offer it again.

Mr. FITCH. I will renew the amendment, and I trust that Section 1 will be read and passed upon.

The SECRETARY read Section 1 of the substitute proposed by Mr. Fitch.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I think the compensation of the Legislature is already fixed, elsewhere in the Constitution. The pay of Senators and Representatives is fixed at ten dollars a day, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir. It is provided that the Legislature may establish the compensation, and there is to be no increase during the term of the incumbents. No specific sum has been mentioned in the Constitution, so far as already adopted.

Mr. BROSNAN. I call the attention of the Convention to Section 34 of the article entitled Legislative Department, which reads as follows—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had better let the Secretary read it as engrossed.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

SEC. 33. The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services a compensation to be fixed by law, and paid out of the public treasury; but no increase of such compensation shall take effect during the term for which the members of either House shall have been elected; provided, that an appropriation may be made for the payment of such actual expenses as the members of the Legislature may incur for postage, express charges, newspapers, and stationery, not exceeding the sum of sixty dollars, for any general or special session, to each member; and furthermore provided, that the Speaker of the Assembly, and Lieutenant Governor, or President of the Senate, shall each, during the time of their actual attendance as such presiding officers, receive an additional allowance of two dollars per diem.

Mr. BANKS. It will be observed that there is nothing incompatible between the section as proposed, and the restrictions contained in the section in this article which we have already passed upon. In the amendment which we now have under consideration, the Legislature fixes the salary, but subject, of course, to the proposition made by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch.) if we shall choose to adopt it.

Mr. FITCH. I hope the section will be adopted, and then we can report it back, and in the Convention can appoint a committee to fill all the blanks.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have no objection to this section, except that it seems to me misplaced where it is now. It fixes the salaries for two years, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; they are all blank, yet; but the blanks can be filled at any time.

Mr. NOURSE. This first section refers to the salaries of State officers, I believe.

Mr. FITCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. NOURSE. Well, I do not know as I have any objection to that, nor to the bulk of this proposition. I have a great deal of confidence in the Legislature, provided their hands are pretty well tied, and it seems to me that this proposition, in its general scope, gets at the correct doctrine on that subject. The objection to a Constitution, so far as interfering with legislation goes, it appears to me, has no weight, except when the Constitution undertakes to do affirmative acts, which should be left to the Legislature. But the chief object of a Constitution seems to be to restrict the Legislature from doing affirmative acts which might be harmful to the people, and this provision simply restricts the Legislature in that respect. And now I wish to say, although it is not strictly in order, in regard to that amendment proposed by me, that I offered it in terrible earnest, [laughter] because that was a class of cases, the extent of which, in the way of expenditure, could not be foreseen, by any possibility.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to speak of a proposition which is not before the Committee.

Mr. NOURSE. Very well. I wish to say, so far as this amendment proposes to restrict expenditures, so far as it proposes to restrict the Legislature from putting us to improper and unbanded expense, I like the proposition; and I shall therefore vote for the first section. I think it is a proper restriction. I do not vote for it as an argument in favor of a State Government, but because I think it is right that in this matter the Legislature should be restricted. It seems to me that that is a strong and sound argument in favor of the section. But when it comes to restricting the Legislature in its expenditures for certain purposes, for which the amount that will be needed cannot by any possibility be foreseen, I shall of course reserve to myself the right to vote against it.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section, and it was adopted.

Mr. FITCH. I now move the adoption of Section 2.

Wednesday,]

BANKS—STURTEVANT—NOURSE—FITCH.

[July 20.

The SECRETARY read Section 2 of Mr. Fitch's substitute, and the question was stated on its adoption.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that these sections are being separately introduced from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; each section is offered and voted upon in its consecutive order, as I understand.

Mr. BANKS. Very well, sir. Now in that section there are some things of which, with my present knowledge of the matter, I approve, but there are others that I think are very questionable as matters of State policy, and therefore I ask a division of the question, that the vote may be taken separately upon each of the several items.

Mr. STURTEVANT. The gentleman had better move to strike out.

Mr. NOURSE. Allow me to make a suggestion, which is, I think, a capital one, and that is, that the best way to restrict the appropriations, and to prevent the expenditure of an unreasonable amount of money by the Legislature, is to make the legislative expenditures the last item. The Legislature will then take mighty good care not to run up the items which precede their own compensation to a very extravagant amount. It strikes me very favorably, certainly, and I think there is no better way to secure economy in the State Government than to make the legislative pay the last item.

Mr. FITCH. Was the gentleman ever in California during the days of the transfer of the Swamp Land fund?

Mr. NOURSE. I have only been through that State; I did not tarry.

Mr. BANKS. For the sake of practical convenience I simply ask for a division, and then we can vote on each subdivision of the section as it occurs.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the section will be divided in the manner indicated by the gentleman from Humboldt, and the question now will be on the first subdivision.

The SECRETARY read the first subdivision, as follows:

"For the first ——— years succeeding the formation of a State Government, the Legislature shall not appropriate more than the sum of ——— dollars per annum for the support of the State Prison."

Mr. FITCH. Here is something which has been handed to me, and I will ask that it be read for information. I am inclined to like it very well. It is designed as a substitute for Section 2.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

SECTION 2. For the first two years after the adoption of this Constitution, the Legislature shall not levy a tax for State purposes exceeding one per cent. on the taxable property of the State, nor shall any appropriation be made exceeding the said revenue, paying—first, the interest on the State bonds; second, salaries of State officers; third, State Prison expenses; fourth, educational appropriations; fifth, Legislative expenses.

Mr. BANKS. I am some how or other very much inclined to approve of that. I have seen in my experience the working of a similar provision, the result of which was very favorable. We have a case in point in the city of San Francisco, where the expenditures previous to 1856 were enormous beyond all reason, but the Legislature of California adopted a provision similar to this, in regard to the amount of taxes that might be assessed and collected, and the result was just this, that the legislative body of that city was forced to confine itself within a given expenditure, and they did so not only without difficulty, but with perfect facility. It is true the amount was exceedingly, even parsimoniously small, but yet, like persons similarly situated in private life, they have managed to get along with the amount of revenue they had. They did not live beyond their means. And I like, too, the order in which this is arranged. Now, sir, the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has alluded, in a low tone of voice, to the condition of legislators here at the capital under certain circumstances, but in answer to that suggestion I will say that those gentlemen have a perfect right to stay at home if they prefer it, and if they do come to the Legislature they do so with a full knowledge of their own financial condition, and that of the State, and the probable amount of revenue at their disposal. They will not be deceived in the matter. They will not come here expecting to find an overflowing treasury, from which they can at once receive their pay, but they will come here with a full knowledge of the fact that they will not receive their pay for some time after they arrive, and they can, if they please, exercise their constitutional privilege of staying at home. I think the provision would result in securing a wiser, more economical, and more honest set of men in the Legislature. With my present view of the subject I think the provision is an admirable one. I think it will cover all the ground of the first proposition of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch.)—that it will accomplish all the results which he hopes to secure, and that it will do so in a clear, tangible manner.

Now, sir, one word in regard to the matter of the popularity of this Constitution. Thus far I have voted on every proposition coming before us here, without reference to any pressure resulting from the popular sentiment on this or other matters. I came here to adopt a good Constitution, such as the people ought to support, and I regard it as one of the essential elements of a good Constitution, that it shall contain restrictions compelling economy. I have seen and know something of legislative bodies, and without wishing to say anything to their disparagement, or in disparagement of the gentlemen who may assemble here to pass our laws, I do say this, that we, here, as a Constitutional Convention, can, and should, in view of what we know of other States, and of legislation in this Territory, fix a limit beyond which the Legislature shall not pass. I am not in favor of fixing definitely the amount of expenditures

FITCH—CHAIRMAN—STURTEVANT—COLLINS—LOCKWOOD.

[July 20.]

for each of the separate departments, but I am in favor of placing restrictions on the officers of the government, in respect to the expenditures of the State Government. I believe this amendment places those restrictions in such a form that they will be appropriate and advantageous to the people, and successful in their results.

Mr. FITCH. On reflection, I will ask leave to withdraw Section 2 of my original proposition, and having made one or two verbal alterations I will offer this in its place. I will read it myself, as the handwriting is rather obscure.

SECTION 2. For the first — after the adoption of this Constitution, the Legislature shall not levy a tax for State purposes exceeding — per cent. on the taxable property in the State, nor shall any appropriation be made exceeding the said revenue, paying—first, interest on the State bonds; second, salaries of State officers; third, State prison expenses; fourth, educational expenses; fifth, legislative, miscellaneous, and contingent expenses.

I desire to say, in offering this amendment, that it seems to me to meet the objections which have been urged by yourself, Mr. Chairman, and the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) and at the same time it fully covers the ground intended to be covered by my original proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Permit me to make a suggestion which will probably obviate the necessity of my leaving the chair, that a question might arise whether the bonds of the State of Nevada alone, and not of the Territory, were included in the provision for the payment of interest. Now it is contemplated that we shall assume the bonds of the Territory and its entire indebtedness, and there are not only bonds, but also outstanding warrants, etc.

Mr. FITCH. Then by the consent of the Convention I will change it to "interest on the public debt;" so that it will read—"1st. Interest on the public debt."

The CHAIRMAN. Then it will correspond with the section as it stands in the old Constitution, providing that the State shall assume the indebtedness of the Territory.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I will read, for information, from the statutes of the last session of the Legislature, to show what will be the amount of Territorial indebtedness which we shall have to assume. On page 66 is "An Act to provide for a Territorial Prison," on account of which the balance of the appropriation due is sixty thousand dollars; on page 81 is "An Act to encourage enlistments and give bounties and extra pay to our volunteer soldiers," for which the appropriation is one hundred thousand dollars; on page 90 is "An Act to issue bonds and coupons," the appropriation in that Act being one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The whole amount of all these appropriations is three hundred and ten thousand dollars.

Mr. COLLINS. At first view, this new section strikes me as covering the entire ground. I have not had time to look at the amendment critically, but certainly it is clear that under it only one per cent. can be levied on the taxable property of the State; that is clear, at least. Then it says:

"Nor shall any appropriation be made exceeding the said revenue."

Does this mean that there shall be no provision made for the payment of any expenses beyond that amount? or that no debt shall be contracted that shall exceed that amount? There has been a section passed already in regard to the revenue, providing that the State may incur a debt not to exceed a certain amount. I would ask if this will allow the Legislature to complete the complement of that debt—if the Legislature would have permission, by virtue of this substitute, to borrow money on the State bonds to an amount equal to that permitted under the section of the Constitution which we have already adopted—or would it inhibit it? If it would prevent the incurring of any indebtedness beyond that, then it occurs to me that this section covers the entire ground; but if not, I would very much prefer the system contemplated in the article as originally presented by my colleague, (Mr. Fitch.) I merely suggest these inquiries that we may know precisely where we stand. I believe that one per cent., allowing that we are to realize a revenue by taxation upon the gross proceeds of the mines to an amount of eighteen or twenty millions, will be adequate to maintain a State Government well. But I do not want anything here that shall be so indefinite that the Legislature, under the pressure of want, perhaps, can drive through these sentences with a four-horse team. I want it made so tight that it cannot leak, and so clear that no two honest lawyers can materially differ in their construction of it. I say at the first blush it strikes me very favorably as covering the entire ground; but still I would not wish to vote for it until I can understand it more fully.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I must say that it is strange, passing strange, to my mind, what an entire revolution seems to have taken place in the minds of certain gentlemen regarding the Legislature. They have not only become very fearful of that body themselves, but they tell us that the people, especially in Storey County, are very suspicious indeed of the Legislature. Those gentlemen who have so strenuously contended that the Constitution ought to be left entirely free from legislation, that the wisdom of the Territory was not going to die with this body, and that they had full confidence in the Legislatures which would meet in this State hereafter, now not only propose to restrict every appropriation that shall be made by the Legislature, but they have so great a distrust of that body, and such a suspicion of its dishonesty or inability, that they propose not to pay its members for their services. Now I insist, sir, that the qualifications which entitle a man to a seat in that body, are of the highest order. There are many men in this Territory

DUNNE—COLLINS.

[July 20.

who are well qualified to be Controllers of State, but who are not qualified for legislators. That position is one which requires the highest capacity. The man who is to be a competent legislator must know something of law, of literature, of commerce, of agriculture, and of manufactures, in order that he may understand how certain legislative provisions would affect those interests. Now, sir, granting that the Legislature is not entitled to our confidence, as gentlemen here assert, still, if you adopt this provision, what assurance or guarantee have we that they would make any appropriation, for the State Prison, for instance, if it would cut off their own pay? A provision of this character is so novel, so strange, in fact so unheard-of and so untried, that for one I am not prepared to support it. I believe that Storey County is capable of sending just as honorable, honest, and intelligent men to the State Legislature, as it has sent to this Convention; and I hope they will send some of the members of this body to the Legislature, for I have full confidence that they would guard well the interests of the people, and of their own constituents in particular. I am not in favor of this thing called expediency. I believe, sir, that under the solemn oath of office which we have taken as members of this body, it becomes us to judge of all measures, not in the light of expediency, but of right. Under this provision which is proposed to be incorporated into the Constitution, the wheels of government might be blocked entirely. We have a provision already, limiting the indebtedness of the State to the sum of three hundred thousand dollars. If that is not sufficient, and amply sufficient, I believe that we ought to "acknowledge the corn," and say that we are too poor to support a State Government. I take it that every member of the Legislature would like to be paid for his services, as well as every other employe of the State, and I take it, therefore, that the members of the Legislature would reason somewhat in this wise: that the men who furnish the supplies to the State Prison, might just as well go without their pay as they, or the Governor, or the Controller of State, or any other officer of the State. They will not be obliged to make these appropriations, and they will not do so, if thereby they entirely cut off their own compensation. I insist, not that I wish to occupy the time or attention of the Convention, that this matter should be thoroughly sifted and ventilated, for I desire for one, at least, a more perfect understanding of the subject, before I vote for a proposition so entirely novel in its character as the one before the Convention.

Mr. DUNNE. I concur entirely in the sentiments expressed by the last speaker, for I believe that we may safely assume that a man does not lose his natural bent, or change his human nature, because he happens to be elected to the Legislature. And for that reason, believing that the members of the Legislature would still be actuated by the same motives and principles as those which govern men who are not elected to the Legislature, I am inclined to think that this amendment is not politic. I object to it also for this further reason, that it has a tendency to throw the money in the State Treasury into the very worst possible fund imaginable, and that is the Contingent Fund. That is the fund from which we ought to guard the appropriations the most carefully. The tendency would be to keep back all the appropriations to the very last, in order to be sure of having the funds necessary for the payment of the Legislature. I do not believe that under this provision there would be a dollar appropriated for charitable purposes. I do not believe that under it there would be a dollar appropriated for the State Prison, if there were any possibility of avoiding it. I believe that all the appropriations would be kept back for the payment of the Legislature, leaving the balance in the Contingent Fund, to be reached there by special appropriations. Then again, I do not think it is the best policy to adopt to say that the tax levied shall be only one per cent.

Mr. COLLINS. I find that is left blank.

Mr. DUNNE. It was so proposed, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) is mistaken. That which was originally proposed left a blank, but afterwards this was withdrawn and the new section offered takes the place of Section 2 of the amendment first submitted by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch.)

Mr. DUNNE. I will say only a few words more. Here are some figures which I have prepared upon the basis of a taxation of one per cent. Under the basis of assessment and taxation which we have adopted we shall probably have an amount of taxable property of thirty millions of dollars, and a tax of one per cent. upon that amount would raise a revenue of only three hundred thousand dollars. And deducting one-fourth, as is usually done in computations of this kind, for the expenses of collection and delinquencies, it leaves the amount only two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars a year. That is the whole of the revenue to be expended. Or, if you go upon the assumption that the amount of taxable property will be forty millions of dollars, including the proceeds of the mines in the calculation, then the tax will come to four hundred thousand dollars, and there will be three hundred thousand dollars to be expended. And even if you have fifty millions of taxable property, there will only be four hundred thousand dollars of revenue, or very nearly that, to be expended. Now I would be in favor of the amendment originally proposed, so as to get at the contingent expenses and special appropriations. There is the great leak-hole to be stopped. I would prefer to leave these indispensably necessary public institutions to have a fair chance for existence. I would be in favor of restricting the Legislature in that way for a period of four years, cutting down the pay of members of the Legislature to a low figure, so that every member will know exactly what is coming to him, and cutting off the appropriations as far as possible, but leaving the public institutions of the State some chance for justice.

Mr. FITCH. One of the most distinguished, if not the most distinguished of historians, Mr. Macaulay, in speaking of the Puritans, says they very often mistook rancor for virtue. So there are a great many people in our own times, and immediately around us, who mistake their prejudices and opinions for principles. Now, sir, I imagine that we are not here for the purpose, each one of us, of forcing upon the Convention his own private, particular, and especial views, and adhering to them with tenacity of purpose, regardless of all the circumstances and surroundings, and of the exigencies which may daily arise. A modern philosopher has said that the difference between a man and a mule is, that a man can change his mind and a mule cannot. We hear a great deal said here about inconsistency, but I believe a man may think one thing one day and another thing the next, and still act consistently. I feel, for one, that if to-day I honestly entertain an opinion and to-morrow events shall have occurred in consequence of which I deem it my duty as a representative, acting in my representative capacity, to adopt a different view, I am not doing any thing inconsistent, immoral, or improper, in taking such a course. I frankly stated in the outset that I was opposed to tying up the hands of the Legislature. As a matter of theory, I believe in the largest liberty for the Legislature, but I do say that there is a necessity for restricting the Legislature, in the way I propose, because the Constitution will be rejected if we do not; and as I regard the adoption of the Constitution as of more importance than my own consistency, I have changed my views, and am now for restricting the Legislature.

Now there is another circumstance in connection with this matter. I am not making any charge upon the members of the Convention; it is a mere circumstance, which I do not pretend to account for, and I do not attribute unworthy motives to anybody. I should be very sorry to do so. But I say it is a remarkable circumstance, nevertheless, that those gentlemen who are opposed to the adoption of a State Government, and those whom we may expect hereafter to oppose it, are all now opposed, apparently, to so perfecting the Constitution as to make it acceptable to the people. It is perfectly marvellous that gentlemen who came here favoring the adoption of a State Government, and who have not been able to get their own views and those of their constituents incorporated into the Constitution, are now, although they do not say they are, here, opposed to the adoption of a State Government, and are opposing unanimously and consistently the perfecting of the Constitution, so that the people may adopt it. I cannot use the term "caucus dictation," because that was ruled out the other day, but I will say that they are opposing it consistently and unanimously.

Mr. DUNNE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman cannot impugn the motives of other members. I will not make the point of order however, if the gentleman will specify instances.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have taken notice of the infraction of order before, but for the fact that the present occupant of the chair thought the gentleman's remarks were directed to him, and desired an opportunity to reply hereafter. Therefore the Chair has allowed the gentleman to proceed in his line of remark.

Mr. FITCH. I beg leave to state that I have impugned no man's motives, and do not intend to do so.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I think, perhaps, the gentleman refers to me.

Mr. FITCH. Not at all.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Well, I will inform the gentleman, then, that he has hit my course to a dot. [Laughter.] Provided the Constitution is framed in such a shape that I can recommend it to my constituents, I shall do so, and if it does not, I shall not. I am not willing to go home to my constituents and tell my neighbors a lie about anything—at least, not unless I can make money by it. [Laughter.] If the Constitution is got up in that kind of a shape that I can conscientiously recommend it for them to adopt, I shall do so; otherwise, I shall not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Storey will proceed.

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CHAPIN. I rise to a point of order. It is this: that time is being consumed here, day after day, and hour after hour, by gentlemen impugning the motives of others, and constantly departing from the line of argument; and I do insist that it is the duty of the presiding officer to compel every member to adhere strictly to the business before the Convention. We shall not get through for a month to come, unless gentlemen are confined strictly to what is really before the Convention.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated the circumstance under which he tolerated remarks which he not only believed to be out of order, but which the gentleman himself must have known were not in order.

Mr. FITCH. I only wish to say that my colleague has spoiled one of the best jokes he ever heard in his life. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. FITCH. It seems, as a Hibernian philosopher once remarked, that the arrow which was aimed at random has hit the mark it was intended to strike. [Laughter.] I was going to say only that those gentlemen having failed to secure the adoption of the views entertained by themselves and their constituents, now seem, by a most remarkable coincidence, to be all united in opposing what is designed to perfect the instrument, so as to make it acceptable to the people. I have accepted this substitute for Section 2, because I believe it will cover all the ground originally contemplated. It will restrict the action of the Legislature; it will be acceptable to the people, and, if adopted, it will, in my judgment, secure the passage of the Constitution.

[Mr. CROSMAN in the Chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) has assumed much for those whom he says are opposed to the Constitution. I may, or I may not be one of that number. But as for my opposition to this proposition, gentlemen will bear witness that I stated, so far as the first section is concerned, that I was opposed to it, and the gentleman from Storey concurred with my views in that regard, by withdrawing it and substituting another. That, so far as I have heard from any member who advocates the views of the gentleman from Storey, or from any member who was opposed to my views in the matter of taxation, has entirely met with their concurrence and approval; and no member had spoken to the particular matter when the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) just now arose, except those who concurred with him on the subject of taxation. The gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) had spoken, and the gentleman's two colleagues, (Mr. Earl and Mr. Collins,) and I believe none other, except that the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) may have said a few words.

Mr. FITCH. And the gentleman's colleague, Mr. Lockwood.

Mr. JOHNSON. My colleague is abundantly able to defend himself against the charge of inconsistency. The gentleman from Storey has been apparently desirous all the while to leave these various matters to the Legislature—

Mr. FITCH. I wish to say, if the gentleman will permit me, that I did not fire my gun at the gentleman from Ormsby, at all; nevertheless, the gentleman from Ormsby will remember that the only two members of the Convention who have from the first declined to say on this floor that they were in favor of the adoption of a State Constitution, were the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) and the colleague of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Lockwood.)

Mr. JOHNSON. But I understand that the remarks of the gentleman from Storey were not directed to what had been said in the Convention. His remarks, I apprehend, took a much wider range than that. I suppose the gentleman referred not to what has been spoken here, but elsewhere.

Mr. TOZER. If the gentleman will allow me—as the time for the special order has arrived—I will move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BROSNAN. I would like to say only this, inasmuch as my friend on my right here has had his laugh upon the Hibernian philosopher, that there was an old philosopher once who said that men were endowed with but one tongue and two ears, in order that they may hear more and talk less. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on Mr. Tozer's motion, that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, and it was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XI, entitled Salaries, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

TAXATION.

The Convention resumed consideration, as the special order for eleven o'clock, of Article X, entitled Taxation.

The PRESIDENT. The question before the Convention is the motion of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Sturtevant) to recommit the article to the Committee of the Whole, with special instructions to amend by inserting before the word "proceeds" the word "gross."

Mr. STURTEVANT. I wish to offer an amendment to take the place of the amendment now before the Convention, because that was proposed merely on the spur of the moment. I move to recommit the article, with instructions to amend the same by striking out the words "proceeds of," and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "bullion produced by," so that it will read, "except mines and mining claims, the bullion produced by which alone shall be taxed."

Mr. WARWICK. I presume that there are very few gentlemen in the Convention who have changed their minds on this subject since the matter was previously tested. I have not desired to shut off any debate, and would not wish to do so now if the Convention really deem that any further discussion is necessary; but merely to ascertain what the opinion of the Convention is, and to save valuable time, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was not seconded.

The question was stated on Mr. Sturtevant's motion to recommit with instructions, as modified by him.

Mr. TOZER. I most earnestly and sincerely hope that this motion will not prevail. I have, heretofore, when this subject has been under discussion, expressed my views upon it as fully as I deemed that the necessities of the case required, and I have seen no reason whatever to change the views which I then expressed. Since that time I have spent three or four days among my constituents in Storey County, and have taken occasion to converse with them fully and

Wednesday,]

BANKS—STURTEVANT—BROSNAN.

[July 20.

to great length on this subject, and I find that the clause, as it was passed to engrossment here after a very lengthy discussion, meets with their approval. It meets with the approval not only of those who represent mining property, but also of those who represent other property there—mining property, real estate, and all other property which is subject to taxation under that provision. Therefore I trust that no amendment will be made, and I will not attempt to present any further argument on the subject.

Mr. BANKS. I am very free to confess, that with all my opposition to taxing the mines indiscriminately, I do not see the very serious objections to this proposed amendment that some gentlemen seem to entertain—that is, as a matter of theory. On the whole, I am rather inclined to think that the wisdom and experience of the Legislature will, in the course of a very short time, if not immediately, lead them to the conclusion to adopt this mode, which has already been adopted by the United States Government. At the same time I do see objections to absolutely prescribing in the Constitution what shall be the mode of action adopted in the taxing of the proceeds of the mines. There is one objection which now occurs to me. It is well known that there are ores which are called "refractory," which can not be profitably worked by processes in use at present within our limits, and it is therefore necessary to send such ores to San Francisco, and sometimes even to Europe for reduction. The value of such ore is very easily ascertained; indeed in practice, it is definitely ascertained, so that the owners are able to obtain advances upon it before it leaves the Pacific coast. There is, therefore, no great difficulty to be encountered in ascertaining the product of the mine, in ore, and the Legislature may hereafter see fit to provide some means of taxing the ore, in cases where the bullion is not produced. I see difficulties coming up which render this proposition more objectionable than the one we originally adopted. That leaves the Legislature full scope to ascertain the best manner, and decide just how the proceeds of the mines shall be taxed; and in my opinion, their experience and observation would be a better rule upon which to act than anything which we should be likely to adopt here, from our knowledge at the present time.

Mr. STURTEVANT. My object in introducing this amendment, is that this matter may be finally and definitely settled. It is well known that this same question has been very warmly contested in every Legislature that has convened in this Territory, and if we leave it open it will be made an issue in every future election, as to whether the mines shall be taxed on their gross proceeds, or on their net proceeds. And in case it is determined to tax only the net proceeds, it will amount to a mere nothing. That is the difficulty we have to encounter. By cunning management those proceeds can be cut down so that even the Gould & Curry will have little or nothing to pay in the way of taxation. The Legislature can put it in such a shape that if the net proceeds only are taxed we shall get no revenue whatever from the mines. Now I am satisfied that the people in the counties which are not altogether mining counties, are not willing to enter into a State Government unless this amendment, or some similar one, is adopted. This question has been argued here for days and days, and if we do not settle it, why should it not be argued in the same way in the Legislature? It has been, as I before remarked, made an issue in every election, and it is bound to be made an issue in every election hereafter, and an issue in every Legislature hereafter convened. It will be debated in both branches of the Legislature, and will create hard feelings, as it already has done. I am strongly in hopes that some amendment of this character will be adopted. It really cannot be deemed advisable for us to enter into a State Government, with a large proportion of the people of the Territory directly adverse to it. Certainly that is not good policy, as all who hear me will admit. We are, or at least we should be, a united people; and unless we are a united people it will not be possible for us to sustain a State Government.

There is another point on which I was going to speak last night. The figures show, and several members here are in possession of them, that there is now a Territorial debt of three hundred and ten thousand dollars, and here I will say that there would not have been any such Territorial debt at this time had it not been for an agreement which was entered into by the representatives of the different counties, that the mines should be taxed in order to liquidate that indebtedness. I refer particularly to the act for the encouragement of volunteering, which appropriates a hundred thousand dollars, and I know that act would not have been passed but for such an agreement. Now, sir, by passing this article without the amendment I have proposed you repudiate that action and violate the agreement then entered into, that such and such things should be done. That agreement was fairly made, at that time, and will those mining counties, through their representatives in this Convention, now turn around and say that it shall not be carried out?

Mr. BROSNAN. I must confess that I was in favor of the proposition which has been presented by my friend from Washoe (Mr. Sturtevant) up to a certain moment this morning, because I thought it would be the most certain way of getting at the results of the proceeds of the mines, to insert that word "bullion." I learn however from inquiry that the same amount of revenue would not be realized, as would be by leaving the provision as it is. And inasmuch as my vote will be governed, on this question, entirely by my judgment, on the light before me, as to which proposition will produce the most revenue to the government from the taxation of the mines, and believing as I do from what I have learned that much ore of great value—in fact, the first class of ore—has been heretofore, and will continue to be transported to foreign countries for reduction, without having the bullion extracted here, I shall vote, on that ground alone, against this amendment.

Mr. EARL. I think I can offer an amendment which will cover that ground. It is to insert after the word "bullion" the words "and ores leaving the State."

Mr. COLLINS. I rise to a point of order. It occurs to me that last night, at the time when this subject was made the special order for eleven o'clock to-day, the question was upon an amendment to insert the word "gross" before the word "proceeds," and I think that was the amendment stated this morning.

Mr. HAINES. I do not remember that any one referred to the word "gross" in the debate last night except myself. I asked as a special favor that that word should be inserted, and I believe it was at my request that the amendment was offered, as a compromise.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the condition of the question.

The SECRETARY. The question last night was on the motion of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) to recommit the article, with instructions to insert the word "gross." This morning the gentleman from Washoe, the Secretary presumed with the consent of the Convention, modified his amendment, and has presented it in another shape.

The PRESIDENT. As no action has been taken by the Convention, giving consent to the withdrawal of the original amendment, the proposition offered by the gentleman from Washoe this morning will be considered as an amendment to his own amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I will inquire whether leave was not given to withdraw the first amendment? I so understood it.

Mr. EARL. I understood it so.

The PRESIDENT. No motion was made to that effect; but the Chair was not prepared to say what the pending question was, when the amendment was presented this morning, not having heard the minutes of yesterday's proceedings read.

Mr. EARL. I understood that unanimous leave was given the gentleman from Washoe to change his amendment, and upon that I have offered this as an amendment to his amendment. Now so far as the proceeds of the mines are concerned, I am perfectly willing that the word "bullion" should be inserted, if it be the desire of the Convention; but I think as has been already said, that we should endeavor in some way to reach that finest and best class of ores which is constantly leaving the State. I think the amendment I have offered will cover that ground.

The PRESIDENT. In any event, the gentleman's amendment will be in order, being only an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. EARL. Now under this amendment we can reach the bullion; no person doubts that. There is the ore constantly leaving the State, and we can and should tax it. Under the amendment, as proposed by the gentleman from Washoe, there would be a question of doubt, but by the insertion of the amendment I have offered, I think the entire ground will be covered.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to make a suggestion in regard to that. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) who has taken certain ground in regard to this matter, whether it is by any means apparent that this will secure a greater amount of revenue than the other proposition? Admitting all that the gentleman says in regard to the ores which are leaving the State, still I understand that the amount, or relative value of those very valuable ores is comparatively small—that by far the greater amount of the proceeds of the mines is from what is called third class ore. That is the case with the Gould & Curry mine, I understand. Certainly a vast proportion of the gold and silver now produced, is from ore which is reduced within the Territory.

Mr. BROSNAN. That is because of the great quantity of that class of ore produced.

Mr. NOURSE. Precisely. Now I understand from another gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey,) one who has had experience as Assessor in Virginia City, that the Gould & Curry Mining Company returned to him an amount of something over two millions of dollars, as the amount of their gross proceeds, while the amount of bullion really produced was over four millions.

Mr. HOVEY. From three to four millions.

Mr. NOURSE. Well, nearly four millions. I think their report shows. Now it is claimed by some, and I know that other gentlemen here whose opinions are entitled to the highest respect agree with them, that the decision in regard to what constitutes the proceeds of a mine, was an iniquitous one. It does seem to me, as a matter of law, however, that that decision was correct—and I say it with all due respect for the opinions of gentlemen who differ from me. It seems to me that the ground they took is tenable, and that no other ground is. Clearly, the proceeds of a mines are nothing else than the value of the ore delivered at the mouth of the mine. If after that, by sending the ore to the mills and having it reduced, its value is increased, that increase is the product of the mill and not of the mine; and if you may take the value of the bullion after this additional labor is put upon it, to purify it from everything except the clear metal, if you may add to the value of the ore as it comes from the mine, the labor and material laid out upon it at the mill, why may you not go further, and add the labor which is expended in converting it into watches,

Wednesday,]

McCLINTON—STURTEVANT—NOURSE.

[July 20.

finger-rings, jewelry, and everything of that description? It seems to me that the proceeds of the mines can be, in any point of view, only the value of the ore as it is delivered at the mouth of the mine. The bullion contained in the ore, if it cost one thousand dollars to get it out, is not to be taken, it seems to me, as the proceeds of the mine, because it is really the proceeds of the mine and mill. Now by this amendment, the whole value of the bullion, when extracted, is taken into the account. Does it make any difference, practically, whether the reduction takes place in this State or out of it? If it is sent out of the State, and if it is the property of the miner, as of course it is, is it not taxable just the same as if it were reduced in the State? We have no lien upon it, nor have we upon any personal property, unless we happen to get hold of it on a judgment; but is there any impropriety in the taxation of the bullion, even if the reduction is performed outside of the State? Certainly, that is the way it appears to me.

But I will not take up the time of the Convention. I do not expect that this clause will be amended in accordance with my opinions of what is right, but I still have those opinions, notwithstanding they are sneered at. But if we are going to have a State Constitution, I want it as nearly right as I can get it, and then if it does not suit me, of course I shall not sustain it. It seems to me that the result of this proposition will be to tax all the gold and silver taken from the mines after it gets into the shape of bullion—its whole value in that stage, which even then is not a third part of the value of the mines: while on the other hand, by taxing the gross proceeds only, those ores in their crude state will be taxed without the additional value acquired in the process of reduction. I should suppose from the information derived from the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Hovey,) that the bullion tax would produce double the amount of revenue that would be obtained from a tax upon the proceeds, or the gross proceeds. I presume no one will deny that I am right in that.

Mr. McCLINTON. I do not think that the proposition of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) is tenable, nor do I believe that it is either law or equity; because if we say that the Gould & Curry Company in giving in their assessable bullion to the Assessor of Storey County at the sum of only two millions of dollars, when it actually amounted to nearly four millions, was only doing what they had a legal right to do, then it occurs to me—if that may be regarded as the proceeds of the mines, ruling out the gross proceeds entirely—that for the same reason the farmer might be exempted from paying taxes on anything but the net proceeds of his farm. Suppose a farmer raises a crop of wheat; by the time he has it ready for the market it has cost him a good deal of money. Say it is worth one thousand dollars, and it has cost him five hundred dollars to raise it and get it ready for market; then I say upon that same principle he would be taxed upon only five hundred dollars on that which is really worth a thousand dollars.

Mr. STURTEVANT. The gentleman from Esmeralda will observe that neither the gross proceeds nor the net proceeds are taxed on ranches, but the ranch itself, and all the improvements, and everything else, are taxed as we proposed in the start to tax the mines. But inasmuch as we could not get that, we propose to tax the proceeds as the next best thing we can get. The farmer's crops are exempted, because his ranch and everything he is worth is taxed, which includes his crops.

Mr. NOURSE. The position which these miners take, and which I think is law, although others say it is not, is, that the product of the mine is ore, and that when you send that ore to the mill, and after it has gone through the mill it is worth twenty five or fifty dollars a ton more, as the case may be, that additional twenty-five or fifty dollars is the product of the mill and not of the mine, just as in the case of the farmer, whom the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. McClinton,) speaks of, who raises a crop of wheat—he is to be taxed on the product. But suppose he chooses to go and get his wheat milled, and barrelled, and put into a shape for market, would he be properly taxed on the flour, after he had paid the expense of milling? Would he not claim it to be a tax on the wheat rather than on the flour?

Mr. McCLINTON. I think not. I think if a farmer raises a crop of wheat, and has it ready for the mill, and it is then worth five hundred dollars, and if, by converting it into flour, he thereby produces a personal property worth one thousand dollars, it is nothing but justice that he should be taxed for one thousand dollars on that property—that is, that he should be taxed on the flour, and not on the flour in its crude state, or the grain.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not think the gentleman understands me. I say suppose the farm is not to be taxed, except upon the proceeds of it?

Mr. McCLINTON. I think it should be taxed on the state it is in at the time when the assessor levies the tax. If it is flour the farmer should be taxed on the value of the flour, and if it is wheat at the time the tax is levied, he should be taxed on the value of the wheat. And as to the mine, if the bullion is in the ore, let the miner be taxed on the ore for its probable value, and if it has been reduced to bullion before the Assessor levies the tax, then it has become personal property and the Assessor must, according to law, tax the bullion for every dollar it is worth. If he does not do that, it is clear to my mind that he does not fulfil the duties of his office.

I have nothing more to say only this: that I believe honestly when we say the proceeds of the mines shall be taxed, it does mean the gross proceeds. I do not see how we can construe it to mean anything else. Because, when we say all property shall be taxed, the crops,

Wednesday,]

HAINES—WARWICK—EARL—FRIZELL.

[July 20.

as a matter of course, as soon as they are grown and harvested, must be taxed regardless of the cost of raising them; whereas, if the net proceeds alone have to come under consideration, the expense of raising the crops would have to be deducted. It is the same way with the taxation of the mines. If you say the proceeds of the mines shall be taxed, I infer that it necessarily means the gross proceeds, and that the whole proceeds will be taxed.

Mr. HAINES. I asked for this amendment as a favor from those gentlemen who had the power to pass the article as it stood, or to concede to us this modification. I did not think then, and our delegation did not think, that the term "gross proceeds" could be regarded as indefinite. But now gentlemen seem to be quite as uncertain what it means as they were in regard to the original proposition. I talked with a great many members last night, and as a general thing they expressed themselves willing to concede this change, but thought that we should insert the word "bullion" instead of "gross proceeds." They mostly expressed themselves satisfied with that, and I thought that at all events the Storey delegation was satisfied with it, from all that was said.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman cannot take up the time of the Convention by referring to matters which occurred on the outside.

Mr. HAINES. Now I am myself undecided—and will not take up the time of the Convention—I am wholly unprepared to say whether the word "bullion" or the word "proceeds" would be most clear. I believed, however, that the word "proceeds" did not fully cover the ground, and I did desire to place the word "gross" before it, so that the language might be definite, and that there might be no mistaking what was meant.

Mr. WARWICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for the purpose of making up my own mind, which is now somewhat undecided? Suppose a farmer, say in Douglas County, should buy a ranch for three or four thousand dollars, and should that very season cut from it nine thousand dollars worth of hay, is it the usual practice for him to pay a tax on the three or four thousand dollars, as the value of the ranch, or on the nine thousand dollars?

Mr. HAINES. He pays on the whole. They tax him proportionably, on the crop and on the land also. Every thing he possesses that has value he has to be taxed upon, and he has to give in under oath the entire value of his ranch—hay and all. Generally the assessment of taxes comes after the hay is cut, too, and even after the grain is sacked. There is nothing we have but what we have to pay taxes on, and we are assessed under oath.

Mr. EARL. I was in favor of this amendment originally, but now I find that it is a question of some doubt—a question upon which there has a considerable diversity of opinion sprung up in the Convention. I thought in the first place that the word "proceeds" would cover the whole ground, and I still think that it would unquestionably do so. I shall therefore fall back upon the original proposition, not on the ground of expediency alone, but because it is clear in my mind. And I find also that the other delegations are not even going to be satisfied with this change. I shall fall back upon the term "proceeds," and there remain.

Mr. HAINES. I asked this modification yesterday as a favor, but I have concluded to let those gentlemen do as they please, leaving it entirely in their hands. I do not ask any more favors.

Mr. EARL. With the leave of the Convention I will withdraw the amendment which I offered.

The PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. FRIZELL. In regard to a revenue law which will be uniform and equal, and which will bear equally upon all classes of property, and upon all tax payers, I have found that to enact such a law is extremely difficult. I begin to think, in fact, that to enact a revenue law that will bear equally upon all classes of tax payers is an impossibility, and I profess, Mr. President, to be better acquainted with the revenue laws than with any other branch of the law. Gentlemen are aware that in practice property is often taxed twice. For instance, a man may hold a mortgage, and that is taxed, and the property which is mortgaged is also taxed; and there are other instances of a similar nature which I could mention. Now, sir, the section as it stands at present I believe says that the proceeds only of the mines shall be taxed. This provision is general and broad, and of course the taxing of the mines, or the proceeds thereof, is left entirely to the Legislature. Now, Mr. President, the remarks I have to offer on this subject will be addressed principally to the gentlemen from the agricultural counties, because, not to manifest any hypocrisy or deceit, I am willing to admit frankly that I came here to do justice to my constituency. But at the same time I came here to do justice to my neighbors also.

Some fear has been expressed on the part of the members from the agricultural counties, as regards the election of members of the Legislature, and the views likely to be entertained by the members of the Legislature to come after us. Now I say to gentlemen from the agricultural counties that we have two interests in Storey County, and at all the elections there, up to the present time, the interest which is in favor of taxing the mines has prevailed. A majority of the men in Storey County may not own largely in the mines of Virginia and Gold Hill, but there are many men who own mills that do not own mines, and there are very many others who own cabins on our hills and in our valleys in Storey County, and they wish to see the mines taxed. Consequently up to the present day—and I am speaking history and facts—the voters of Storey County, at least the majority of them, have been in favor of taxing the mines. I would ask the gentlemen from the agricultural counties to pay attention to these facts, so that their minds may be easy on this question, or at any rate as easy as possible, in order that when this final vote shall be taken they may at least admit that we are willing in our county to concede everything possible. And I think the other mining counties are also willing to concede all that they possibly can concede.

HAINES—FRIZELL—NOURSE—EARL—BANKS—COLLINS.

But the point which I was seeking to make, or desired to establish, is this: that in my opinion, in order to benefit the agricultural counties to the greatest possible extent, this clause had better remain as it is. The way the language reads is, that the proceeds of the mines shall be taxed. Now what are the proceeds of the mine? That term is general and broad, and in my opinion it embraces anything and everything that proceeds from a mine and is valuable. And you will find that the Legislature will tax everything of that kind. I ask gentlemen if they do not know that to be the fact? Do they not know that everything which issues from or comes out of a mine, everything which emanates from it, your Legislature will tax under that clause as it stands? It may be bullion, or it may be ore; it may be ore which is sent out of the State; it may be first class ore, or second, third, fourth, or fifth class ore; but whatever it is, under that class it must be taxed. Are not gentlemen satisfied of that? I have the best of reasons in the world for knowing that such will be the case, and one of my reasons is, that the very life of the Legislature, or, at least, their bread and butter, will depend upon it. They will have to tax the proceeds of the mines in order to pay the judges' salaries, and the compensation of other officers—and those judges might be called upon to decide this question, although I think they will not be. I think it is perfectly plain, and that no question can arise upon it. It is for the interest, therefore, of the Legislature to tax everything which proceeds or emanates from the mine that is valuable. Not only the bullion will be taxed, but on the same day when the assessor goes round and finds the bullion, he may also find two hundred and fifty, or three hundred, or a thousand tons of ore, which has proceeded from the mine, which is property that has emanated from the mine, and he will certainly assess that.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? How is the assessor to get at the value of that ore which is lying on the surface there, and of which no man knows the value?

Mr. FRIZELL. I will answer the gentleman's question. There may be some little difficulty, the same as there would be if you were called upon to decide what your hay was worth. You cannot tell what that would be worth within possibly ten dollars a ton, but there is not much difficulty to be apprehended in that respect.

Mr. NOURSE. Suppose instead of bullion this gold and silver were worked up into jewelry, which would be saleable at four or five times the value of the bullion, would the gentleman say that that was the value of the proceeds of the mine? And if he would not, why not, as well as to say that the bullion is the proceeds of the mine?

Mr. FRIZELL. I will answer the gentleman from Washoe in this way: That this bullion would have been benefited or extracted directly out of the ore; then if after that it is refined still more and made more valuable, then some person has added a value to it—the jeweler or silversmith perhaps—and consequently some person must be assessed for this added value. It may not be the mines, but it will be the person at least in whose hands it is found. I assure the gentleman from Washoe that these assessors are going to get all the property. You of the agricultural counties admit that they get all yours, now; you say they nip everything you have, and I tell you they are equally as hard on us in the mining counties. I gave orders to my deputies only a few weeks ago to assess Mr. Wright, the Peter Funk jeweller in Virginia. He has an establishment there, and they will nip that, because they can get at it. He will be assessed upon forty thousand dollars, for the reason that he has advertised that his property is worth that amount. [Laughter.] Now, gentlemen, I am speaking between two fires, for you all know that my colleague (Mr. Tozer) is very extreme in his views.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that it is now nearly twelve o'clock, and unless the Convention desires to leave this business unfinished, some action should be taken upon it very soon.

Mr. EARL. I move that the time for recess be extended until half-past twelve o'clock, or until this business is disposed of.

The question was taken on Mr. Earl's motion, and on a division the motion was agreed to—ayes, 12; noes, 9.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that, in accordance with this motion, as soon as we get through with this subject the Chair will decide that the Convention stands adjourned for the recess.

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. Very well; I presume the time is long enough; this is probably the only speech.

Mr. COLLINS. No, sir; there will be another.

Mr. FRIZELL. Some of my remarks may not be exactly in order, but I hope I may be indulged, nevertheless, as this is an intricate and delicate subject.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair hopes the gentleman will confine himself to the question as closely as possible.

Mr. FRIZELL. What I intended to say was this, that if the representatives of the agricultural counties really think that by the insertion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) and then adding

Wednesday,]

STURTEVANT—FRIZELL—COLLINS.

[July 20.]

to it the amendment which was withdrawn by my colleague, (Mr. Earl,) they will be able to add one cent to the amount to be derived from taxing the mines, beyond the amount which would be produced from that source under the clause as it now stands, then I will go with them for it.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I will tell the gentleman one thing, and that is, that with that amendment we will go for the Constitution, and if it is not adopted we will not.

Mr. FRIZELL. I was advancing these arguments merely for the purpose of showing to the representatives from the agricultural counties that so far as their interests are concerned, the clause is better as it stands, and while doing that I wish to talk to my colleague a little as to the interests of Storey County. He must know that the Legislature which is to come after us will tax indiscriminately every thing that comes from the mines, and he must know, also, that if we provide for taxing nothing but the bullion, then nothing but the bullion can or will be taxed, because that is a definite and single term. The reason why I address my remarks to him is, that he may not rise up here and charge that I am throwing off on the interests of our constituents. I say we have a double, nay, a triple constituency to represent here. In the first place we have to do justice to all men, and in the second place we have a double constituency in Storey County, at least one half of whom desire that the mines shall be taxed, although perhaps the other half hope that they may be taxed as lightly as possible.

Having been connected with the collection of the revenue for several years, in one capacity and another, I say to gentlemen honestly that my wish and desire is, so far as obtaining a revenue from the mines is concerned, that we should suffer that section to remain just as it is. I do not think we can possibly amend it in any way by which and through which we shall reach the same amount of revenue from the mines, as we shall if we allow it to remain. Nevertheless, as I said before, if the representatives of the agricultural counties think they can do better by putting in "gross proceeds" or "bullion," I will vote with them.

Mr. STURTEVANT. The gentleman will understand that I did not speak for any one but myself, when I said we would go for the Constitution with this amendment, and not without it. What I mean to say is, that I will do whatever I can to assist in securing the adoption of the Constitution, if this amendment is inserted.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not design to detain the Convention but a few moments, but I do ask gentlemen on both sides, if there are two sides, to see to it, that what we do, we do properly and well. Now if the word "proceeds" has not a clear and distinct legal meaning, let us make it so. If we do not desire that any Legislature, with voracious grasp, shall lay hold on all the proceeds of the mines—the gross proceeds—in such manner as shall be in accordance with its own best judgment, let us not leave the language so indefinite as to warrant such a proceeding; but let us make it so plain, that if an appeal should be taken, and the question adjudicated by the proper courts, the language shall be so clear and distinct, if possible, that we may know beforehand what will be the decision of the courts.

Now there is too much indefiniteness in this word "proceeds," as it is here employed, for certainly when you take from the mines the ores which exist in them, it occurs to me that those ores really constitute the proceeds of the mines, and that the milling part of the operation, which converts them into bullion, is something subsequent to the proceeds, and additional thereto. I am inclined to think, therefore, that if the question should be carried up to the higher courts, even allowing that the Legislature would not look upon it in that light, the courts might be induced to do so, and to decide that the gross proceeds of the mines are the ores, as they are taken from the mines, or the bullion, minus the expense of teaming, reducing, and beneficiating the ores. If that is the case, and that is the desire of the Convention, let us make it plain. If our object is to tax the gross proceeds of the mines, as they shall come from the mills in the form of bullion, let us make that plain; and if it be the mind of the Convention that it shall be the net proceeds, in the form of bullion, that shall be taxed, let us make that plain. I ask gentlemen of the Convention not to leave this thing purposely and intentionally in such a condition that it is going to offer a premium for political corruption—a premium for every description of fraud at all our general elections—an inducement for one interest to conspire in its operations to bring about a certain measure, and for another interest to conspire to upset or defeat that measure. Such a state of things would have an inevitable tendency to promote lobbying in the Legislature for all future time.

I do think that this kind of indefiniteness is something which should be scouted and trampled upon by this Convention—that we should meet the question like men, facing the issue fairly and squarely. Let each and every member know what is the opinion, and the honest opinion, of every other member. For one, I have never allowed myself to train in the company of those who, while they mean one thing, say another. I want to be understood always, and I want, so far as my voice and vote go in this Convention, that there should be distinctness in their utterances. I do not want in this coming canvass to have any one man say that this clause means one thing, while another man says that it means another thing. I do not want to have to say for myself that I really do not know what it means, but that my opinion is, it means so and so, and then to have another man following me, and showing by clear argument that it means the very opposite.

Wednesday,]

NOURSE—FRIZELL—LOCKWOOD—BANKS—HAWLEY.

[July 20.]

I do not want to present the thing with two faces—one face for Storey County, and another face for the agricultural counties. Let us declare clearly what we do mean, and not practically offer a premium for political corruption, at every general election, and in every session of the Legislature.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to state, in order to avoid any doubt as to my own position, my colleague. (Mr. Sturtevant,) having stated that he would vote for the Constitution with this amendment in it, that I am not prepared to go so far as to say that. I do not say that I will support a Constitution so unjust in principle as I think this would be—I do not say it is—if it should make different rules for different interests, providing for the taxation of one interest and not for that of another. I am not prepared to say that I could vote for such a Constitution; I will leave that to be decided hereafter, upon deliberate and careful thought. I wish to say now, and I give it for what it is worth, that my ground for supporting this amendment, is simply this: that I think it better than the section as it stands at present, which, as all the members of the Convention know, is in my opinion very much worse than the amendment I myself offered. I desired to say this, only that the Convention might understand my position, and that no one might suppose I had pledged myself to vote for the Constitution, if this amendment were adopted. I do not say that I will not, but I say frankly that it does not look to me as if I could support a Constitution with such a clause in it. It seems to me—and my only wish is to be understood in this matter—that this clause providing for taxing the bullion is much nearer right than the section as it now stands, and therefore I shall vote for the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion of the gentlemen from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant,) to amend the motion to recommit, so as to instruct the committee to amend Section 1, by striking out the words "proceeds of," and inserting the words "bullion produced by," so that the clause will read—"Except mines and mining claims, the bullion produced by which alone shall be taxed."

The question on amending the motion to recommit was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 8; nays, 21—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Collins, Folsom, Haines, Nourse, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—8.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Crawford, Crosman, Dunne, Earl, Frizell, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—21.

During the voting—

Mr. FRIZELL. I desire to occupy one minute in explaining my vote. If I knew which way the majority of the members from the agricultural counties would vote, I would vote with them. I have said that I thought the section would secure the greatest amount of revenue as it now stands.

Mr. NOURSE. I hope the gentleman will vote as he thinks is right.

Mr. FRIZELL. I have also said I would vote for the "gross proceeds," if they desire it, or I would vote for levying the tax upon the bullion. I will vote "no."

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I ask to be excused from voting, and I will give as my reason for it, that I am not satisfied as to what will be the result of this measure. I took the pains to go last night to a representative of our county in the Legislature and talk with him about it, but he seemed to be unable to give me any information in regard to the probable working of this measure. From the short time I have had to investigate the subject, I really do not know how to vote.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the gentleman be excused from voting.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote, as previously stated, having been announced—

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on the original motion to recommit, with special instructions, offered by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Sturtevant.)

Mr. NOURSE. I do not want to make the Constitution odious at all, but I will call attention to only one matter—for a question is sure to be raised upon it. It says here:

"The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real, personal, and possessory, excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone shall be taxed."

Now in accordance with a well known principle of law, does not this exception, naming mines and mining claims, take them entirely out of the operation of the principle or rule of a uniform and equal rate of taxation? I only desire to suggest that to the Convention.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the motion to recommit, with the original instructions, offered by Mr. Sturtevant, to insert the word "gross" before the word "proceeds," and the vote was—yeas, 14; nays, 16—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Collins, Crawford, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Lockwood, Nourse, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—14.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Chapin, Crosman, Dunne, Earl, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—16.

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the voting—

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask to be excused from voting on this question, because I am not fully satisfied in my own mind that the operation of this provision will secure that uniformity of taxation which is desired.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman may be excused, if there is no objection.

Several members objected.

Mr. HAWLEY. As the matter of one vote will make no material difference, I will vote "aye."

The result of the vote having been announced, as previously stated—

The PRESIDENT stated the question to be upon the final passage of the article, and it was again read, as follows :

ARTICLE X.

TAXATION.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real, personal, and possessory, excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone shall be taxed; and also excepting such property as may be exempted by law for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 20; nays, 10—as follows :

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, Dunne, Earl, Frizell, Hovey, Hudson, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Proctor, Tagliabue, Tozer, Warwick, and Wetherill—20.

Nays—Messrs. Brady, Crawford, Folsom, Gibson, Haines, Hawley, Lockwood, Nourse, Sturtevant, and Mr. President—10.

So the article was passed.

At ten minutes past twelve o'clock, on motion of Mr. McCLINTON, the Convention took a recess until two o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at two o'clock, P. M.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, in the temporary absence of the President, Mr. CROSMAN was requested to act as President pro tem., and took the Chair.

COMMITTEE ON SCHEDULE.

Mr. PROCTOR. Before going into any other business, I wish to ask the Convention to allow my name to be taken from the Committee on the Schedule, and that of my colleague (Mr. Tagliabue) to be placed on that committee in my stead, for the reason that I wish to be absent this evening on account of business, and may not be able to attend with the committee when its business is transacted.

The PRESIDENT, pro tem. If there is no objection, the change suggested will be made.

On motion of Mr. TAGLIABUE, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. Proctor, to take effect to-morrow morning.

SALARIES.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the further consideration of Article XI, entitled Salaries, the President pro tem. remaining in the Chair.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President pro tem. remaining in the Chair,) and resumed the consideration of Article XI, entitled Salaries.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the pending question was the adoption of Section 2 of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Fitch,) which section, as heretofore modified, reads as follows :

SECTION 2. For the first ——— years after the adoption of this Constitution, the Legislature shall not levy a tax for State purposes exceeding ——— per cent. on the taxable property in the State, nor shall any appropriation be made exceeding the said revenue; paying—first, interest on the public debt; second, salaries of State officers; third, State Prison expenses; fourth, educational expenses; fifth, legislative, miscellaneous, and contingent expenses.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the committee rise, report the section back to the Convention, and recommend its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. There are, I believe, some other sections to be moved.

Mr. BANKS. Very well; I withdraw that motion, and will move the adoption of the section which has been read. I understood that the others had been read. I will say, in reply to a remark of a gentleman near me, that I conceive the best course is to leave the amount blank, and after we get into Convention, we can refer the whole article to a committee, for the purpose of obtaining a report as to the respective amounts proper to be inserted in the blanks. By that means we shall secure a basis of figures on which to act.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have not a very clear idea of the section as it now stands, as to the condition of the miscellaneous and contingent expenses, and I am very much afraid that it is too indefinite in that respect. In order to test the sense of the Convention, I move to strike out the words "miscellaneous and contingent expenses." I suppose that those expenses, whatever they may be, are comprehended in the term "legislative expenses," and therefore I prefer to use only the latter term.

Mr. BANKS. I would inquire of the gentleman from Storey, who has made this suggestion, whether the pay of officers of the Legislature, and expenses of that character, may not be properly classed as miscellaneous expenses. It seems to me that we ought to leave some margin of this kind.

Mr. TOZER. I think so, too.

Mr. BROSNAN. I made the suggestion only to get information from gentlemen who are better posted.

Mr. HOVEY. I certainly am unable to see what object we can have in view in restricting the Legislature in one article previous to this, in which they are prohibited from incurring a debt of over three hundred thousand dollars, if we are also going to restrict them here. If gentlemen want to fix the salaries of the State officers, I am willing to do so, but I am not willing to go into all these items and restrict the amount of the appropriations to be made by the Legislature.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have intended from the commencement, whenever I could have an opportunity, to move to strike out the entire article; and if it is in order, I will make that motion now.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have stricken out the entire article, as it was in the old Constitution, and are now trying to perfect the substitute.

Mr. PROCTOR. But I propose now to strike out the substitute entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee are trying to perfect the substitute, and it will not be in order to move to strike it out until it is perfected. Then it will be for the committee either to adopt or reject it.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not understand that the substitute has been stricken out. There has been a substitute introduced, and I understand there is an amendment offered.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a substitute offered by the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Fitch.) The gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) called for a division of the question upon that, and the question was first taken upon striking out the original article, and that prevailed. Now the committee are trying to perfect the substitute, before taking the question upon inserting it. That is the condition of the question, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. McCLINTON. As I understand it, we have stricken out the entire article, and it is not competent now for the committee to strike out the substitute proposed until after it is perfected as nearly as possible. Then a motion to strike out I understand will be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan.)

Mr. BROSNAN. If my friend from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) will withdraw his motion, I will move that the whole article be referred to a select committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman from Storey only desires, I suppose, to indicate the course to be pursued; that is, that the committee rise, and recommend the reference of the whole article to a select committee. Several gentlemen have suggested, however, that we have not yet sufficiently considered the subject to refer it. We have not sufficiently considered it, even to be prepared to present, in proper shape, our own views upon it. I would like to have it referred at a proper time to some committee, not only to fill the blanks, but also to consider the proposition involved in the last part of this section, relative to contingent expenses.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will modify my motion according to the gentleman's suggestion, with a view of so shaping our course that the article may be referred to a select committee.

Mr. BANKS. I suggest that a motion to recommend a reference takes precedence of a motion to amend. I understand that the gentleman from Storey moves that the committee rise, and report the article back to the Convention, with a recommendation that it be referred to a special committee.

Mr. PROCTOR. I would like to see that motion amended so as to refer the article to the Committee on Schedule. My reason is, that I suppose all we propose to do, so far as the regular salaries are concerned, is to provide for the salaries and fees of office, until such time as the Legislature can have an opportunity to fix them as to them may seem proper. I understand that to be entirely within the province of the Committee on the Schedule, and it seems to me that it would be proper, for that reason, to refer the whole subject to that committee. I do not suppose that this Convention proposes to fix permanently the salaries and fees of office. We have provided that the debt of the State shall not exceed three hundred thousand dollars, and I do not think we need to put any further restriction upon the Legislature, so far as appropriations are concerned. I think, at all events, that this provision need only be made to apply to such expenses as may be incurred previous to the meeting of the first Legislature.

Mr. WARWICK. If I were a resident of the county of Ormsby, and had an excellent business in an office within ear-shot of the capital, so that I could be at my post in a Convention, or in the Legislature, and at any moment step out and attend to my business, losing nothing by my patriotism in giving my services to the Convention or the Legislature, I think I might possibly be in favor of this amendment; but, inasmuch as it seems to me virtually nothing more nor less, when you come to figure the thing down, than a property qualification for members of the Legislature, I object for one to anything of the kind. It is virtually saying to a large class of the people of this State—"Gentlemen, you shall not represent any portion of the people of the State of Nevada in the Legislature unless you are able to pay your own expenses." Now, sir, it may be, as the gentleman from Humboldt remarks, a very good qualification for a member of the Legislature, but he will excuse me if I find myself unable to look through his spectacles. I say, if you are going to institute a property test, say so at once. Either say that a member of the Legislature shall be worth so much, as they do in South Carolina, or else place the members of the Legislature on the same footing as you do all other officers. Why should you prefer one class of officers to another? Is not your legislator just as necessary as your Controller, your Governor, or any other official? But by this proposition you virtually say to the members of the Legislature—"Gentlemen, you shall exhaust the Treasury of the State in paying every body else, and after all the money is gone you may take the rest." [Laughter.] Now that is the gist of the proposition, disguise it as you will. It is virtually saying that no man unless he has property shall come into the Legislature of the new State. There are plenty of gentlemen. I am free to admit, who are willing to sport their patriotism, and are willing to pay for the privilege of coming here. Some of us have paid pretty heavily, and have felt it a grievous burden, although we still desire to serve the State and our constituencies. But other gentlemen may not be able to bear the burden. It seems to me that this amendment would have come with better grace from the other end of the State rather than from those living within pistol-shot of the capital—from men whose business is scarcely interrupted at all by attending to their legislative duties.

NOURSE—DUNNE.

[July 20.

If you introduce this clause into the Constitution, what is the result? A poor man in the county of Lander may be as good a citizen, as patriotic, and as able a man as though he were worth a hundred thousand dollars, and able to come here and support himself in style, and still you say to him virtually that if he is elected he must pay out his money in coming here and going home again, and pay all his expenses while he is here, and after all the resources of the State are exhausted he shall take depreciated scrip in payment, which will not even come into the market for a year or two. The consequence is, that you adopt a provision that no man, unless he is a man of property, shall be the representative of any portion of the people of the State in the Legislature. I insist, therefore, the members of the Legislature being as necessary to the State as any other class of officers which go to make up the government of the State, that they should be paid, and not left in a state of starvation, as they would be by this provision. For that reason, I oppose this proposition, although it does appear to commend itself to the judgment of some gentlemen in the Convention, for whose judgment I entertain the highest respect. In my opinion, it is neither more nor less than a property qualification, and as such it would be a disgrace to our Constitution.

Mr. NOURSE. I am unable to see this matter in the light which the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) does, with whom I have so often voted that I shall be pained to part from his company now, nor yet in the same light as the gentleman from Lander, (Mr. Warwick,) who has last spoken. I think I see a broad distinction between the duties and responsibilities of members of the Legislature, and those of any other officers of the State Government, in this matter. The point is made here—Why do we not treat them all alike? Why give the judges, for instance, a preference over the members of the Legislature? Are not the members of the Legislature needed as much as the judges or the Governor or the State Controller? True, but the judges, and all the other officers, have no power over this matter of the finances. It is the Legislature alone that has the power to provide for paying out money. Now the general complaint in respect to all Legislatures is wasteful legislation. And notwithstanding the doctrine which has been so often preached here, that there will be legislators as wise as we are—and I do not doubt it—still, I say, the responsibility is divided among so many that it is very easy to get a State into debt, and its finances embarrassed.

Now in regard to this proposition, I did not offer it. It was written by a gentleman here who is not a member of the Convention, and handed to me, and it met my approval, in principle, although I do not know about the details; and it was brought to the attention of the Convention by another gentleman. Still the proposition seems to me to be a good one. It gives the members of the Legislature a motive for economy which they never had before. As long as they do not themselves feel the pinch of the narrow means which the State is certainly going to suffer under, they will not be as economical as if that necessity pressed directly upon them. Now what we propose by this arrangement is, not that other things than the compensation of the Legislature shall take up the entire revenue of the State, but that sufficient revenue shall be provided to carry on the government comfortably, and if one per cent. is not enough let us make it higher, so as to have enough to carry on the government comfortably and economically, but only reasonably so. Then by this proposition we say to the Legislature, in substance, "Now you have enough means to carry on the government, and it is for you to manage as you choose; but you must remember that you have only so much money, and out of that money the other bills must be paid before yours."

Mr. DUNNE. I rise to a point of order. I do not see that we accomplish anything by discussing the merits of this question, when the question before the committee is on a motion to rise, and I believe that on that motion it is not in order to discuss the merits.

Mr. NOURSE. I only dissembled the merits of the question, because gentlemen who spoke before me did so, and I really did not know what the immediate question was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was disposed to take that view in relation to the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. NOURSE. I had about got through, and do not not desire more than three minutes longer. ["Leave, leave!"] Well, we say to the members of the Legislature, as we might say to a salaried clerk, or anybody else in our employment, "You have so much money to do business with, and it is enough, and now to make sure that you will be economical, it is provided that the other bills shall be paid first, and your bills last. If you manage it as you ought to, there will be plenty of money to pay you, and pay you promptly; but if you do not, if you are wasteful and extravagant in your expenditures, if you are thriftless and careless in respect to the money of the State, and it is all gone before it comes to your turn, then it is your own fault." If we did not give the Legislature enough to properly carry on the government with, the argument of the gentleman from Lander would be correct; but if we do allow them enough, then all we do by this proposition is to give them a personal and pecuniary motive to be economical and prudent. That is the way it looks to me.

Mr. WARWICK. Now, how does it work on the simple question of mileage? You allow the members, in State scrip, thirty cents per mile, as mileage, but they have to pay in coming here from Reese River, over thirty-two cents per mile, in gold. For that they have to take, when they can get it, State scrip, at thirty cents on the dollar, perhaps, and they will have to pay that out at the rate of seventy-five cents per mile in returning. Now how are they to get their pay, if the Legislature is ever so economical?

Mr. NOURSE. I will say, in answer to that—

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will remember that the question is on the motion to rise and recommend the reference of the substitute to a special committee.

Mr. DUNNE. I hope the motion will be modified so as to refer it to the Committee on the Schedule, and for this reason: that nearly all the remaining business is before that committee, and they desire to sit to-night to finish up. If it is referred to that committee, they will have it all in their hands, and can go through with it at once.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will accept the suggestion, and move that the committee rise and recommend the reference of the subject to the Committee on the Schedule.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XI, entitled Salaries, had made some progress therein, and recommend that the Convention refer the article to the Committee on Schedule.

The report was accepted, and on motion of Mr. DUNNE, the article was referred to the Committee on Schedule.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that the next article, the one entitled Education, has been referred to the Committee on Education, which has not yet reported. I will therefore move that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the chair,) on Article XIII, entitled Militia, Article XIV, entitled Public Institutions, Article XV, entitled Boundary, and Article XVII, entitled Amendments. I apprehend that neither of these articles will require much time for their consideration.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President pro tem. remaining in the Chair,) for the consideration of the several articles referred to such committee.

MILITIA.

Article XIII, entitled Militia, was taken up and read as follows:

ARTICLE XIII.

MILITIA.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for the organizing and disciplining the militia of this State, for the effectual encouragement of volunteer corps, and the safe keeping of the public arms.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall have power to call out the militia to execute the laws of the State, or to suppress insurrection or repel invasion.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move the adoption of the article.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

Article XIV, entitled Public Institutions, was taken up and read as follows:

ARTICLE XIV.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

SECTION 1. Institutions for the benefit of the insane, blind, and deaf and dumb, and such other benevolent institutions as the public good may require, shall be fostered and supported by the State, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. A State Prison shall be established and maintained in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and provision may be made by law for the establishment and maintenance of a House of Refuge for juvenile offenders.

SEC. 3. The respective counties of the State shall provide, as may be prescribed by law, for those inhabitants who, by reason of age and infirmity, or other misfortunes, may have claim upon the sympathy and aid of society.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the article be adopted as a whole.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

BOUNDARY.

Article XV, entitled Boundary, was taken up. The SECRETARY read as follows:

ARTICLE XV.

BOUNDARY.

SECTION 1. The boundary of the State of Nevada shall be as follows:

Beginning at the point of intersection of the forty-second degree of north latitude, with the thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence running south on the said thirty-eighth degree of west longitude until it intersects the northern boundary line of New Mexico; thence due west along the northern boundary line of New Mexico until such line intersects the easterly boundary of the State of California; thence northerly along the eastern boundary line of the State of California until such line intersects the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence east with said forty-second degree of north latitude to the place of beginning.

And whensoever Congress shall authorize the addition to the Territory or State of Nevada of any portion of the territory on the easterly border of the foregoing defined limits, not exceeding in extent one degree of longitude, the same shall thereupon be embraced within and become a part of this State. And furthermore provided, that all such territory lying west of and adjoining the boundary line herein prescribed, which the State of California may relinquish to the Territory or State of Nevada, shall thereupon be embraced within and constitute a part of this State.

Wednesday,]

CHAPIN—BROSNAN—WARWICK—DUNNE—NOURSE.

Mr. CHAPIN. In regard to the boundary of the State, I think that is prescribed for us in our Enabling Act. It will be found in Section 2 of that Act.

Mr. BROSNAN. I suppose the description there given does not vary from that in the Organic Act, and the description in the section as read, is taken from the Organic Act, with the exception, or rather with the addition of the last paragraph in the section, commencing with the words "and whensoever Congress shall authorize the addition," etc., and continuing to the end of that section. That portion was added by the committee in the former Convention, with the expectation that we could obtain from Congress an extension of one degree on our eastern boundary, and also with the expectation that we could compromise in some way with the State of California, so as to make the summit of the Sierras the western boundary line of our State.

Mr. CHAPIN. It strikes me that we have nothing to do but to adopt the boundary which is given us by Congress, and I now move, therefore, to amend this section by adopting the boundary as prescribed in the Enabling Act. Will the Secretary read the description there given?

The SECRETARY read from the Enabling Act as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said State of Nevada shall consist of all the territory included within the following boundaries, to wit: Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington, with the thirty-seventh degree of north latitude; thence due west along said thirty-seventh degree of north latitude to the eastern boundary line of the State of California; thence in a northwesterly direction along the said eastern boundary line of the State of California to the forty-third degree of longitude west from Washington; thence north along said forty-third degree of west longitude, and said eastern boundary line of the State of California, to the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence due east along the said forty-second degree of north latitude to a point formed by its intersection with the aforesaid thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence due south down said thirty-eighth degree of west longitude to the place of beginning.

Mr. WARWICK. I think there is another discrepancy here, sir, for the reason that this gives us the thirty-seventh degree—I refer now to the article just read—as our eastern boundary, while the Enabling Act, it appears, gives us the thirty-eighth degree. Again, the Enabling Act gives us the forty-third degree on the west, while this article, as it is now before us, restricts us to the forty-second degree. Consequently, I think that in order to have this provision in consonance with the Enabling Act, by the authority of which we are framing the Constitution, we had better adopt Section

2 of the Enabling Act just as it stands, in place of this article which has been read. I therefore move to amend the section describing the boundary line, by adopting, in place of the language there found, the language employed in the Enabling Act, so far as that describes the boundaries of the State.

Mr. DUNNE. I think the discrepancy to which the gentleman refers, consists mainly of a transposition in the description. In the Organic Act, the description begins with the northern boundary line, running south, whereas in the Enabling Act, they begin at the southern boundary line. There may be some other differences, but I think it will be found that this transposition makes all of the difference there really is.

Mr. BROSNAN. I do not wish the vote to be taken on this proposition, until we are able to understand it thoroughly. I believe this article was correctly drawn originally, but as my friend from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) says, there is a difference in the reading, because a different point of commencement has been taken by those who framed the Enabling Act.

Mr. WARWICK. Has not a degree been added more than we looked for?

Mr. BROSNAN. No, sir. I will state to the gentleman, that at the time this article was drawn in the former Convention, it was understood that there was to be an amendment to the original Organic Act of the Territory. I believe it is now understood that the Organic Act of the Territory was subsequently amended, and an additional degree attached or included within our boundaries by an amendatory Act of Congress, passed in the succeeding session. Hence, having taken that in, if I am correct as to the fact, I suppose that in framing the Enabling Act they have incorporated it into this description, giving us that additional degree. The President of the Convention, who is not now present, is more thoroughly acquainted with this matter than I am, but I understand that to be the fact in the case. It is true, I am informed, that the Organic Act has been so amended as to increase our area to the extent of one degree.

Mr. WARWICK. I suggest that we had better allow this matter to lie over for a few minutes, until it can be thoroughly examined and understood. We can meanwhile go on with other business. I will withdraw my motion to amend, and move instead that a committee of three be appointed by the Chair to compare the two Acts of Congress, and report upon the framing of this description of our boundary; and I hope that the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) will be one of that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion will not be in order, as we are now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NOURSE. It strikes me that it is hardly necessary to refer this matter. I think, myself, from the casual glance I have been able to give it, that the language in the old Constitution

Wednesday.]

CHAPIN—WARWICK—NOURSE—COLLINS—BANKS.

[July 20.]

describes the same territory as that in the Enabling Act. But whether it does or not, I suggest that it would be better to have our boundary defined exactly in the words of the Enabling Act. Admitting that the territory described may be the same in both, still is it not better to adopt the very words of the Act under the authority of which this Convention has assembled? That will save the possibility of all question on the subject.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope there will be no reference of the matter, and I agree perfectly with the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) that it would be better to adopt the language of Section 2 of the Enabling Act, so far as that goes, and then we can preserve the latter part of the section in relation to the future extension of our boundary on the east and on the west, by the action of Congress, or of the State of California.

Mr. WARWICK. I will renew the motion to amend by adopting the language of the Enabling Act describing the boundaries, in place of that which stands in the section, leaving the latter portion of the section as it now reads.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken on the adoption of the article as amended, and it was adopted.

AMENDMENTS.

Article XVII, entitled Amendments, was next taken up.

The SECRETARY read Section 1, as follows:

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in the Senate or Assembly, and if the same shall be agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two Houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their journals, with the ayes and noes taken thereon, and referred to the Legislature then next to be chosen, and shall be published for three months next preceding the time of making such choice. And if in the Legislature next chosen as aforesaid such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each House, then it shall be the duty of the Legislature to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people in such manner and at such time as the Legislature shall prescribe; and if the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the Legislature voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the Constitution.

Mr. NOURSE. I had intended to propose an amendment to that section, but I have not yet drawn it up. I will state, however, with the permission of the Convention, what the amendment is. I propose to provide that the Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, at a regular session; the amendment so passed by the Legislature being submitted to the people at the ensuing general election, so as to shorten the time required for amending the Constitution one year. It seems to me that in the infancy of our State, it will be entirely expedient for us to adopt that course. We may at the same time provide that, after an amendment has once been made in that manner, the rule shall thereafter be that which is laid down in this section, requiring the adoption of any amendment by two succeeding Legislatures. I have been the more strongly impressed with the propriety of this idea, for the reason that it was agreed on all hands here the other day, that in the course of two or three years, notwithstanding our present condition is such that we are unable to make any appropriation for railroad purposes, we may very probably be in a condition to make such appropriations, and by adopting a provision of this kind the people would be enabled to amend their Constitution in that particular in the course of only two years; whereas, under the section as it now stands, if we have biennial sessions, it will take about four years. I am not prepared to make a motion to amend the section, because I have not yet drawn up any amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. I suggest that the article be referred to a committee.

Mr. WARWICK. Cannot the Convention pass on to other business, and allow the gentleman from Washoe to have a few moments to draw up the amendment he desires to offer? As he explains the amendment it certainly strikes me favorably.

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will, if there is no objection, proceed to read Section 2, and when the reading is concluded, the gentleman can, if he pleases, offer his amendment to Section 1, as a general amendment.

The SECRETARY read Section 2, as follows:

SECTION 2. If at any time two-thirds of the Senate and Assembly shall think it necessary to revise and change this entire Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors at the next election for members of the Legislature, to vote for or against a Convention, and if it shall appear that a majority of the electors voting at such election have voted in favor of calling a Convention, the Legislature shall, at its next session, provide by law for calling a Convention to be held within six months after the passage of such law, and such Convention shall consist of a number of members not less than that of both branches of the Legislature.

Mr. NOURSE. I will make one single suggestion in regard to this section. It seems that we are not going to have any change in our Constitution unless two-thirds of both the Senate and the Assembly give an idea that it is necessary not only to revise but to change the instrument. Now it seems to me that it would be better to say here, that they may call a Convention, if they shall think it necessary, to cause a revision of the Constitution. I will move to amend the section by striking out the words "revise and change," and inserting instead the words, "cause a revision of."

Mr. BANKS. The only argument that I have to adduce on this subject, is one which I fear will not have much weight, and that is, that this is the language of the California Constitution, and I prefer it because I am prejudiced in favor of that Constitution.

Wednesday,]

NOURSE—BANKS—FRIZELL—LOCKWOOD—GIBSON—BROSNAN.

[July 20.

Mr. NOURSE. But the gentleman surely does not think it is the best language?

Mr. BANKS. I will not argue the point.

Mr. FRIZELL. This first section contemplates reasonable but limited changes; and then the second section, as I understand, looks to an entire change in the frame-work of the Constitution. I think the remarks of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) are correct, inasmuch as there appears to be a radical difference in the meaning and object of the two sections.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not think the gentleman quite understands me, and I will endeavor to explain my meaning more fully. The first section refers only to changes in one or two single articles in the Constitution, which may be submitted as simple propositions to the people; but if the Legislature shall by and by think that we have outgrown the instrument, as it were, and do not want merely to make a slight change, but to revise the instrument generally, by adopting such amendments throughout the whole body of it, as may be thought best, then it is provided in this second section what shall be the way to do it. Now it is only the wording of this provision that I want to amend. As we have it now, if the Senate and Assembly shall think it necessary to "revise and change" the entire Constitution, that is, to change the whole of it, then they are to call a Convention, etc. Now I do not think we mean that they shall change the whole instrument in case a Convention is called, but rather that they shall revise the whole of it, and change only such portions as they may think fit.

Mr. FRIZELL. I suggest that the difficulty could be remedied by striking out the word "entire."

Mr. NOURSE. I think it will be better to adopt the amendment I have offered—to strike out the words "revise and change," and substitute the words, "cause a revision of."

The question was taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. Nourse, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I have two amendments to propose to Section 2, which I will offer separately, however, as they are not necessarily connected. The first amendment I offer is, to strike out all before the word "necessary," and insert in lieu thereof the following words:

"If at any time the Legislature by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each House shall determine that it is"—

The words to be stricken out are these:

"If at any time two-thirds of the Senate and Assembly shall think it"—necessary, etc.

That may mean two-thirds of all the members elected, or it may mean two-thirds of those present and voting. I prefer to have it clear and well-defined, so as to require two-thirds of the members elected, inasmuch as we have established that rule in all previous cases.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. Now I propose the following, as an addition to Section 2:

"In determining what is a majority of the electors voting at such election, reference shall be had to the highest number of votes cast for the candidates for any office, or on any question, at such election."

Gentlemen who have lived in California for any length of time, know that attempts have been unsuccessfully made there, under precisely the same language as that contained in this original section, to secure a revision of the Constitution of that State; and it will be remembered that it was held by one party that a majority of all the votes cast at the election was required to carry the proposition for calling a Convention, while by others it was held that a majority of the votes cast on the particular question submitted, should be deemed sufficient. Again, another question subservient to this, arose, namely: What office should it be, the vote upon which should determine the question of a majority?—whether it should be the vote on members of the Legislature, Governor, or something else, that should be taken as the criterion of the number of the votes cast at that election? Suppose the question came up, as naturally it did, at the first, as to what number of persons voted, and it was found that, for members of the Legislature there were, for instance, one hundred thousand votes cast, and for some other officers a less number of votes; then what should be taken as the number of people voting? I propose to have that matter defined in our Constitution, by providing that not only shall there be a majority of the whole number of votes cast on the proposition, but also, that in determining that majority, we shall take the whole number of votes cast on the question, or for the candidate having the highest number of votes.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I do not quite understand yet, but I presume the explanation is clear enough. Suppose there are two candidates for Governor, does the gentleman propose to count the votes for both the candidates?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir; all the candidates.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Then I am for it.

Mr. BANKS. For instance, if we take the votes cast for Governor there may be two or three candidates, and I mean by this amendment that we shall take the aggregate vote for that office as the criterion to determine the whole number of votes, and also to settle the question in regard to whether the votes cast on the constitutional question is sufficient to be a majority.

The question was taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, and it was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that Section 2, as amended, be adopted.

The question was taken, and the section was adopted.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move to amend Section 1 of this Article by striking out the words "a majority," and inserting, in lieu thereof, the words "a two-thirds vote." Also by striking

Wednesday.]

DUNNE—BROSNAN—NOURSE—BANKS.

[July 20.]

out all after the words "ayes and noes taken thereon," down to, and including the words, "elected to each house," and inserting instead simply the word "and." Then the section, if amended as I propose, will read as follows :

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in the Senate or Assembly, and if the same shall be agreed to by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to each of the two houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their journals, with the ayes and noes taken thereon, and then it shall be the duty of the Legislature to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people in such manner and at such time as the Legislature shall prescribe; and if the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the Legislature voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the Constitution.

Mr. DUNNE. I will move an amendment. I believe it is not desired that this shall be a permanent feature of the Constitution, but only that it shall apply for a certain number of years, and then the provision, as the section stands now, is designed to take effect. I think the object can be better reached by leaving the section as it stands and adding a proviso that if at any time within three, four, or six years, as may be determined upon, it shall be deemed advisable to amend the Constitution, then it may be done in this manner.

Mr. BROSNAN. If the gentleman from Humboldt will draw an amendment in that form I will accept it.

Mr. DUNNE. The gentleman from Storey has the idea of it, and can better draw it himself.

Mr. NOURSE. While that is being done I wish to submit a few ideas upon the principle of the proposed change. It has always seemed to me that the great object of a fundamental law is permanency—that it is simply for the sake of permanency that the Legislature itself may not be permitted at its pleasure to change the fundamental law. Now the operation of this section, as it now stands, is to provide that no sudden whirlwind of passion, or feeling, or of fancied interest, shall bring about the hasty adoption of an amendment perhaps radical in its character, and changing important features in our Constitution. I could cite the Convention to an instance of a State which had a provision in its constitution forbidding the incurring of any debt above two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, but the lapse of this space of a year for an amendment was not required, so as to give the people time to think between the action of one Legislature and that of another. On the contrary, the Legislature was permitted by a two-thirds vote to propose an amendment, and submit it to the people directly, and if then it were ratified by the people it was thereupon adopted, as a part of the fundamental law of the State. There came up in that State the case of railroad corporations desiring the loan of the State credit, and the matter came up, too, at a time of unparalleled distress in the State. It was represented that if this thing could be done the prevailing pecuniary distress would be relieved at once. The proposition was set forth in the most glowing light. Those railroad corporations were not sparing in the expenditure of their means, in the Legislature and elsewhere. They sent orators, and bands of music around, and all that sort of thing. The result was that within the space of some two or three months the constitutional amendments asked for were passed by the Legislature, authorizing the State to contract an indebtedness of five millions of dollars. The proposition having passed the Legislature, was forthwith submitted to the people, and adopted by them, with a perfect whirlwind of excitement, by a vote of not less than five to one. And yet within one year thereafter, if the question had been again submitted, there would have been a vote of five to one the other way. Now would it not have been better for that State if this one year had been allowed to elapse, giving the people an opportunity for the sober second thought? Would it not have been better to suffer the year to elapse before taking a vote upon the proposition to amend the Constitution? It seems to me that the arguments are very strong in favor of requiring such a lapse of time, so that when one Legislature shall have passed an amendment, then the people shall have a year to think of it, and if at the end of that year, the following Legislature again passes the amendment, the probability is that the people will ratify it. Then, and not till then, it will become part of the Constitution, adopted upon due reflection, and not subject to the charge of being passed by means of excitement and passion.

Now it seems to me that this is a guard which the people should have in their State Constitution, against even their own rash haste, excitement, and inconsiderate action. For we should recognize the fact, that a community may be carried away by excitement, the same as a legislative body, or an individual may be, and may do things under such influences, which in their cool and sober moments they will have occasion to regret. It has therefore been found a good plan to guard not only against the hasty action of the people's servants, but also against that of the people themselves, when the time comes for their action in this matter of constitutional amendments and changes. For these reasons I should be very sorry, for one, to see that year for cool reflection stricken out.

Mr. BANKS. Is it not contemplated that provision shall be made by which the Legislature shall meet yearly for the first two or three years? Gentlemen all around me say that is the understanding. Now if that is the case, then certainly for two or three years, at least, the time required for the final adoption of any amendment would be very short, under the section as it now stands. The action of two successive Legislatures is required, but the Legislature meeting every year, only one year would

LOCKWOOD—BROSNAN—FRIZELL—CHAPIN—BANKS.

[July 20.

intervene between the original proposition and the final adoption of whatever amendments it may be deemed necessary to make in the Constitution. In that way, it seems to me the Legislature will be able to accomplish all that will become necessary within a few years, and I do not see, in that view of the matter, that any amendment of the section is necessary.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I would like to say a few words while the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) is preparing his amendment, and whenever he is ready to present it I will stop. I heartily concur in the sentiments which have been expressed by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse.) Sir, I consider that the fundamental law of this future State would be placed almost in the light of a legislative enactment, by the change contemplated. I would consent to have it provided, that the time for submitting these amendments, after action on them by one Legislature, shall not be extended beyond two years; but further than that I do not think I can conscientiously go. In my opinion, the provision as it now stands is ample for amending the Constitution. It may be that I have less confidence in the people than others, but I do believe that if there shall be a desire to change the Constitution for any purpose, no great damage can ensue from allowing the amount of time prescribed in this section to intervene between the first passage of the proposition for amendment and its final adoption. I certainly think that it is well to provide that changes shall not be made for any slight or trivial objects or purpose—that it shall only be under extraordinary circumstances that we are to be called upon to change the fundamental law of the State.

Another thing which I intended to say, was this: that if we make this amendment, public speakers might go out, in the interest of the opposition to the Constitution, and say that notwithstanding we have made certain restrictions in the Constitution, those restrictions are only adopted for the purpose of electioneering, and that just as soon as we get the Constitution fastened on the people, we propose to amend it to suit ourselves, and to suit the politicians.

Mr. BROSNAN. The amendment I propose is now ready. It leaves the section as printed to stand, and my motion is to amend it by inserting the proviso, which I have drawn up, after the words "as the Legislature shall prescribe." I will ask the Secretary to read the section as it will stand with the proviso inserted.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in the Senate or Assembly; and if the same shall be agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two Houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon, and referred to the Legislature then next to be chosen, and shall be published for three months next preceding the time of making such choice. And if in the Legislature next chosen as aforesaid, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each House, then it shall be the duty of the Legislature to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people in such manner and at such time as the Legislature shall prescribe; provided, that if at any time within four years after the adoption of this Constitution it shall be advisable to amend the same, such amendment or amendments may be proposed in the Senate or Assembly, and if the same shall be agreed to by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each of the two Houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon. It shall then be the duty of the Legislature to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people in such manner and at such time as the Legislature shall prescribe, and if the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the Legislature voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the Constitution.

Mr. FRIZELL. Before the vote is taken on that amendment, I desire to say that I recollect the other night, when this question came up before the Judiciary Committee, it was then and there conceded, for some reasons which we supposed to be good, but which at the present time, however, I do not recollect distinctly, that it would be right and reasonable to provide that one Legislature, by a two-thirds vote, might recommend any change in the Constitution, and then that another Legislature might vote upon and adopt such change, if it deemed proper, taking the proposition as a whole. Although those reasons do not occur to my mind at the present time, still, I will say I believe that a State Constitution ought not to be changed on any slight pretext, or without great care and deliberation. On the other hand, a Constitution is like any other piece of ponderous machinery, that may or may not be perfect in all its parts, and when that machinery is made and put together by thirty-nine mechanics, which, I believe, is the number composing this Convention, it may possibly be that the entire machine will not at first work smoothly in every respect. Therefore, for the first two or three years, it may not be out of the way to allow one Legislature, by a two-thirds vote, their action being subsequently sanctioned by the people, to change the Constitution in some particulars. I think there are clearly two sides to this question.

Mr. CHAPIN. If the reasons which were presented in the Judiciary Committee were not important enough to fix themselves upon my colleague's mind, so that he could retain them two days, I am inclined to think they are not entitled to much weight. It occurs to me that we had better let this section remain as it is. That is my idea of it. I do not want to see this fundamental law easily or suddenly changed.

Mr. BANKS. I dislike exceedingly to object to any proposition submitted by the gentleman from Storey, who has offered this amendment, for I know that he has given the subject much attention, and he is generally on the conservative side. Nevertheless I shall be compelled to vote against this proviso. The only argument which appears to me to possess much force, in favor of the incorporation of the proviso, is that circumstances may arise at an early day which will imperatively demand a change in the Constitution, and that by the provision in Section 1, as it stands, it will require two sessions of the Legislature, and then a vote of the people, to effect such change. Now, in the first place, I think we ought to discriminate as far as possible against a change, for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) and the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Lockwood.) But I have this farther objection, that if it shall become apparently indisputably necessary to procure a change in the Constitution, in a space of time shorter than that required for submitting it to two successive sessions of the Legislature, resort may be had to the power conferred in Section 2, of calling a Convention. That could not involve a very great amount of expense, and if the requirements or exigencies of the time be such as absolutely to demand a change, the people would not grumble at the expense. Certainly I think that these two sections, as they now stand, present all reasonable facilities for amending the Constitution. Section 2 provides, as we have amended it, for action by one Legislature to call a meeting of the representatives of the people in Convention, and then another election is to be held within six months thereafter. Within six months, then, after the first action on the proposed change, the Convention may be held, and the change required in the Constitution may at once be made. I think we have here all the power required for amending the Constitution, and at the same time we have all the safeguards which other States have found it desirable to throw around their fundamental laws. It will be remembered that, in the history of all new States, the dangers to the government have arisen in the early periods of their history. And the reasons for this are obvious. The people are to a great extent unacquainted with the individuals whom they are compelled by the necessities of the case to vote for and elect to office. So it was in California, and so it has been in all the western States. Men come into the new community who have some talent, and are able, therefore, to secure the confidence of the masses, but in many cases they may not be worthy of confidence. Probably our history will be the same, until we have lived here and met each other in private life and in public stations, long enough to become so familiarly acquainted with each other that we can judge with tolerable accuracy as to the honesty and fitness of aspirants for office. There will be less danger, therefore, in that respect, after the lapse of two or three years. I hope, for these reasons, that if this conservative provision is to be thrown around our Constitution as a safeguard in any stage, it will be in the first few years of our history as a State.

McCLINTON—BROSNAN.

[July 20.

Mr. McCLINTON. I am not entirely satisfied with the section as it will read, with the last proposed amendment, and I am now preparing another amendment. I suppose it will not be in order at the present time, but if gentlemen will have the courtesy to wait a few minutes, I will endeavor to have it finished, and submit it to the consideration of the Convention. I am satisfied that it will meet the views of almost every member. The proposition I intend to submit, while it still requires the action of two Legislatures to amend the Constitution, will yet, to a great extent, prevent one faction, or one portion of the people, from carrying through an amendment which would be objectionable to a very large minority opposed to them; and it will also tend to prevent a large majority of the Legislature from making amendments suited to their own particular and peculiar views, against the wishes of the minority. At the same time it will not require quite so long a period of time to make an amendment of the Constitution as under the section as proposed to be amended. With the section as it stands at the present time, although a necessity might arise for a change in the fundamental law, yet before that change could be effected, the necessity might wear itself out, and we should not be able to secure the benefit of the required amendment.

Gentlemen here inform me that my amendment would be in order at this time, and if the Convention will bear with me a half a minute, I will prepare it, and read it for information, or offer it for the action of the Convention. I think it will be satisfactory to the mover of the pending amendment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will merely say, whilst the gentleman from Esmeralda is preparing his amendment, that for myself I have no particular feeling about this matter. I am rather conservative in my views, touching written Constitutions, and as much apprehensive of change as any man; but our condition here seems to be so peculiar that I think our people would be competent to judge with discretion whether or not in the course of three or four years they would like to have, for instance, an opportunity to advance their aid, as a State, towards the completion of works of internal improvement. That was mainly my object in introducing the amendment—to give the people an opportunity of exercising that privilege and right, if they desire it, being confident all the time that they will be able to judge and determine the question with proper care and caution.

Mr. McCLINTON. I will now present my amendment.

The SECRETARY read the amendment, as follows :

Strike out in the fourth line the words "a majority" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two-thirds vote." Also, strike out all after the word "thereon" in the eighth line to and including the word "house" in the fourteenth line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "and." Also, strike out all the remaining portion of the section after the word "thereon" in the twenty-first line, and add in lieu thereof the following: "Said proposed amendments shall then be referred back to the Legislature next convening, and if said amendments shall be adopted by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, said amendments shall become a part of the Constitution.

Mr. McCLINTON. My object in offering this amendment has been partially explained already, and it will be obvious I think to every member of the Convention. In the first place, by this amendment a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to both branches of the Legislature is required to propose amendments to the Constitution. Now there, at the very commencement, the rights of the people are, some would think, sufficiently guarded. Again it proposes that at the next general election the amendments so proposed shall be submitted to a vote of the people, and if a majority of the people shall ratify the amendments, they do not then become a part of the Constitution, but are referred to the next succeeding Legislature, and that next Legislature when convened has a voice in the matter also, and there it requires a two-thirds vote, again, of all the members elected to both branches, to ratify any amendment, and make it become a part of the Constitution. That will save about two years time. That is to say, amendments can be made in two years less time, as I understand it, than they can by the provision proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan.)

Now our interests here are constantly changing. We do not know one year what exigencies may arise the next year, to be affected by that action which we may now consider proper and just. Such exigencies may arise as to render it a matter of absolute necessity to adopt an amendment to the Constitution, in order to meet certain ends for the promotion of the public good; but under the proposition of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) that necessity would wear itself out before the changes could possibly be made. One of the many objections which I heard advanced against the old Constitution was in regard to this very Article of Amendments—that any proposed amendment must be delayed so long. Now I am opposed in toto to giving any one Legislature the power to amend the Constitution, even with a vote of ratification by the people. I do not think that a Constitution, which is framed for all time, should be so easily patched up. It might be fixed up one year to suit the interests of one party, and the next year there might be another party in power, which would fix it up to suit them, and the year following perhaps another mongrel hybrid party might get into power, who would also remodel it to answer their purposes, and so on ad libitum. I want to avoid that danger, and at the same time to shorten the time required for amendments, and give the people power to pass upon them.

Mr. EARL. I desire to define my position, and it is that I believe that this provision is strong enough and good enough just as it is, and I hope we shall let it remain without any amendment.

Mr. DUNNE. My object in suggesting that this amendment should be put in the form of a proviso, was merely that it should not interfere with the first section as it stands; because I deemed it necessary, if it were not put in that form, to reenact that section. I think the majority of the Convention regard Section 1 in the light of a basis, as to future constitutional amendments, and therefore if there was to be any amendment of a temporary nature, I thought it should be placed at the end, in the way of an exception. In regard to the argument of the gentleman who offered the last amendment, that by his proposition we could get an amendment of the Constitution two years sooner than under this proviso of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan.) I cannot see how it is to be done.

Mr. McCLINTON. I understand that under the proviso of the gentleman from Storey, it will take four years to amend the Constitution.

Mr. DUNNE. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Esmeralda, (Mr. McClinton.) provides, if I understand it correctly, that a two-thirds vote of the members of the Legislature may adopt any proposed amendment, that it shall then be submitted to the people and adopted by them, and that then it shall go to the succeeding Legislature and be adopted by them, after which it shall become a part of the Constitution. Now as the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) proposes by his proviso, an amendment could be adopted by the same means exactly, with the exception of the last vote of the Legislature, and therefore an amendment to the Constitution could be effected six months sooner under that proviso than under the amendment of the gentleman from Esmeralda.

Mr. McCLINTON. That would be too soon.

Mr. DUNNE. I believe it is best to let the section stand as it is.

Mr. MASON. I am sorry to differ with my colleague from Esmeralda, but I cannot see his point. After an amendment to the Constitution has been presented for the consideration of the people of the State, and after it has received their ratification, and been returned by them to the succeeding Legislature, I think it would be assuming a good deal for that Legislature to refuse to indorse the action of the people. After the people have once expressed their views by a majority vote, they would naturally expect the Legislature to act in accordance with those views. Now I desire to see all the safeguards possible thrown around the people's rights, but I know what questions are principally aimed at by constitutional amendments. I have lived in other new States, and I have seen the evils resulting from this sort of action, and therefore, for one, I am in favor of the section as it now stands.

Mr. BROSAN. Inasmuch as it seems to be the sense of the Convention that the section is well enough just as it is, and inasmuch as that is not in opposition to my own impressions, I will, with the leave of the Convention, withdraw my amendment.

No objection being, made the amendment was withdrawn.

The question was stated on the amendment offered by Mr. McClinton.

Mr. McCLINTON. I will suggest to my colleague, (Mr. Mason,) with all due respect, that if he had a very distinct recollection of the strong points which were made against the adoption of the old Constitution last fall, in Esmeralda County, he would hardly be in favor of retaining this section as it now reads; because I know, of my own personal knowledge, that this matter of amendments was a very strong point, made by able men, too, against the adoption of the old Constitution; and I know, moreover, that one of the delegates from Esmeralda who sat in the Convention of last year, when he came back and I called his attention to this provision, was astonished and dumb-founded, and said he was not aware that any such section had been incorporated in the Constitution. He had either misunderstood it, or did not know of it, or had paid no attention to it. And one thing which he told me before I came to this Convention was, that if it were possible we should modify this section. Well, I am not his catspaw, nor any particular man's catspaw, but I do want to comply, as nearly as I can, with what I believe to be the wishes of my constituents, so long as their wishes do not conflict with the common welfare of the Territory.

Mr. MASON. I was not aware of any such argument having been used against the old Constitution; certainly none such were advanced in my presence. I am satisfied that that Constitution was repugnant to a majority of the people in our county, from a variety of causes. One objection was, that it contained too much legislation, and another was the poverty of the Territory, and its consequent inability to sustain a State Government. In respect to this last objection, however, as I have heretofore remarked, there is probably not one man in ten who does not pay more for his vices than he does for his taxes, or than he would pay for taxes under a State organization. I am satisfied that my colleague is acting from conscientious motives, and at the same time I trust it will be conceded that I act from the same kind of motives. I stand here responsible to my constituents alone. I belong to nobody, sir, and nobody belongs to me. [Laughter.] I approve of this article just as it is; I think it is worded exactly as it should be, and it is a safeguard which, in my opinion, should be placed around our Constitution, at least for the first four years.

The question was taken on Mr. McClinton's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNE. I will move a little amendment in the first section. I move to amend by inserting the word "all" before the words "the members elected," so as to read—"all the members elected." We have adopted that word "all" elsewhere, in the same connection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I move the adoption of Section 1 as it is now amended.

The question was taken, and the section was adopted.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the committee rise and report back the several articles upon which we have acted, with the amendments that have been recommended thereto.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to, and the Convention accordingly rose.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XIII, entitled Militia, Article XIV, entitled Public Institutions, Article XV, entitled Boundary, and Article XVII, entitled Amendments, and had instructed him to report the same back to the Convention, with certain amendments in Articles XV and XVII, in which they asked the concurrence of the Convention.

Mr. BANKS. The regular parliamentary order is now, I believe, to order these articles engrossed.

The PRESIDENT. The question is first on the adoption of the report of the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the report was adopted.

The PRESIDENT. The articles will now be referred to the Committee on Engrossment.

ELECTION ORDINANCE.

Mr. COLLINS. By reference to the Enabling Act, it will be seen that provision is made that the soldiers, both within and without the Territory, in the United States service, shall vote on the adoption or rejection of the Constitution. And in another part of the Enabling Act it is further required that this Convention shall provide by ordinance for taking the votes of the people on the adoption or rejection of the Constitution, and also the votes of those who may be in the service of the United States, on the same question. In accordance with these requirements I have drafted an ordinance which I will now submit. Originally, my design in drafting it was to have it embrace only the vote upon the adoption or rejection of the Constitution, including the votes of those in the army of the United States, within and beyond the boundaries of this Territory; but I found it was going to require a great deal more of space than I had anticipated, and therefore I concluded to embody in the same ordinance the rules of voting to govern in the election of officers to be elected under this Constitution, and the election of Presidential electors on the 7th of November next, in case the Constitution shall be adopted. I will now present the ordinance for the consideration of the Convention.

The SECRETARY read the ordinance, as follows :

WHEREAS, The Enabling Act passed by the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and approved March 21st, A. D. 1864, requires that the Convention charged with the duty of framing a Constitution for a State Government " shall provide by ordinance for submitting said Constitution to the people of the Territory of Nevada for their ratification or rejection," on a certain day prescribed therein ; therefore, this Convention, organized in pursuance of said Enabling Act, do establish the following

ORDINANCE.

SECTION 1. On the first Wednesday of September, A. D. 1864, this Constitution shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said Territory in the several counties thereof, for their approval or rejection ; and further, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1864, there shall be a general election in the several counties of said Territory, for the election of State officers, Supreme, District, and County Judges, members of the Legislature, members of Congress, and three Presidential electors.

SEC. 2. All persons qualified by the laws of said Territory to vote for Representatives to the General Assembly on the said twenty-first day of March, including those in the army of the United States, both within and beyond the boundaries of said Territory, and also all persons who may by the aforesaid laws be qualified to vote on the first Wednesday of September, A. D. 1864, including those in the aforesaid army of the United States, within and without the boundaries of said Territory, may vote for the adoption or rejection of said Constitution on the day last above named. In voting upon this Constitution, each elector shall deposit in the ballot-box a ticket, whereon shall be clearly written or printed " Constitution, Yes," or " Constitution, No," or such other words that shall clearly indicate the intention of the elector.

SECTION 3. All persons qualified by the laws of said Territory to vote on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. eighteen hundred and sixty-four, including those in the army of the United States within and beyond the boundaries of said Territory, may vote on the day last above named for State officers, Supreme, District, and County Judges, Members of the Legislature, Member of Congress, and three Presidential electors to the Electoral College.

SEC. 4. The elections provided in this ordinance shall be held at such places as shall be designated by the Boards of Commissioners of the several counties in said Territory. The Judges and Inspectors of said elections shall be appointed by said Commissioners, and the said elections shall be conducted in conformity with the existing laws of said Territory in relation to holding the general election.

SEC. 5. The Judges and Inspectors of said elections shall carefully count each ballot immediately after said elections, and forthwith make duplicate returns thereof to the Clerks of the said County Commissioners of their respective counties, and said Clerks shall immediately transmit an abstract of the same, inclosed in an envelope, by the most safe and expeditious conveyance, to the Governor of said Territory, marked " Election Returns."

SEC. 6. Upon the receipt of said returns, and the returns of the soldiers' vote, as hereinafter provided, or within twenty days after the elections, if said returns be not sooner received, it shall be the duty of the Board of Commissioners, to consist of the Governor, United States District Attorney, and Chief Justice of said Territory, to canvass the returns of said elections, both Civil and Military, in the presence of all who may wish to be present, and immediately publish an abstract of the same in some newspaper of said Territory, and shall forward them by mail or otherwise, copies of said newspapers to the clerks of each county of said Territory, for the use of the county and township officers thereof. The said Board shall, after the said

November election and canvassing of its votes, issue certificates of election to such persons as were elected on the said first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, A. D. 1864. The Governor of said Territory, immediately after ascertaining that this Constitution has been ratified by the people, shall make proclamation of the fact in some newspaper as aforesaid, and thenceforth this Constitution shall be ordained and established as the Constitution of the State of Nevada.

SEC. 7. For the purpose of taking the vote of the electors of said Territory who may be in the army of the United States, the Adjutant-General of said Territory shall, on or before the fifth day of August next following, make out a list in alphabetical order, and deliver the same to the Governor, of the names of all the electors, residents of said Territory, who shall be in the army of the United States, stating the number of the regiment, battalion, squadron of cavalry, or battery of artillery, and the letter of the company to which such elector belongs, and also the county and township of his residence in said Territory.

SEC. 8. The Governor shall classify and arrange the aforesaid returned list, and shall make therefrom separate lists of the electors belonging to each regiment, battalion, squadron, and battery from said Territory in the service of the United States, and shall, on or before the fifteenth day of August following, transmit, by mail or otherwise, to the commanding officer of each regiment, battalion, squadron, and battery a list of electors belonging thereto, which said list shall specify the name, residence and rank of each elector and company to which he belongs, if to any, and also the county and township to which he belongs and in which he is entitled to vote.

SEC. 9. Between the hours of nine o'clock A. M., and three o'clock P. M., on each of the election days hereinafter named, a ballot box or suitable receptacle for votes shall be opened under the immediate charge and direction of three of the highest officers in command, for the reception of votes from the electors whose names are upon said list, at each place where a regiment, battalion, squadron, or battery of soldiers from said Territory in the army of the United States may be on that day ; at which time and place said electors shall be entitled to vote for all officers for which by reason of their residence in the several counties in said Territory they are authorized to vote, as fully as they would be entitled to vote in the several counties and townships in which they reside, and the votes so given by such electors, at such time and place, shall be considered, taken, and held to have been given by them in the respective counties and townships in which they are resident.

SEC. 10. Each ballot deposited for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution in the army of the United States, shall have distinctly written or printed thereon, " Constitution, Yes," or " Constitution, No;" and further, for the election of State officers, Supreme, District, and County Judges, members of the Legislature, member of Congress, and three Presidential Electors, the name and office of the person voted for shall be plainly written or printed on one piece of paper. The name of each elector voting as aforesaid shall be checked upon the said list at the time of voting by one of the said officers having charge of the ballot-box. The said officers having charge of the election shall count the votes and compare them with the checked list immediately after the closing of the ballot-box.

SEC. 11. All the ballots cast, together with the said voting list checked as aforesaid, shall be immediately sealed up and sent forthwith to the Governor of said Territory, at Carson City, by mail or otherwise, by the commanding officer, who shall also make out and certify duplicate returns of votes given according to the forms hereinafter prescribed, seal up and immediately transmit the same to the said Governor, at Carson City, by mail or otherwise, the day following the transmission of the ballots and voting list herein named.

SEC. 12. The form of returns of votes to be made by the commanding officers to the said Governor shall be as follows :

Mr. HOVEY. I will suggest whether this matter should not be referred to the Committee on Schedule?

Mr. COLLINS. That will be for the Convention to decide.

Mr. HOVEY. I do not see why there cannot be a provision in the schedule consisting of one or two sections, which shall provide for the elections and the return of votes.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will move to refer the ordinance to the Committee on the Schedule. I have no hostility to it whatever, but I think that is the committee to which it should properly go.

Mr. COLLINS. I think if my colleague (Mr. Hovey) should undertake to throw this provision into a couple of sections of the schedule, he would find that those sections would be very long indeed; and, besides, the Enabling Act requires these things to be done by ordinance.

Mr. HOVEY. Can they not be done in the Constitution instead of a separate ordinance?

Mr. COLLINS. No, sir; they must be done by ordinance.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Lockwood to refer the ordinance to the Committee on the Schedule, and it was agreed to.

JUDICIARY.

Mr. BANKS. I offer the following resolution :

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be and they are hereby respectfully requested to report at an early hour to-morrow, on the matters referred to them.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

BUSINESS BEFORE THE COMMITTEES.

Mr. DUNNE. I would like to inquire of the Chairman of the Committee on Education when we may expect a report from that committee.

Mr. COLLINS. I inquire if it is designed to have a session of the Convention this evening? The Committee on Education would like to meet this evening, if there is to be no session of the Convention.

Mr. BANKS. Then I hope the gentleman will move that when the Convention adjourn, it adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. McCLINTON. It has been suggested that the committee remain here this evening, after adjournment.

Mr. CHAPIN. Cannot the Committee on the Judiciary report this evening?

Mr. BROSAN. The Judiciary Committee would be prepared to report at any time, but one of the members, the President of the Convention, has requested the chairman not to present the report until he is here. I expect to meet him during the recess, to confer with him in regard to some matters, and the committee will be prepared to report in the morning.

Mr. COLLINS. Can they not report this evening?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I thought the Committee on Education desired to meet this evening.

Mr. COLLINS. But if we adjourn now, the Committee on Education can have a meeting at once, and be able to report at an early hour.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will suggest that very important matters are before the committee, and we can perfect the report, and perhaps get through with our business sooner, by adjourning until to-morrow. I am rather in favor of adjourning until to-morrow.

Mr. DUNNE. I will make a motion to adjourn now, and I suppose that will carry the Convention over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair does not so understand it, unless it shall be so stated in the gentleman's motion.

Mr. DUNNE. I do not wish to have an evening session for this reason: that we never can get the committees to work when we have an evening session. The Committee on Schedule has thirty or forty sections to consider, and they ought to meet this evening, and get at least a portion of their work done, so that the Convention may act upon it. They ought certainly to be able to finish the article on Miscellaneous Provisions. They have that article before them, and also the entire schedule, and all the ordinances presented, besides the article in regard to salaries. I will move, in view of the understanding of the Chair, that when the Convention adjourn, it adjourn to meet at nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, at four o'clock P. M., the Convention adjourned.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 21, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, A. M.

On motion of Mr. BANKS, in the temporary absence of the President, Mr. STURTEVANT was requested to act as President pro tem., and took the Chair.

The roll was called and all the members responded except the following: Messrs. Ball, Crawford, Earl, Fitch, Gibson, Haines, Hudson, Jones, Kinkead, McClinton, Morse, Nourse, Parker, Tozer, Wellington, Williams, and Mr. President. Present, 22; absent, 17.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. NIMS.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced that reports of Standing Committees were in order.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise more to a question of privilege than with the view of making a report. As chairman of the Committee on Enrollment, I have to state that I have received from the Enrolling Clerk what purports to be the enrolled copy of Article II, entitled Right of Suffrage. The first page of that article I find to be properly enrolled, except in respect to one letter, which is easily corrected, and I find that the Clerk has followed the copy in the enrolling. But there is one sentence to which I desire to call attention, which reads as follows:

"The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of an annual poll tax of not less than two nor exceeding four dollars from each male person resident in this State of the ages of twenty-one and sixty years."

Now under the operation of that provision, no man who is over twenty-one years old, unless he has also reached the age of sixty years, could be compelled to pay a poll tax. I will state further, that it was the opinion of one member of the Committee on Phraseology that this was not the language employed in the engrossed copy, but the engrossed copy has since been handed to me and I find that such is not the case. I think this language would exempt from paying a poll tax every man between the ages of twenty-two and fifty-nine. The article is correctly enrolled, according to copy, but as it reads it only provides that those who are just twenty-one, or just sixty years of age, shall pay a poll tax.

Mr. BANKS. As I am a member of the Committee on Phraseology I will take occasion to say that no such document as this, containing any such language as this, has appeared before that committee. I understand that this enrollment is made from a copy of the engrossed article, and not from the engrossed copy itself. I think unquestionably the Enrolling Committee should have that copy to enroll from which the Committee on Phraseology has examined—that is, the original engrossed copy, and not a copy made from it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think so too, but the Secretary informed me that he did not consider himself authorized to allow the engrossed copy to go out of his hands.

The SECRETARY. The engrossed copy should properly go to the Enrolling Committee, but it should not be placed in the hands of any irresponsible person, outside of the Convention, who might, if so disposed, interpolate anything he pleased. The practice is, that the engrossed copy goes to the Enrolling Committee and they compare that with the enrolled copy.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. In the opinion of the Chair the Enrolling Committee should compare the enrolled copy with the engrossed copy, and as the Chair understands, they should not make report until they find that it is correctly enrolled.

Mr. DE LONG. The effect of this language is, that a man must be eighty-one years old before he can be required to pay a poll tax.

Mr. NOURSE. Yes, sir; twenty-one and sixty—that makes eighty-one years.

Mr. BANKS. I understand the Chair to rule, then, that the examination or comparison must be made with the official engrossed copy.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Committee on Enrollment has undoubtedly a right to the engrossed article—the original—in order to make a comparison of the two copies, and, if they should discover any errors, the Chair understands that it is the duty of the committee to correct them, or have them corrected, and only to report to the Convention a correctly enrolled copy. It is not to be supposed that it is the duty of the Convention to correct such errors, when they have a committee for that very purpose.

ARTICLES ENGROSSED.

Mr. CROSMAN, from the Committee on Engrossment, reported as correctly engrossed, Article XIII, entitled Militia; Article XIV, entitled Public Institutions; Article XV, entitled Boundary; and Article XVII, entitled Amendments.

The report was accepted, and the several articles placed on file for a third reading.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BROSNAN. I rise now to a question of privilege. On yesterday I made a remark in the Convention in regard to a friend of mine, my colleague from Storey County, (Mr. Fitch), who I regret is not in his seat this morning, but who understands this matter precisely as I do. I was informed yesterday that the remark I had made touching the speech of that gentleman was supposed to have been intended to apply to the President of the Convention, and now I desire to correct that impression, as I would have done yesterday had I not been prevented by the business before the Convention. Gentlemen will recollect that my colleague (Mr. Fitch) had made a speech, which I must confess I was not pleased with at the time, because I thought it entirely injudicious and out of place. He having quoted a few wise sayings and saws during that speech, I arose and made a reply, which I will repeat in substance. Prefacing my remarks by alluding to my colleague from Storey County, who had just taken his seat, I said that it was the saying of an ancient and very wise philosopher, that we were endowed with but one tongue and two ears, in order that we might hear more and speak less. The remark was addressed to my friend and colleague from Storey County, but I understand that it was understood as having been directed at, or as being an allusion to, the President of the Convention. I regret that there should have been any such impression, for I certainly entertained no idea of that kind.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BROSNAN, from the Committee on the Judicial Department, submitted the following report :

MR. PRESIDENT:—The members of the committee to whom Article VI, entitled Judicial Department, was referred, have carefully considered the subject, and respectfully report the following as the result of their deliberations :

ARTICLE VI—JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of this State shall be vested in a Supreme Court, District Courts, in County Courts, and in Justices of the Peace. The Legislature may also establish Courts, for municipal purposes only, in incorporated cities and towns.

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and two associate Justices, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum; provided, that the Legislature, by a majority of the members elected to each branch thereof, may, at its second session, or any time thereafter, provide for the election of two additional associate Justices, and if so increased, three shall constitute a quorum. The majority of the whole Court shall be necessary to render a decision.

SEC. 3. The Justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at the general election, as provided by law, and shall hold office for the term of six years from the first day of January next succeeding their election; provided, that there shall be elected at the first election under this Constitution, three Justices of the Supreme Court, who shall hold office from the time of their election and qualification, and continue in office thereafter two, four, and six years respectively, from the first day of January next succeeding their election. They shall meet as soon as practicable after their election and qualification, and at their first meeting shall classify themselves, and determine by lot the term of office each shall fill, and the Justice drawing the shortest term shall be Chief Justice, and after the expiration of his term, the one having the next shortest term shall be Chief Justice, after which the senior Justice in commission shall be Chief Justice.

SEC. 4. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law in which is involved the title or the right of possession of real estate or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand (exclusive of interest) or the value of property in controversy exceeds three hundred dollars; also, in other civil cases not included in the general sub-divisions of law and equity, and also in all criminal cases in which the offense charged amounts to felony, on questions of law alone. The Court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, and also all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Each of the Justices shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State, upon petition on behalf of any person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself or the Supreme Court, or before any District Court, or any County Court in the State, or before any Judge of said Courts.

SEC. 5. The State is hereby divided into nine Judicial Districts, of which the County of Storey shall constitute the first; the County of Ormsby the second; the County of Lyon the third; the County of Washoe the fourth; the Counties of Nye and Churchill the fifth; the County of Humboldt the sixth; the County of Lander the seventh; the County of Douglas the eighth; and the County of Esmeralda the ninth. The County of Roop shall be attached to the County of Washoe for judicial purposes, until as herein otherwise provided by law. The Legislature may, however, by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch thereof, provide by an alteration in the boundaries or division of the districts herein prescribed, or otherwise, for increasing or diminishing the number of the Judicial Districts and Judges therein; but no such change shall take effect except in case of a vacancy, or the expiration of the term of an incumbent of the office. At the first election under this Constitution, there shall be elected in each of the respective districts, (except as in this section hereafter otherwise provided,) one District Judge, who shall hold office from the time of his election and qualification until the first day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven. After the said first election, there shall be elected at the general election which immediately precedes the expiration of the term of his predecessor, one District Judge in each of the respective Judicial Districts (except in the first district, as in this section hereafter provided.) The District Judges shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts, and shall hold office for the term of four years (excepting those elected at said first election) from the first day of January next succeeding their election and qualification; provided, that the first Judicial District shall be entitled to and shall have two District Judges, who shall possess co-extensive and concurrent jurisdiction, and who shall be elected at the same time, in the same manner, and shall hold office for the like terms, as herein prescribed in relation to the Judges in other Judicial Districts.

SEC. 6. The District Court in the several Judicial Districts of this State, (except in the First District, for which distinct provision is otherwise made in this article,) shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law which involve the title to or the right of possession of real property, or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand (exclusive of interest) or the value of the property in controversy exceeds three hundred dollars; also, in all cases relating to the estates of deceased persons, and of the action of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, and also, in all criminal cases, not otherwise provided for in this Constitution, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. They shall also have appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in Justices' Courts, and other inferior tribunals, as the Legislature may prescribe. The District Courts and their judges shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and all other writs necessary to the complete exercise of their jurisdiction; and also, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person held in actual custody in their respective districts.

trict shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law which involve the title or the right of possession to or the possession of real property, or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand (exclusive of interest) or the value of the property in controversy exceeds five hundred dollars; also, in all other civil cases not provided for in this Constitution, and also in all criminal cases where the punishment may be death. The said District Courts and the judges thereof, shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and all other writs necessary to the complete exercise of its jurisdiction; and also, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person held in actual custody in said district.

Sec. 8. There shall be established in the County of Storey a County Court, having one Judge, who shall be elected at the general election by the qualified electors of the county, and shall hold his office for the term of four years, from the first day of January next preceding his election, except that at the first election under this Constitution, a County Judge shall be elected in said county, who shall hold his office until the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, and after said first election a County Judge shall be elected in said county, at the election which immediately precedes the expiration of the term of his predecessor, and shall hold office for the term of four years from the first day of January next after his election. And the Legislature may provide by law for the organization of County Courts in other counties, as the public good may require, and may prescribe their powers, duties, and jurisdiction, in conformity with this Constitution.

Sec. 9. The County Court of Storey County shall have original jurisdiction in actions of forcible entry and unlawful detainer; of proceedings in insolvency; of actions to prevent or abate a nuisance; and in all civil cases, (except those wherein the title, or the right of possession to, or the boundaries of real estate or mining claims may be involved,) in which the matter in dispute is a money demand or personal property, and the amount of the demand (exclusive of interest) or the value of the property is over three hundred and does not exceed five hundred dollars; and also in such special cases and proceedings as are not herein otherwise provided. The said Court shall also have final appellate jurisdiction in all cases arising in Courts held by Justices of the Peace in said county, and in such inferior courts as may be established therein in pursuance of Section 1 of this article. The said Court shall also have original jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons, and of the persons and estates of minors and insane persons; and also in criminal cases, in which the offense is not punishable by death, and which are not otherwise provided for in this Constitution. The Grand Jury for the county shall be impaneled in and make their presentments and findings of indictments to the said Court; and all indictments of the trial of which the said County Court has not jurisdiction, shall be transferred for trial by order of the said Court, to the District Court of the said county. The County Courts, in counties where such officers shall have been elected, and their judges, shall also have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person in actual custody in their respective counties; and said Courts, and the judges thereof, shall have power to issue all other writs necessary to the complete exercise of their jurisdiction.

Sec. 10. The times and places of holding the terms of the Supreme Court, the general and special terms of the District Courts within the several districts, and of County Courts, shall be provided by law.

Sec. 11. The Legislature shall determine the number of Justices of the Peace to be elected in each city and township of the State, and shall fix by law their powers, duties, and responsibilities. It shall determine the manner and the cases in which appeals may be taken from Justices' and other Courts; provided, such powers shall not in any case conflict with the jurisdiction of the several Courts of Record; and further, that such Justices' Courts shall have no jurisdiction in the trial of cases wherein the trial to real estate or mining claims, or the right of possession, is or may be involved. The Supreme Court, the District Courts, the County Courts, and such other Courts as the Legislature shall designate, shall be Courts of Record.

Sec. 12. The Legislature shall prescribe the powers, duties, and responsibilities of any Municipal Court that may be established in pursuance of Section 1 of this article; and shall so fix by law the jurisdiction of said Court as not to conflict with that of the several Courts of Record.

Sec. 13. No judicial officer, except a Justice of the Peace, shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office.

Sec. 14. The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the District Judges, shall be ineligible to any office other than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected, and all elections or appointments of any such Judges by the people, Legislature, or otherwise, during said period, to any office other than judicial, shall be void.

Sec. 15. Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.

Sec. 16. The style of all process shall be, "The State of Nevada," and all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the same.

Sec. 17. There shall be but one form of civil action, and law and equity may be administered in the same action, in Courts of Record.

Sec. 18. The Justices of the Supreme Court, District Judges and County Judges, in counties wherein such officers shall have been elected, as provided for in this Constitution, shall each receive quarterly, for their services, a compensation to be fixed by the Legislature, and which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected. And the Legislature shall provide for setting apart from each year's revenue a sufficient amount of money to pay such compensation; provided, that District Judges and County Judges shall be paid out of the county treasuries of their respective districts and counties.

Sec. 19. The Legislature at its first session shall prescribe that upon the institution of each action, and other proceeding, and also upon the perfecting of an appeal in any action or proceeding, in the several Courts of Record in this State, a special Court fee or tax, to be fixed by law, shall be advanced to the Clerks of said Courts respectively, by the party or parties bringing such action or proceeding, or taking such appeal; and the money so paid in shall be accounted for by such clerks and applied towards the payment of the compensation of the Judges of said Courts, as shall be directed by law.

Sec. 20. The Legislature shall have no power to grant leave of absence to a judicial officer, and any such officer who shall absent himself from the State for upwards of ninety consecutive days shall be deemed to have vacated his office.

Sec. 21. In order that no inconvenience may result to the public service from the taking effect of this article, no judicial officer shall be superseded, nor shall the organization of the several courts be changed thereby, until the election and qualification of the several officers provided for in the same.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. M. BROSNAN, Chairman.

IMPEACHMENT AND REMOVAL.

Mr. BROSNAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been referred Article VII, entitled Impeachment and Removal from Office, submitted the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT:—Your Committee on the Judiciary has had under consideration Article VII, relating to Impeachment and Removal from Office, and report that they have amended said article by striking out Section III, and recommend that the Convention concur in said amendment. In the judgment of your committee the article divested of Section 3, contains all the ordinary checks and safeguards, and that the same are amply sufficient for the prevention and punishment of official misconduct and dereliction of duty. The section endangers the stability of the judicial department, and in its provisions exposes its officers to the assaults of individuals who may be actuated by personal spleen and animosity, whilst it leaves an opportunity to convert the Legislature into an arena of strife upon trifling questions and for unimportant causes.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. M. BROSNAN, Chairman.

Mr. DELONG. I move that these reports be received and placed on file.

THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman will withdraw his motion I will make a suggestion, that the bill accompanying the report of the Judiciary Committee—the Article on the Judicial Department—be printed. That article embodies some very material and radical changes, and it is quite impossible for members to fully comprehend the subject without having it before them in a printed shape. This article, and possibly one or two other matters, will in all probability be the only matters, not already disposed of, which the Convention will find it necessary to order printed, for the reason that for the most part we have followed in the track of the old Constitution. This article, however, is an exception, and as it involves very important changes I hope it will be printed.

Mr. DELONG. I will withdraw the motion, but I think we ought to go on with the consideration of the article to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am informed by one of the newspaper Reporters that to-morrow morning he can have the article printed in his report. If we can obtain it in the morning papers, there will be no necessity for further printing, and under the circumstances, I will withdraw the motion to print.

Mr. BROSNAN. I was about to state that the President of the Convention, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee, does not agree with the report of the majority of that committee in two particulars, as I understand: First—he desires that the Supreme Court shall consist of five Judges; and secondly, he is opposed to the tax, or docket fee, which is provided for in the report, for the purpose of aiding in defraying the expenses of the judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to say further, that I do not know that I assent—as I have not examined the subject—in relation to striking out Section 3 of the article on Impeachment and Removal from Office.

SALARIES.

Mr. DELONG, from the Committee on the Schedule, submitted the following report:

Mr. PRESIDENT—Your Committee on Schedule, to whom was referred the substitute for Article XI as first introduced, beg leave to report that they have had the same under consideration, and recommend the following amendments:

1st—Strike out in line 1 of Section 1, the word "years," and insert instead the words "term of office."
2d.—Fill blanks in lines 4 and 6 of Section 1, by inserting the words "four thousand."

3d.—Fill blank in line 7, Section 1, by inserting the words "three thousand six hundred."

4th.—Fill blank in line 10, Section 1, by inserting the words "three thousand six hundred."

5th.—Fill blank in line 13, Section 1, by inserting the words "three thousand six hundred."

6th.—Fill the blank in lines 15 and 16, Section 1, by inserting the words "one thousand."

7th.—Fill blank in line 18, Section 1, by inserting the words "two thousand five hundred."

8th.—Fill blank in line 22, Section 1, by inserting the words "two thousand."

9th.—Fill blank in line 1, (page 2,) of Section 1, by inserting the words "seven thousand."

10th.—Insert after the word "annum," in line 2, (page 2) Section 1, the words "the salary of the foregoing officers shall be paid quarterly."

11th.—Fill blank in line 5, (page 2,) Section 1, by inserting the word "six."

12th.—Fill blank in line 7, (page 2,) Section 1, by inserting the words "forty cents," and add after the word "mileage," in same line, the words "going and returning."

13th.—Add to Section 1, the words following: "No officer mentioned in this section shall receive any fees or perquisites to his own use for the performance of any duty connected with his office, or for the performance of any additional duty enjoined upon him by law."

14th.—Strike out Section 2.

15th.—Strike out Section 3.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. E. DELONG, Chairman.

The report was accepted, and the article, with the amendments reported, was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

Mr. DELONG, from the Committee on the Schedule, etc., also submitted the following report:

Mr. PRESIDENT—Your committee, to whom was referred Article XVI, entitled Miscellaneous Provisions, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report the following amendments, and recommend the adoption of the article as amended:

1st. Strike out the word "six," in line four, Section 1, and insert instead the word "three."

2nd. In Section 7, strike out all after the words "Section 7," down to and including the word "recorders," in line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the words "all county officers."

3rd. Amend Section 8 by striking out all after the word "Courts," in line eight of said section.

4th. Amend Section 9 by striking out, in lines one, two, and three, the words, "by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch thereof;" and strike out the parenthesis, and words "except judicial," in line five of said section.

5th. Strike out Section 12.

6th. Amend Section 14 of printed copy by striking out the figure "4" in line three, and insert in lieu thereof the figure "5."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. E. DELONG, Chairman.

The report was accepted, and the article was referred to the Committee of the Whole, together with the amendments reported.

Mr. DUNNE, from the same committee, presented the following as a minority report:

Mr. PRESIDENT—The undersigned, of the Committee on Schedule, to which was referred Article XVI, entitled Miscellaneous Provisions, respectfully submits a minority report dissenting from the recommendation to so amend Section 7, of Article XVI, as to require all county officers to reside at the county seats of their respective counties.

DUNNE.

The report was received and placed on file.

Thursday,] DE LONG—CROSMAN—JOHNSON—COLLINS—CHAPIN—BROS NAN—BANKS. [July 21.

THE ORDINANCE.

Mr. DE LONG. The Committee on Schedule have not yet had the ordinance, introduced by my colleague, (Mr. Collins,) under consideration, except in so far as to ask that it be printed. It is very hard to understand it unless it is in print, inasmuch as it is very long, containing minute provisions.

Mr. CROSMAN. My understanding of that ordinance, as it was read yesterday was, that it contained a good deal that was likely to be provided for in the schedule, or which was by the last Convention embraced within the schedule, and I thought it probable that when the Committee on the Schedule should report, we could compare that report with the ordinance, and if there should be anything not embraced in the report of the Committee on Schedule, it could then be added, or otherwise provided for.

Mr. JOHNSON. If I recollect aright, I made a suggestion to the chairman, that it would be well to have it printed, but I am informed that it was copied yesterday by the reporters, and will be likely to appear in the Virginia papers to-morrow morning. I am very desirous that we may have it in a printed form.

Mr. DE LONG. I certainly do not wish to incur any unnecessary expense, and will therefore withdraw the motion to print.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. COLLINS asked that indefinite leave of absence be granted to his colleague, (Mr. Tozer,) who had received a dispatch requiring his attendance in San Francisco on business of importance.

Mr. NOURSE. Is the mining question disposed of entirely? I only want to know. [Laughter.]

The question was taken, and indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. Tozer.

Mr. DE LONG. I am requested to ask the same leave of absence for my colleague (Mr. Earl.)

Mr. CHAPIN. I doubt the propriety of granting indefinite leave of absence to so many members. The first we know, we shall find ourselves without a quorum. I will suggest that we grant him leave of absence only for to-day.

Mr. DE LONG. I do not think that would do him any good; I think he went home to stay. I will ask leave, however, for this day, and, if necessary, I will ask leave again to-morrow for another day.

The question was taken, and leave of absence for one day was granted to Mr. Earl.

MILITIA.

The Convention proceeded to the third reading of articles on the general file.

Article XIII, entitled Militia, was read a third time, as follows:

ARTICLE XIII.

MILITIA.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by law for the organizing and disciplining the militia of this State, for the effectual encouragement of volunteer corps, and the safe keeping of the public arms.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall have power to call out the militia to execute the laws of the State, or to suppress insurrection or repel invasion.

The question was taken on the final passage of the article, by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 26; nays, none—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClintone, Murdock, Nourse, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—26.

Nays—None.

So the article was passed.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

Article XIV, entitled Public Institutions, was read a third time, as follows:

ARTICLE XIV.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

SECTION 1. Institutions for the benefit of the insane, blind, and deaf and dumb, and such other benevolent institutions as the public good may require, shall be fostered and supported by the State, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. A State Prison shall be established and maintained in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and provision may be made by law for the establishment and maintenance of a House of Refuge for juvenile offenders.

SEC. 3. The respective counties of the State shall provide, as may be prescribed by law, for those inhabitants who by reason of age and infirmity, or other misfortunes, may have claim upon the sympathy and aid of society.

Mr. BROS NAN. The word "other," in the third section, comes in rather unfortunately there. It says "by reason of age and infirmity, or other misfortunes." Now we do not mean surely to say that age is a misfortune. Infirmity may be a misfortune, but I do not look upon age in that light.

Mr. BANKS. I view that matter in pretty much the same light as the gentleman from Storey, and I think we had better strike out that word "other." It can be done by general consent, and the sentence will then read correctly—"who by reason of age and infirmity, or misfortunes, may have claim upon the sympathy and aid of society."

By unanimous consent, the Secretary was instructed to strike out the word "other" in Section 3.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays upon the final passage of the article, and the vote was—yeas, 26; nays, none—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClintone, Murdock, Nourse, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—26.

Nays—None.

So the article was passed.

BOUNDARY.

Article XV, entitled Boundary, was read a third time, as follows:

Thursday.]

JOHNSON—BROSAN—NOURSE—COLLINS—CHAPIN—CROSMAN.

[July 21.]

ARTICLE XV.
BOUNDARY.

SECTION 1. The boundary of the State of Nevada shall be as follows:

Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington, with the thirty-seventh degree of north latitude; thence due west along said thirty-seventh degree of north latitude to the eastern boundary line of the State of California; thence in a northwesterly direction along the said eastern boundary line of the State of California to the forty-third degree of longitude west from Washington; thence north along said forty-third degree of west longitude, and said eastern boundary line of the State of California, to the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence due east along the said forty-second degree of north latitude to a point formed by its intersection with the aforesaid thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence due south down said thirty-eighth degree of west longitude to the place of beginning.

And whensoever Congress shall authorize the addition to the Territory or State of Nevada of any portion of the territory on the easterly border of the foregoing defined limits, not exceeding in extent one degree of longitude, the same shall thereupon be embraced within and become a part of this State. And furthermore provided, that all such territory lying west of and adjoining the boundary line herein prescribed, which the State of California may relinquish to the Territory or State of Nevada, shall thereupon be embraced within and constitute a part of this State.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would prefer to have the consideration of this matter laid over to some future time, for I think there is a misapprehension in regard to it. As I understand the Enabling Act, the boundary of the State, as proposed by us, is co-extensive with that of the Territory. It seems to be apprehended that as the boundary is defined by the Enabling Act, one degree is left off on our eastern border, as I understood the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) to say. Am I correct in that?

Mr. BROSNAN. I did not have time to examine it thoroughly yesterday, but I thought that was the case—that the Enabling Act did not give us as much as was given in the old Organic Act.

Mr. JOHNSON. The boundary line as laid down in the old Constitution embraced an additional degree, only in case it should be conceded by subsequent enactment of Congress.

Mr. NOURSE. I incline to think that the gentleman from Storey has confounded the thirty-seventh degree of latitude with the thirty-seventh degree of longitude. In this Enabling Act the boundary begins at the southeast corner, running thence due west, while in the Organic Act it began at the northeast corner, and ran thence due south.

Mr. COLLINS. I would ask if this article was not referred to a committee yesterday, together with the Act of Congress, for comparison?

Mr. NOURSE. It was agreed to adopt the language of the Enabling Act; that was the motion which was carried.

Mr. COLLINS. I have here the Act of 1862, which extends the boundary one degree.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the language of the Enabling Act has been adopted, then I have no further objection.

Mr. CHAPIN. The exact language of the Enabling Act was adopted, and by that, I take it, we must be governed.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no doubt as to that. The question was taken by yeas and nays, on the final passage of the article, and the vote was—yeas, 26; nays, none—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, DeLong, Dunne, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Nourse, Proctor, Sturtevant, Taghiabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—26.

Nays—None.

So the article was passed.

AMENDMENTS.

Article XVII, entitled Amendments, was read a third time, as follows:

ARTICLE XVII.

AMENDMENTS.

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in the Senate or Assembly, and if the same shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each of the two Houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their journals, with the yeas and noes taken thereon, and referred to the Legislature then next to be chosen, and shall be published for three months next preceding the time of making such choice. And if in the Legislature next chosen as aforesaid, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each House, then it shall be the duty of the Legislature to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people in such manner and at such time as the Legislature shall prescribe; and if the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the Legislature voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the Constitution.

Sec. 2. If at any time the Legislature, by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each House, shall determine that it is necessary to cause a revision of this entire Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors at the next election for members of the Legislature to vote for or against a Convention, and if it shall appear that a majority of the electors voting at such election have voted in favor of calling a Convention, the Legislature shall, at its next session, provide by law for calling a Convention to be held within six months after the passage of such law, and such Convention shall consist of a number of members not less than that of both branches of the Legislature. In determining what is a majority of the electors voting at such election, reference shall be had to the highest number of votes cast for the candidates for any office, or on any question, at such election.

The question was taken by yeas and nays upon the final passage of the article, and the vote was—yeas, 24; nays, none—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crosman, Dunne, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, McClinton, Murdock, Nourse, Proctor, Sturtevant, Taghiabue, Wetherill, and Mr. President—24.

Nays—None.

So the article was passed.

Mr. CROSMAN. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the Chair, for the consideration of the general file.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will it be necessary to consider all these articles which have been reported in Committee of the Whole? They have, with the exception of the article on the Judicial Department, I believe, been considered in Committee of the Whole, and I think we can dispose of them without the necessity of further consideration in committee.

Mr. CROSMAN. I apprehend that Article XI, the article on Salaries, will probably provoke considerable discussion, and we may succeed better, in Committee of the Whole, in harmonizing the views of members, although I am not particular about it. My idea was to go into Committee of the Whole on the general file, and if we find anything there which we do not want to discuss, we can report it back without delay.

[The PRESIDENT in the Chair.]

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, the President retaining the Chair, and proceeded to the consideration of articles on the general file.

IMPEACHMENT AND REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

Article VII, entitled Impeachment and Removal from Office, was first taken up.

Section 1 was read, as follows:

SECTION 1. The Assembly shall have the sole power of impeaching, but a majority of all the members elected must concur in an impeachment. All impeachments shall be tried by the Senate, and when sitting for that purpose the Senators shall be upon oath or affirmation to do justice according to law and evidence. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators elected.

Mr. NOURSE. I will inquire if provision is made elsewhere that the Lieutenant-Governor shall not sit in case the Governor is to be tried on impeachment?

The CHAIRMAN. I think there is no such provision.

Mr. NOURSE. I suppose it is manifestly proper that there should be, because in case of the Governor's removal, the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor in his place, and therefore it would be improper to allow him to preside upon the trial of the Governor on impeachment.

Mr. BROSNAN. In that case the Senate would appoint a President pro tem., who would be the presiding officer of the Senate.

Mr. NOURSE. But the Lieutenant Governor would be the Governor in the event of the Governor's removal. If he does not preside over the Senate at the trial, he none the less takes the Governor's place. There is a provision in the United States Constitution in regard to the Vice President presiding over the Senate, which is, that when the President of the United States is to be tried, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall preside over the Senate. I do not know how that would strike other gentlemen, but it seems to me we might well adopt a similar provision in our Constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can propose an amendment to conform to that if he wishes, so that when the Governor is tried, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall preside over the Senate.

Mr. NOURSE. I will move to amend the section by inserting before the last sentence, and after the words "law and evidence," these words:

"The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall preside over the Senate, while sitting to try the Governor upon impeachment."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Section 2 was read, as follows:

SECTION 2. The Governor and other civil officers under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office; but judgment in such case shall not extend further than removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust, under this State. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

No amendment being offered, Section 3, (as reported by the Judiciary Committee,) was read, as follows:

SECTION 3. Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his duties.

[Mr. STURTEVANT in the Chair.]

Mr. BROSNAN. There was a recommendation by the Committee on the Judiciary, that Section 3, as contained in the original article, be stricken out.

Mr. DUNNE. It would be proper, I suppose, to take a vote upon concurring in the recommendation of the committee to strike out that section.

The CHAIRMAN. I am informed by the Secretary that the Convention concurred in the report, which was then received and placed on file. That is equivalent, I suppose, to striking out the section.

Mr. NOURSE. I suppose the receiving of the report is a different matter altogether from the adoption of the report, and I think, although the report may have been received, that it has not been adopted, because I have not heard the subject mentioned before.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that when a report is made from a committee, that report should be read, so as to let members know what they are doing, and then if the Convention does not see fit to concur with the report, it can vote to disagree or amend it.

Mr. NOURSE. The point I make is that the receiving of the report does not adopt it.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will move, if it is in order, that the Committee of the Whole recommend the adoption of the report of the Judiciary Committee striking out Section 3.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to move, or have some one else move, to non-concur in that BANKS—NOURSE—BROSNAN.

[July 21.

recommendation, because I would like to say a few words upon it.

Mr. BANKS. I think the matter stands in this way: that the committee have reported only Sections one, two, and three, of Article VII, and recommend the passage of the article in that form; and if gentlemen desire a provision equivalent to that contained in Section 3 of the original article, they can simply move to incorporate it, and that will bring up the whole matter. The report of the committee can certainly be amended.

Mr. NOURSE. I will move, then, if it be practicable, that Section 3, as printed, be added, and also, that Section 4, or Section 5 as it is numbered, evidently by mistake, in this printed basis, be adopted in addition.

Now I wish to state my reasons, and I think they are such as will commend themselves to the Convention. They are drawn from observation, but not from Minnesota, this time.

Mr. BANKS. Nor California?

Mr. NOURSE. That is another point altogether. I say there are so many cases where valid reasons may exist for the removal of an officer, although there may not be sufficient cause for impeachment, that I think there should be a provision of this kind. A stupid judge is as bad as a dishonest one, and so is a judge whose habits are such as to disgrace, not only the bench, but the community in which he lives; and yet you cannot get at such a judge without a provision of this kind, unless he commits some wrongful act in the discharge of his duties. There are innumerable cases of men whose incompetency, or something worse, unfits them for the bench, and prevents their doing any good upon it, and yet who cannot be impeached. Cases of this kind occur more frequently in new States, where men are not generally acquainted with each other, than they do in the old States, and yet I have seen in the old States instances where it was considered expedient and desirable to abolish an entire court and establish a new court, with a new name, merely for the sake of getting rid of one man on the bench, who was thoroughly incompetent, but whom they could not impeach, because they could not show that he had done any act which should subject him to impeachment—such as taking bribes, or any other illegal act, which would be ground of impeachment. Now the proposition in Section 3, is to the effect that such an incumbent may be removed by the Governor, upon the address of two-thirds of the members of the Legislature. There appears to be a double check—first, the requirement of a two-thirds vote, and next, the act of the Governor making the removal—and thus it would seem to be rendered certain that no removal will or can be made, unless it is absolutely necessary that the man should be removed.

Still, I think where there are grounds for impeachment, the judge should only be removed by impeachment, although where there is not sufficient ground for impeachment, there should still be a power of removal, for the sake of the public interests. I hold that if a judge has done anything for which it can be claimed that he should be impeached, he is as much entitled to a trial, with all the forms of law, as he would be if he were charged with stealing. Nevertheless, as I have said, there are so many other cases of judges who are unfitted for their places, upon other grounds than those upon which they might be impeached, that it seems to me we should be placing ourselves in a bad fix, for the first few years especially, if we provided for no other way of getting rid of an incompetent judge than by impeachment. I say this with a full and perfect appreciation of the proposition, that the judiciary should be placed above the reach of political influences. No man desires more than I do that the judges shall be in a position to be independent of the other departments of the Government, so far as that may be practicable. I desire that this amendment shall be adopted, because it is not merely a matter of theory, in my judgment, but also a matter of practice, which has been approved in many of the old States; and I believe that it is a matter of necessity that the provision should be adopted, inasmuch as there are frequently cases which cannot be reached by impeachment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I wish to say only a few words upon this subject, and probably I will not recur to it again. I think this is a dangerous section, and for this reason: that under it any individual may make accusation in the Legislature against a judge, and probably it would be done very often for the trifling causes which the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) has indicated—as for instance, that he is a stupid judge. Now the community at large might differ as to the qualifications of a judge, and his ability, from my friend from Washoe, or any one else who might bring a charge against him. They might measure the man's brains upon a different scale from that which you or I would employ. You, Mr. Chairman, might estimate a man's ability by the volume of his brain or by his intellectual manifestations, and other men might measure him by some different standard, and thus the community would differ entirely in their estimate upon that test of qualification.

There is greater force in the gentleman's argument when he refers to the matter of bad habits, although even in that respect men in the same community would differ. Men do not agree upon what would amount to a decidedly bad habit, and what would amount only to a tolerably bad one, or one which should not exclude a man from so honorable a position as that of a judicial officer. There would be differences of opinion in respect to what would suffice to place a man without the pale of respectability, as compared with his neighbors who may be in high standing in the community. I will state, further, that lawyers very often

BANKS—NOURSE.

complain of judges in consequence of their decisions. When they get beaten in the courts—and some lawyers do get beaten many times before the same judge—they are apt to be dissatisfied with his decisions, and in such cases you will hear them clamoring on the streets, or in the social circle, and asserting that the judge is an ass, and not fit to be a judge, because he decided so and so, in such and such a case, which decision they will insist is a thing unheard of. In the course of my experience, I have frequently heard such remarks in reference to judges. Now in a case of that kind, the lawyer would be apt to estimate the judge in the same manner as the gentleman from Washoe does, when he refers to some judges as being stupid; whereas, if the decisions of the judge had been the other way, the lawyer would have been exactly suited with him, and would have regarded him as a model of perfection. And then, if stupidity were to be made a sufficient cause for removal, the opposite attorney would be liable to turn around and utter the same sort of exclamations, and manifest the same disaffection. In whichever way the judge might decide a case, the disappointed party, or the counsel for the losing side, would be dissatisfied; and they might have friends in the Legislature who would be induced to look upon the decision as a reasonable cause for removal from office, and would be likely to use all the influence which they could bring to bear upon the question. In that way every judge would be liable to be acted upon by political influences, or, if you please, by individual pique or private revenge, and thus the Legislature would be converted into a gladiatorial arena, and controversies of this nature might consume a greater portion of each and every session. No question could come before the Legislature which would be calculated to arouse the contending passions of men more than a question of this kind.

Again, there would be this evil effect: that after a man has made the attempt to remove a judge, and failed in it, although that judge whom he has sought to displace from office were as elastic and pure as snow in his high calling, yet his usefulness would be destroyed in the community. He loses, if not his own self-respect, the respect of many in the community in which he has officiated. And, Mr. Chairman, if he were as wise as a Mansfield or a Bacon, yet if he possessed the pride and sense of honor of a man, his sensitiveness would impel him—mine would, at least, in such a case—to resign that office. He would take that course, although perhaps no other man might be able to discharge its duties better, or more to the satisfaction and for the benefit of that community. For these reasons, for the sake of the stability of the judiciary, and that the respect which is due to it may be secured, to a certain extent, at least, so far as is consistent with the just and honorable discharge of its duties, I am in favor of sustaining the report of the committee.

Mr. BANKS. It would be of no use for me to repeat the arguments against the incorporation of this provision which have been so often presented, for they would be precisely the same arguments with which nearly every member of the Convention is familiar, and upon which, or with reference to which, in nearly all the States of the Union, it has been decided to be desirable to preserve the independence of each department of the government. There is nothing I could say that would add strength and force to the arguments upon that point, with which all are so familiar, and therefore I will not consume the time of the Convention in repeating them. But there is one question I would like to ask of some gentleman who has had an opportunity of giving this subject more attention than I have been able to devote to it, and it is this: Do not the objectionable features embodied in Section 3, as here printed, and in the provision which has been sent to the Secretary's desk by the gentleman from Washoe, exist in Section 4, (or Section 5 as it is numbered by mistake in the printed copy,) which I understand the Judiciary Committee have reported in favor of? That section reads thus:

“Provision may be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his duties.”

That, I understand, applies to judicial officers as well as others. It says “civil officer.”—that is, not military officers—and, of course, it includes the judiciary. They may be removed “for malfeasance or nonfeasance;” that means the “mal,” or wrong performance, or the nonfeasance or failure to perform the duties required of them by law. It seems to me—and if I am wrong, I would like to be set right—that the last section reported in favor of by the Judiciary Committee, really involves all the power contemplated by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) in offering his amendment to reinstate Section 3, and if we wish to carry out the views of the Committee on the Judiciary, we can do so, in my judgment, only by striking out that section.

Mr. NOURSE. My view is, that that section only applies to those cases which are not specially provided for in the preceding sections.

Mr. BANKS. Then I understand the gentleman's explanation to be that this section would not embrace judges, because they are specially provided for above.

Mr. NOURSE. That is my impression.

Mr. BANKS. It occurs to me that the letter of this section, (numbered five in the printed basis, apparently by mistake,) does include all the State officers. It occurs to me that whatever may be the spirit or intent of that section, the letter of it does clearly provide for a power which we admit to be a dangerous one. I call the attention of gentlemen to that section, and to its wide scope and application, and I trust that we shall not only vote it down, but provide against the dangerous power which this section, four, or five, in its letter involves.

JOHNSON—BROSNAN.

[July 21.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not present with the committee when it was resolved to strike out this final section, and I am unadvised as to the arguments there presented on the question of striking out; but it is a subject to the investigation of which I have given considerable attention, and I have yet to hear any arguments which will satisfy my mind that it is not proper to retain the provision. I do believe that it is a very important and beneficial provision. Now my learned friend from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) recounts some imaginary evils, that possibly might ensue from the adoption of that provision, which, to his mind, seems to be calculated to produce nothing but evil and injurious results; yet the very instances he cites, in my judgment, carry with them arguments in favor of the retention of the provision.

In the first place, sir, when an accusation is made against a person, whether a judicial officer or otherwise, I do not understand that that accusation necessarily carries with it a conviction. I am not aware that the person accused is thereby convicted in the public estimation. On the contrary, the effect is oftentimes the very opposite. All will admit this, that if the charge is of so grave and serious a nature as to induce two-thirds of the members elected to both branches of the Legislature to depose a judicial officer, there must have been substantial grounds for the accusation. If, on the contrary, the accusation is unsustainable, in so far that the Legislature refuses to remove from office, the party accused, we know from observation, that not only is the accusation stamped with falsehood and opprobrium, but also that the circumstance gathers around the accused hosts of friends. The fact of unsupported charges being brought against a man, is something which is best calculated, under almost all circumstances, to establish and strengthen the reputation and good name of the person assailed. Parties who may partake of the feelings that are engendered against an individual under such circumstances, when an accusation is made, even those who are disposed to believe in the truth of the charge, if the accuser fails to support it, change their views and opinions, and we find large numbers of the community, even of those who had in the outset no special interest in the controversy, at once becoming the firm friends and zealous adherents and defenders of the person who has been unjustly accused.

Now as to the matter of keeping persons occupying judicial offices free from accusations, we know that is simply impossible, whether the Legislature shall or shall not be clothed with this authority. No man, sir, who has ever occupied a judicial position in this Territory, has been free from envenomed shafts assailing his character, whether justly or unjustly, it is not for me to say. I will only say that such has been our experience in respect to judges, and not only here, but also in California. But few men have occupied judicial positions in that State, from the earliest period in its history to the present day, who have not on some occasion been accused of offenses, or had charges made against them in the public press of such a character that had they been pressed and sustained would have condemned them forever to private life. But that argument, to my mind, makes no difference. I take it, that if the case is sufficiently grave to warrant investigation, it would become the duty and the province of the Legislature, under this provision, to investigate the matter, and if not, it is not likely that any person will be found with the unblushing effrontery to go before the Legislature, and there make and seek to establish such accusations.

And it will be observed that there is a material difference between those cases in which an officer may be impeached, and those in which he may be simply removed from office. It will be seen that the article for impeachment does not embrace all classes of cases in which there may be occasion for removal. The difference to which I refer, consists in this: that a person who has rendered himself liable to impeachment for malfeasance in office, is regarded as guilty of one of the most heinous crimes known to an enlightened government. Hence I say this difference exists, that impeachment not only contemplates removal from office, but also disqualification from holding any office of profit or trust thereafter.

Mr. BROSNAN. And the officer is liable to indictment also.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir, I am speaking, however, of a simple case of impeachment, but there are causes for removal which should not be made reason for impeachment. I will give an illustration of my meaning: suppose an incumbent of a judicial position, by reason of impaired health, is not able to perform his duties, but yet he may have a desire to retain the salary or emoluments of his office. His pecuniary circumstances may be such as to require him to retain his compensation, if possible, and there may be a thousand other reasons which would impel him to continue in office, although the public interests are thereby made to suffer. There is no power which can compel a resignation—no power under the Constitution and laws by which another can be invested with the prerogatives of the office, so as to exercise its functions, no matter how greatly the public interests may demand it. He can not and should not be impeached—and yet such a case would constitute one of a class which should call for the interposition of the power of removal, that the public interests may be subserved. It is not a case calling for impeachment, but there should be a power lodged somewhere, if the officer refuses to resign, and cannot discharge the duties of his office, to remove him. We do not want to impeach, and say that he shall never hold office thereafter, but we demand some one capable to discharge the duties of that office. But if we strike out this section, where is this power lodged? Nowhere. He can hold on to the office and receive the salary, although he performs none of the duties, and the public interests may be suffering at the same time. He can bid defiance alike to the Courts, the Legislature, and the Executive. Instances of this kind might be multiplied.

JONSON.

[July 21.

Now, sir, this provision, as we find it in the old Constitution, is not an experiment. We have precedent for the incorporation of that section into our Constitution, and we need not go further for an example than the native State of many of the members of this Convention, and though not the native State of the gentleman from Storey. (Mr. Brosnan.) yet the one in which he grew from youth to manhood, and in which for years he practiced his profession—a State for whose judicial provisions he has, I am sure, great respect, and whose legislation, I am equally confident, he is not indisposed to regard with favor. I allude, of course, to the State of New York. By referring to Article VI of the Constitution of New York—the Constitution now in force, framed some fourteen years ago, by a Convention, in which were found many of the ablest lawyers of that State, those who had occupied positions upon the bench of the Court of Appeals, and in the inferior Courts—we find that they have adopted a similar provision. Their experience seems to have justified the belief that this was not conferring a dangerous power. I refer gentlemen to the provisions of Section 1, of Article VI, of the Constitution of New York, which reads thus:

“SECTION 1. The Assembly shall have the power of impeachment by the vote of a majority of all the members elected.”

Here, they are in advance of us in the matter of impeachment, providing that a bare majority of the members elect shall have the power of impeachment.

“The Court for the trial of impeachment shall be composed of the President of the Senate, the Senators, or a major part of them, and the Judges of the Court of Appeals, or the major part of them. On the trial of an impeachment against the Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor shall not act as a member of the Court. No judicial officer shall exercise his office after he shall have been impeached, until he shall have been acquitted. Before the trial of an impeachment, the members of the Court shall take an oath or affirmation, truly and impartially to try the impeachment according to evidence; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.”

We go further and declare that it shall require two-thirds of all the members elected to convict.

“Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under this State; but the party impeached shall be liable to indictment and punishment according to law.”

That is the section relating to impeachment. Now this language is very similar to that which we have before us, in respect to the removal of officers who are not made subject to impeachment. I refer particularly to Section 11 of the article in the New York Constitution.

SECTION 11. Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the Court of Appeals may be removed by concurrent resolution of both Houses of the Legislature, if two-thirds of all the members elected to the Assembly, and a majority of all the members elected to the Senate, concur therein.

The difference, it will be seen, is this, that we require two-thirds of all the members elected to both branches of the Legislature, whilst in New York two-thirds of the Assembly is required, but only a majority of the Senate.

“All judicial officers, except those mentioned in this section, and except Justices of the Peace, and Judges and Justices of inferior Courts, not of record, may be removed by the Senate on the recommendation of the Governor; but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section, unless the cause thereof be entered on the journals, nor unless the party complained of shall have been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal, the ayes and noes shall be entered on the journals.”

Why, sir, here in the State of New York, a State Government which has passed through a history of more than seventy years, men have deemed it not unwise to adopt provisions in this respect far in advance of anything which is proposed by us, in the Constitution we are engaged in framing for the State of Nevada. They have found it expedient to provide that a certain class of officers shall be subject to removal by vote of the Senate alone, on the recommendation of the Governor; and furthermore, as to another class of officers, in cases where there is not a sufficient cause for impeachment and conviction by two-thirds of the Assembly and a majority of the Senate, that they can be removed by mere resolution. And that provision applies to the Judges of the highest Court in the State—the Court of Appeals. Now, sir, although in regard to this matter of removal from office, as I have remarked, they have taken a step far in advance of what is contemplated by Section 3 of our Constitution, nevertheless, I have yet to learn that that provision of the Constitution of New York has ever operated injuriously in any case. I cannot now call to my recollection one instance in the history of that State—other gentlemen more conversant with its history since the adoption of this Constitution may—wherein by this mode, Judges of the higher Courts have been attempted to be removed. I cannot recall a single instance where this power has been sought to be exercised.

And what conclusion do we deduce from this fact? Simply this: that where there is presented to the minds of judicial officers the fact of the existence of a power that may be evoked by the people's representatives, the knowledge of the existence of such a power undoubtedly has a tendency to place those officers on their good behavior, much more than would the knowledge of the fact that they could only be reached by the tortuous and difficult course of an impeachment, where such mode alone can be resorted to. Knowing the fact that they can be reached with great facility if there is occasion, they have doubtless been more readily disposed to diligence and due attention in performing their duties, discharging them in such a manner as to render needless the interposition of this power. I really believe that the adoption of a provision of this kind would have a most beneficial effect and tendency upon our judicial system. If we place a man in a position where he can bid defiance to all the powers that be, he may be disposed to manifest a kind of independence far different from that character of independence which I desire to see exhibited by judicial officers. My earnest desire is that our judicial officers may be induced to perform their duties in such a manner that no word of reproach or censure can drop from the lips of any man, or find a lodgment in the columns of any newspaper.

Thursday.]

WARWICK—JOHNSON—COLLINS.

[July 21.]

I do conceive that it is possible for judicial officers thus to perform their duties. We have known some instances where men in judicial positions have discharged their trusts so acceptably, even at a period when clashing interests and exciting influences surrounded them, to a degree to which history scarcely presents a parallel. There has been at least one judge in the State of California—I do not know as I can with justice extend the number, but there certainly has been one—who has received the approbation of all. Though men have differed from the conclusions of that judge as to matters of law, yet no breath of calumny has ever been uttered against him. I refer to Judge Norton, probably the only instance of the kind afforded in the history of the California judiciary; and, perhaps, also in latter days in that of New York. But I say that this single instance proves that it is not impossible for a man to so perform his duties as a judge as not to incur censure and opprobrium. Place a provision here by which the judge can be easily reached, and my word for it, not only will there be less occasion for calumny, but less carping and fault-finding among lawyers and litigants. I do not think there can be any injurious consequences resulting from such a course, and we find a notable precedent for it in the Constitution of New York, although, as we have seen, we do not go even as far as they do.

As to the latter section in this article, I think perhaps it would be better to incorporate in it an additional word or two so as to render it clear that it does not mean to embrace any of the officers mentioned in the preceding sections. That was undoubtedly the sense in which it was adopted originally, and no doubt that would be the judicial construction; but the additional words will obviate any possible objection of that character. As to this Section 3, I hope it will be adopted, at least in its essential features, as we find it in the old Constitution.

Mr. WARWICK. I wish to say a word or two on a subject referred to by the gentlemen from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) although it may not be strictly in order. I indorse every word which the gentleman has said in regard to Judge Norton, of California; but in order to show how high is the appreciation which the people have for a good judge, I wish to mention the fact, that after having secured the advantage of his services for a single term, they dropped him without a word, and never so much as offered him a renomination.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the gentleman from Lauder was not a member of that nominating Convention.

Mr. WARWICK. No, sir; I would have voted for him, if I had been.

Mr. COLLINS. I believe that this provision giving the power to remove judges, had its origin at a time when judges were appointed for life, or during good behavior; and there are many considerations attaching to this matter in those days, which are now removed from our consideration in consequence of the shorter term of our judges. And yet I agree with the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) that a judge may not come within the scope and meaning of the provision for impeachment by reason of malfeasance, and still that judge may have utterly lost all his influence, and to all intents and purposes may have become entirely worthless as a judge. There are a hundred cases that I might cite, which would illustrate this point. For instance, a judge may be in a state of ill health, languishing with incurable disease, but he may not see his own condition as others see it. He may hang on to his office from year to year in the hope that he will ultimately recover, although others believe there is no possible hope of recovery. Now I say in such a case there should be some provision by which the Legislature, on the recommendation of the Governor, it may be, shall have the power to remove that man; because to allow him to remain, would be practically to destroy or annihilate, for the time being, the Court of whose bench he was the incumbent.

Now when Massachusetts, in 1820, remodeled her Constitution, when those men standing high on the record for their judicial knowledge, ability, and integrity, who had been selected to compose the Convention, came to consider this subject, Massachusetts, by the voice of that Convention, declared that, on the representation of the Legislature, by a majority vote, the Governor, by the consent of the Council, might remove a judge from the bench; and that is the law of Massachusetts at the present time. In all the amendments which have been made by the Legislature of Massachusetts, and all the attempts at remodeling her Constitution, or changing its various articles, which have been made from time to time, that question has never again been mooted, because the provision was found to work admirably there. So, it is in Texas: it requires there a two-thirds vote for removal; but in Texas, as with us, they elect their judges for a short term of

FRIZELL—CHAPIN—DUNNE.

[July 21.]

years—for six years, I think. In Virginia it only requires a majority of both Houses of the Legislature, on the recommendation of the Governor, to remove a judge. In Ohio it requires a two-thirds vote, but there an officer must be removed, on the recommendation of the Governor, by that two-thirds vote.

Now it occurs to me that a judge may make himself extremely obnoxious, by his associations, by his decisions, or by his social characteristics. He may become so obnoxious to the public as to be worse than worthless, and I contend that our judicial matters are of too high moment to be trifled away by men whose reputation may be lost by reason of their own vices and follies. Would it not be well if Congress had the power to remove a Senator in such case or under such circumstances? Would not the State of California and the whole Pacific coast by that means be relieved of that odium which will attach to them through all time in the future, on account of one man who at the present time disgraces that high station? I have not so much fear that the Legislature will do injustice to a judge, as I have that a judge, by the improper exercise of his power, may do injustice to the people. On the whole, I want this section to remain, because I want to put the judges on their good behavior—because I want to put a power behind them which they may be made to feel—to let them know that there is a power which may be invoked, and which is competent to effect their removal. It makes a very great difference with some men, in regard to their actions, whether or not there is such a power behind them. Some men are so constituted that they never will continuously deport themselves properly unless they are placed upon their good behavior.

Mr. FRIZELL. This Section 3 is one in the retention of which I take some degree of interest. It is a subject, Mr. Chairman, on which very good men would disagree, viewing it from different stand-points. I did suppose, until the reading of the Constitution of New York, by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) that this was really an innovation, or, at least, something more than what is contained in the Constitutions of almost, if not all, of the States; but it appears, sir, that it is not new. We are perfectly well aware, Mr. President, that desperate diseases require desperate, or at least adequate remedies. It is well known that a physician may study a life-time to make up a theory for the treatment of some particular disease, and the discovery may, perhaps, be extended over a whole continent. But then, sir, the same physician may afterwards locate in some particular district where he meets with a form of that disease that is extremely virulent and dangerous in its nature, and after all his theorizing he then finds that he is compelled to change his tactics, and to abandon his theory of practice, which he had adopted after life-long study. Now I need not say to you, Mr. Chairman, and members of this Convention, that this disease which we seek to reach and control, or cure, the disease that has prevailed in this locality heretofore, and which I fear will continue to prevail in the future, is one that is dangerous and difficult of treatment. It is a disease, Mr. Chairman, which attacks the brain, the heart, and the stomach of men, and I almost fear, sir, that it contaminates the soul. And, sir, as an application to such a disease, I know of no better remedy than this Section 3. I hold that when we get good and upright judges on the bench, this section will operate as an incentive and inducement for such men to do their duty boldly and fearlessly. And on the other hand, it will hang like a sword suspended by a single hair over the heads of those men who would deviate from the path of duty, or do that which is evil and wrong. With these remarks, I leave the subject with the Convention, hoping that Section 3 will be retained.

Mr. CHAPIN. I desire to say only a word or two on this subject. I appreciate the objections which gentlemen have urged against this section, but our situation in this country, it appears to me, is a peculiar one, and altogether unlike that of the older States of the Union, where the judges may be men who have been known in the community from their youth up, and where people are able, therefore, to select their judges from among men who have been long known and tried. There they can select men to whom they dare to intrust their lives, their property, their honor—everything. We cannot, for a long time to come, anticipate such a state of affairs here, and therefore I am in favor of retaining this section, so that we may be able to reach those judges whom we may chance to select, in case they should be found unworthy or incompetent, because we shall be compelled to take men about whom we know very little, and in regard to whom we shall be very liable to be deceived. If we are deceived, I want a provision here, by means of which we can reach and remove them, and not be compelled to suffer ruinously, from year to year, in consequence of their malfeasance in office. Therefore I shall vote in favor of retaining the section.

Mr. DUNNE. I am very much surprised to see the great degree of unanimity which seems to prevail in the Convention on the question of retaining this section. I find myself differing apparently from the great majority of the Convention. Still, I cannot but believe that true policy would require the striking out of the section. We live here under a radical Democratic government, and the only conservative balance which we have in our whole scheme of government is the judiciary.

Mr. FRIZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him, and to suggest that the only party which is radically democratic, is the Fremont party. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNNE. If the gentleman considers it necessary for me to explain, I will say that I am not a Fremont man. [Laughter.] I say that the only conservative balance we have in our scheme of government is the judiciary. That is all that is left to us, and if we strike that out we move forward in a headlong career of radical democracy. I am in favor of retaining that conservative balance in our government.

Now in regard to the proposition advanced by some of those gentlemen who are in favor of striking out this conservative balance, that an accusation against a judge does not necessarily affect his character in the least, but that he will come out of the ordeal purified and exalted by the trial—that a mere accusation as to the purity of his character and his honesty of purpose, although made openly and published by the press throughout the State, and canvassed in the legislative halls of the State, does not necessarily reflect upon the character of the person accused, but that if he comes unscathed out of the legislative halls he is exalted by the trial—I do not think that the experience of the world justifies such an assumption. On the contrary, I believe that men can never entertain the same feelings in regard to that person that they could before. In giving this power to the Legislature, then, we are placing this only conservative balance that is left us where it will be subjected to the caprice of popular clamor. Here in this Territory, and proposed State, we are differently situated in regard to our society from those other States, whose Constitutions have been quoted to us upon this point. They have in those States no gigantic monopolies like ours, one or two of which, and possibly one alone, may be the owner and director of perhaps a fifth part of the whole amount of property in the State. By the incorporation of this section we place it in the power of any one of the powerful mining companies existing amongst us to ruin forever any judge who shall dare to stand opposed to it, on any issue that may be raised in his Court. They may not be able to impeach him, or to secure the vote in the Legislature requisite for his removal under this provision, but they can nevertheless ruin him forever, irretrievably, by raising this clamor against him.

Now it has been stated that without a provision of this kind, a judge might bid defiance to the people, and to all the world. I think that assertion is not well founded. In the first place, we have the section providing for impeachment, and the judge is always subject to that, if he commits any act deserving of impeachment. We have also, in regard to this provision, the example before us of the Constitution of the United States. Now, sir, what would be the effect of retaining this section? I think the practical working of it would be such as to give us a poorer class of judges. The people are careless enough, at best, in the matter of the selection of their judges, but give them that section, and they would become more careless still. When some man comes before the people as a candidate for judge, who has attained a good degree of popularity, although his character is somewhat doubtful, if the question is raised as to his character, it will be said that that is not of much consequence—that under this provision it makes no particular difference—because if it should happen to turn out that his character is bad, it will be all right, for they can easily remove him. The tendency of the provision would therefore be to lower the standard of the judicial office.

In regard to the point made by my colleague, (Mr. Banks,) that in the last section we have already a provision made for the removal of any civil officer, I think it was well taken. I ask the attention of the Convention to the reading of these sections. Section 1 confers the power of impeachment, and Section 2 says that "the Governor, and other civil officers under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment," etc. Now if the word "civil" does not include judicial officers, then judges are not liable to impeachment under that section; but if it does, they are liable to impeachment, and they are also liable to removal under this last section, which says that provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of "any civil officer," etc. Therefore, I say this last section reaches all that is reached by Section 3, and for the same reason that I would be in favor of striking out Section 3, I would be in favor of amending the last section by excepting judicial officers.

Mr. NOURSE. I would prefer that this section should be somewhat modified. In the first place, I would prefer that the Governor should have to act in the matter, and not the Legislature alone, dividing the responsibility among so many that no one man feels it. I would prefer that when a judge is to be removed, there shall be some individual responsibility, which shall be an additional check and safeguard against a wanton exercise of power. I would prefer, also, that the New York system should be adopted in that respect, rather than that of my native State of Maine, or that of Massachusetts. In Massachusetts a judge may be removed by the Governor upon the address of the Legislature; but there are very few Governors who would refuse to remove a judge upon such an address, even if he had any inclination that way. The Governor would be apt to say—"The Legislature advises me to do it, and I do only as I am advised." It would be a mere show of the exercise of his discretion, but the case would be very different if upon his own responsibility he had, in the first instance, to make the recommendation. But I only state these preferences to show more clearly why I vote for the section as it is. I think it is better to adopt it as it stands, than to have it left out entirely, and I do not expect, if it be adopted, that there will perhaps ever be an occasion for the exercise of this power; and, at all events, I am very sure that it will not be frequently exercised. But the bare fact that there is such a power, that the judge who does not do his duty satisfactorily to the community at large is liable to removal, I feel certain, in my own mind, will tend to give us more care, more industry, more sense of responsibility, on the part of the judiciary.

I recognize very fully, and feel very strongly, the suggestion of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne)—whose suggestions are always worth listening to—as to the importance of keeping our judiciary independent. The judiciary should be measurably independent, but, at the same time, I think the effect of this Section 3 is simply to prevent the judiciary from becoming too independent. I do not fear that a mining company, or any other interest, can any more readily or easily buy two-thirds of the Legislature, than it can buy one judge. I do not think that argument is entitled to much weight. For the purpose of having our judges feel their responsibility for the faithful and diligent performance of the duties of their office, and not to have merely a means of impeachment in case they should prove unfaithful. I think this Section 3 as it stood in the original article is a desirable one, although, as I have said, I think it could be improved by amendments requiring action, in the first instance, on the part of the Governor. And at the same time I would like to have this final section so amended as to read something like this :

“Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, other than those above named,” etc.

Mr. DUNNE. Allow me to make one suggestion. The point I wished to present was, not that the Legislature by a two-thirds vote could secure the removal from office of a judge, but that men could, for their own ends, raise the question of the removal of a judge in the Legislature, and then, by means of the press, they could raise a clamor about his ears, and in that manner ruin his reputation forever.

Mr. NOURSE. If they can raise any more clamor about judges than has been raised during this last year, they will do pretty well.

Mr. DUNNE. Well, I think they do not need to raise more.

Mr. NOURSE. I confess that I cannot give so much weight to that matter as I can generally to the suggestions of the gentleman from Humboldt.

The question was taken on the amendment inserting Section 3, as contained in the printed article, and it was agreed to.

Mr. NOURSE. I now move to amend Section 4, the final section, by inserting after the word “officer” the words “other than those above named.”

Mr. BANKS. I do not know what the term “above named” may include or imply. In Section 2 of the printed article, we have these words—“The Governor, and other civil officers under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment,” etc. Now the phrase “Governor, and other civil officers,” it seems to me would include all the officers of the State, or, at least, all but officers of the militia.

Mr. JOHNSON. Section 2 provides for the impeachment of the Governor, and all other civil officers; whilst Section 3 provides for the removal of civil officers; and finally Section 4 comes in, and says :

“Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, for malfeasance or non-feasance in the performance of his duties.”

This necessarily confers authority on the Legislature to provide for the removal of a certain class of officers, in case such removal shall be deemed essential to the public interest. But it will be observed that the section, if amended as proposed, can only apply to certain classes of officers. There are in this article several distinct classifications. First, it is provided in section 2, that “the Governor, and all other civil officers, shall be liable to impeachment.” etc.—this includes all civil officers; then Section 3 provides for the removal by the Legislature of judicial officers; and finally this section comes in and supplies the deficiency, in regard to cases not provided for by the preceding sections. It appears to me that even without amendment Section 4 refers back to the preceding sections.

Mr. BANKS. Would it not put the matter beyond all doubt, if we amend the section so as to read :

“Sec. 4. Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, other than the Governor and judicial officers, for malfeasance,” etc.

Mr. NOURSE. I have an amendment here which I think will cover it. I will withdraw my amendment, and move instead, after the words “any civil officer,” in Section 4, to insert the words “other than those hereinbefore specified.” I do not suppose that we mean to give power to the Legislature to make a law providing for the removal of the Governor, or the judges.

Mr. JOHNSON. Section 2 says “the Governor, and other civil officers.” Now a justice of the peace is a civil officer. I think the language originally employed by the gentleman from Washoe covers the case. The article makes three classifications: First—that the Governor and all other civil officers may be impeached; second—that the judges may be removed from office by the Legislature; and third—that all other civil officers may be removed by law.

Mr. DUNNE. And including the Governor, too, if they choose.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. NOURSE. Suppose we say “any county officer,” instead of “any civil officer?” That is all that is intended, I suppose. I imagine that the Executive and the judges are designed to be covered by the preceding sections. Now if we say in this section “any county officer,” would not that cover it all?

Mr. JOHNSON. What would you do with a justice of the peace? He is not a county officer.

JOHNSON—BANKS—DUNNE.

[July 21.

The CHAIRMAN. If gentlemen will agree upon something, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not want to be understood as advocating the giving of power in this section, by which the Governor or other State officers, could be arbitrarily removed. I regard it as important, so far as the Executive and State officers are concerned, that the article shall be left so that they can only be reached by impeachment, although it may be proper to provide that in some cases the judicial officers may be reached by removal from office, under certain restrictions.

Mr. BANKS. I am willing to attribute my not understanding this matter to a very muddy brain, but I must confess that I do not understand it. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) what he understands "the Governor and other civil officers" to include?

Mr. JOHNSON. As including all civil officers, from Governor to constable.

Mr. BANKS. Now does the gentleman understand that that term, "the Governor and other civil officers," means the same thing as the phrase here employed in this final section, or Section 5, as it is numbered, where it says—"Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer?"

Mr. JOHNSON. I stated in my first remarks to the Convention on this subject, that I did not believe this last section was sufficiently definite and expressive of what we intend, and that it should be amended. The only question in my mind is, as to the words to be inserted. Suppose we use the words "county or township officer?"

The PRESIDENT pro tem. How would it do to say "State officer?"

Mr. JOHNSON. I cannot consent to include them. I do not want them to be subject to removal simply by operation of law.

Mr. DUNNE. I am astonished at the proposition advanced, as I understand by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) that we should endeavor to give more stability to the offices of the Governor, Controller of State, Treasurer, and Attorney-General, than we do to the Supreme Court; that the tenure of office of a judge of the Supreme Court shall be of a slighter nature than that of a mere State Controller. That is the effect, if the gentleman has given the true construction of this article. By Section 3 we provide that the Legislature may remove a justice of the Supreme Court, without being able to establish any grounds of impeachment. They may do it, as was said in regard to a certain judge in California, simply "on general principles." The section reads thus:

"Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, for malfeasance or non-feasance in the performance of his duties."

Now the Legislature might enact a law that a majority vote shall be sufficient for the removal, under this section, of a judge; and as

Section 2 provides who may be liable to impeachment, and includes judges in the term "civil officers," the Legislature might by law provide that when a judge could not be removed by impeachment, he might be removed by a majority vote. I think we are getting this thing rather mixed.

Mr. BANKS. Now, sir, if the restriction proposed by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) and which I understand is now being prepared by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) shall prevail, there will be a clear and well defined expression of the idea, which, as we all appear to understand, this section was intended to convey. It seems to be the sense of those who advocate a section of this kind, that its application shall be restricted to the officers of counties and townships. Now I remember very well the condition of things which once existed in the State of California, and which is liable to exist in any State having a large metropolis—as Virginia and Gold Hill, in Storey County, constitute the metropolis of this Territory, as New York City is the metropolis of the State of New York, and as San Francisco is the metropolis of California. As it has been in New York, and in California, so it may be in this Territory. There is always a spirit of antagonism existing between the grand metropolis of the State and the rest of the State. People living in the rural districts of the State of New York, look upon New York City as a sort of grand institution, of which, in one sense, they may feel proud, but against which they are always legislating, and always warring. The history of the police contest in New York will illustrate this fact, and the franchises and privileges granted and provided for by the Legislature, and the almost interminable controversies which have resulted from that kind of legislation, are also instances in point.

In California, also, we have always found the Legislature trying to do something against the interests of San Francisco, and I state what I know, when I say that ever since 1856, except, perhaps, during the last two sessions of the Legislature, if a power of this kind had existed in the State of California, every officer of the City of San Francisco would have been removed. The will of the Legislature has been antagonistic to the will of the people of that city, so far as the choosing of the city officers is concerned. Gerrymandering bills, as they are called, bills providing for new judicial districts, and for the reorganization of the police department, have been devised, for the purpose of defeating by legislation the will of the people of San Francisco, so far as their local officers are concerned. I do not wish to provide in our Constitution for a power in the Legislature, by which the will of the Legislature may be exercised unrestrictedly in such cases. I want to see such provisions that the local officers in every part of our proposed State shall be able to exercise independence; that the people in every county may enjoy that independence which the spirit of our institutions contemplates. In this sense, I am eminently a "squatter sovereignty" man. I believe that the Legislature should have no power, such as is contemplated here, to say who shall and who shall not exercise the functions and prerogatives of local officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman from Humboldt entirely misapprehends the proposition. This section does not give to the Legislature the power of removal. We propose only to confer on the Legislature power to pass a law, by which such officers may be removed. It is to be done by general statute, by which the authority will be delegated to the local authorities, or to the Courts. I think it is an assumption which the language of the section does not justify, to say that the Legislature may exercise the power of removal.

Mr. BANKS. I have not concluded, but I will give way to allow the gentleman from Ormsby to state his case, and then I will proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON. We all understand the inhibitory features which we have adopted. We have required, for the enactment of any law, the votes of a majority of all the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, and the approval of the Executive; or, if such approval is not obtained, then a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch is necessary, in order that a bill may become a law. I think that would be a pretty effectual guard and vindication of the gentleman's doctrine of "squatter sovereignty." Now the people, through their representatives, should be heard in vindication of those matters which they may regard as necessary or desirable to be enacted into laws, and we have already carefully provided against hasty, ill-considered legislation. I do not believe that any of the evils, which the gentleman from Humboldt suggests, can properly be anticipated from the adoption of this provision; but I do conceive that without it, evils may grow up, which we shall have no power to correct. There will be no authority by which those officers can be reached, save by means of impeachment. Now, according to the present programme, the Legislature is to meet every year, for the first two years, and thereafter biennially; but the tenure of office of those to which this section is designed to apply, will probably be only one or two years, and that period will, in many cases, expire before any possible corrective measures could be employed. What would be the consequence? Why, they may act as they will until their term expires, bidding defiance to the people who have elevated them to official positions. Now I want to lodge this power of removal somewhere. If the gentleman from Humboldt can devise a system or plan, which will be any better calculated to meet the case, I have no objection. If the gentleman proposes that we shall resolve ourselves into a Legislature, and pass a law declaring who shall be clothed with this power, and in what cases they shall exercise it, possibly I might even then agree with him, if the system were practically a more commendable one than is already proposed. But still, I must insist that in these minor matters, I do not think we can properly define all the particular features which should be adopted.

The other gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) says, that by this article we make the State officers more permanent than we do the judiciary. Now the way in which I discriminate in that respect is this: the judges, on account of the important positions which they occupy, exercise a wider influence—a power which the combined elements of the executive department could not possibly possess. The judges, on account of their positions, hold in their hands, as it were, the lives and fortunes of individuals, and it is necessary, I conceive, that there should be implanted somewhere, an authority and controlling influence which shall compel a proper performance of duty. That is much more necessary, I hold, in regard to the judiciary than in respect to the State officers.

Now, sir, I would be willing to take a step in advance even of what the gentleman from Humboldt may propose in regard to the removal of State officers. The gentleman is opposed. I understand, to any exercise of this power. I know it is not practically presented in the article before us, and perhaps not legitimately before the Convention for discussion now; but I will say that in regard to the subordinate branches of the executive department, I am willing that the power should be lodged somewhere, possibly with the executive, to remove incumbents from office, or at least to suspend them, pending the investigation of any charges that may be made. I have known of instances in which the interests of the State would be greatly promoted by the exercise of such a power. But this matter does not properly arise here for discussion, and I understand the subject relating to the tenure of the State officers is only urged here as an objection against this judicial feature of the article. I do not think it is a fair mode of discussing that judicial feature. When it properly comes up, upon the presentation of proper amendments to that particular clause, the gentleman from Humboldt may possibly find me, and others, coöperating with him in regard to it.

But I do conceive, judging from numerous precedents that have been afforded us in the history of other States, that this provision in relation to the removal of judicial officers, is wise and judicious. I have had, since this discussion commenced, an opportunity to give only a limited examination, but I find that wherever this feature has been adopted in other States, they have gone considerably in advance of what we propose. The provision in the New York Constitution I have already adverted to, and I would also cite the gentleman from Humboldt to the amended Constitution of

DUNNE—JOHNSON—BROSNAN—NOURSE.

[July 21.]

Pennsylvania, especially in respect to its judicial features. In Massachusetts, the Governor, upon the recommendation of either a majority or two-thirds—a majority I think—of the Legislature, may remove any judicial officer. In Ohio they have gone quite as far, certainly, and I believe farther than we propose, in this respect. In the State of Indiana they have not laid down the particular mode of proceeding which we propose to adopt, but simply provide for removal by law.

Mr. DUNNE. If this concluding section is to stand, I would inquire what is the reason for retaining the provision in regard to the impeaching of judges?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is this: An offense which calls for impeachment is regarded as a crime of a more serious character than that which would simply demand removal. The judgment in a case of impeachment extends not only to removal, but also places a stigma upon the party, by reason of which he is debarred from ever holding any office of trust or profit in the State. Impeachment may go as far as that, but in the matter of removal there is no punishment beyond. The party is simply removed, but the people may, if they will, at any time thereafter, re-invest him with the emoluments and honors of the station from which he has been removed. That is the distinction. And because impeachment may entail a penalty of such extreme character, it has been found a most difficult matter to remove by impeachment any judicial or other officer, even in the most flagrant of cases.

But I was speaking of the precedents afforded by the action of other States on the subject of removal, and I had referred to the Constitutions of New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana. In the present Constitution of the State of Indiana, there is not provided any specific mode of removal, but the power is lodged in the Legislature, to pass a law covering the case. The language of the section is this:

"All State, county, township, and town officers may be impeached or removed from office in such manner as may be prescribed by law."

This, it will be observed, is far in advance of anything we propose. Any and all officers may be removed from office, simply by force of a law to be enacted, and such law would not require the votes of two-thirds of the members elected to both branches of the Legislature. In the State of Illinois, too, they have gone quite as far as we propose. My inquiries have not extended further than the States I have named, but I have no doubt that if I had time to peruse the Constitutions of other States, especially of those which during the last fifteen years have adopted new Constitutions, or adopted amendments, I should find that provisions of a character similar to what we propose have been incorporated in the Constitutions of those States, or in most of them, at least.

We do not find so many precedents in the Constitutions of the older States, but the reason is, that the state of affairs at the time their Constitutions were framed, was of a very different character. I regret to say, from that which has existed in more recent years. In the earlier days of the Republic, judges were generally found to be men unlike those who in later times are unfortunately aspirants for judicial honors. In later times, under circumstances which we can well appreciate and understand, men have been found successful aspirants for those positions who have brought discredit and distrust upon the judicial ermine. The consequence has been, that whenever the States have come to form new Constitutions, or amend old ones, they have almost invariably adopted provisions on this subject unlike such as were supposed to be sufficient in the earlier periods of the history of our Government. For these reasons I think we are following in the line of safe precedents when we adopt a provision which confessedly does not go as far as the Constitutions of many of the States, and certainly is not in advance of any of the newer States.

Mr. BROSNAN. Inasmuch as this discussion has drawn out some ideas and considerations, which to me, at least, are new, I would like to make some inquiries of the gentleman from Ormsby. I should like to know from him—referring now particularly to the language used in Section 2—if his idea be not that all officers, of every description, including Justices of the Peace, are referred to by that section?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think so.

Mr. BROSNAN. I would inquire, then, if the gentleman wants Justices of the Peace to be subject to impeachment by the Legislature?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not, and hence I want this last section adopted, whereby a law may be passed to effect a removal of such officers whenever necessary, without resorting to impeachment.

Mr. NOURSE. I propose to amend Section 2, when the present amendment shall be disposed of.

Mr. BROSNAN. If the gentleman will excuse me—I have not yet concluded—I would inquire of the gentleman from Ormsby if it would not be better to amend that section, and also Section 4, in this way: let Section 2 provide that—

"The Governor and other officers under this State Government, over the grade of county officers, shall be liable to impeachment," etc.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that, or anything that will render specific the meaning of the section.

Mr. BROSNAN. And then let Section 4 be amended so as to read:

"Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any county or township officer, or Justice of the Peace, for malfeasance," etc.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think that would do, perhaps—

Mr. NOURSE. Will the gentleman from

Thursday.]

JOHNSON—BROSNAN—NOURSE—BANKS—DUNNE—WETHERILL.

[July 21.]

Ormsby excuse me a moment, to show him an amendment which I propose to offer?

Mr. JOHNSON. (After examining the amendment.) I was proceeding to remark, in regard to the suggestion made by my friend from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) the only objection I see is that the terms he employs would not perhaps embrace the system of District Judges which we desire to adopt. They are to be elected in the several counties, and may not be considered as State officers. I think that objection is obviated by the amendment which the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) has just now shown me.

Mr. BROSNAN. I had that in my mind when I drew this amendment, which I have suggested. I thought the District Judges would not be considered as State officers, and I have inserted the word "county" so as to provide for them.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the amendment prepared by the gentleman from Washoe meets the case.

Mr. NOURSE. If the Convention will allow me, I propose, after this section is disposed of, to amend Section 2, so that it shall provide that all "State and judicial officers, except justices of the peace," may be impeached, and so on. I will make the motion after this question is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) to amend Section 4 by inserting the words "other than those hereinbefore specified."

Mr. NOURSE. I will modify it, and say "previously," instead of "hereinbefore."

Mr. JOHNSON. Why not say "county and township?" Suppose you insert those words there?

Mr. NOURSE. Very well; I have no objection, if it is necessary. Will the Secretary read it again?

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to insert after the word "officer" the words "other than those in this article previously specified," so that if amended the section will read:

Sec. 4. Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, other than those in this article previously specified, for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his duties.

Mr. NOURSE. I think that is sufficient, as it now reads.

Mr. BANKS. So far as the merits of the question are concerned, it is not necessary to discuss it further; but if we are to insert any words here, I hope they will be such as we all understand the meaning of. It says now that provision shall be made for the removal of any officer "other than those in this article previously specified." Now what officers have been previously specified? "The Governor and other civil officers," in Section 2; and certainly the judiciary have been specified by name in Section 3, besides being included in the more comprehensive term of "civil officers."

However, the gentleman from Washoe now says to me, privately, that he has an amendment which he intends to offer hereafter, which may render it plainer.

Mr. NOURSE. I will read it again, as the gentleman from Humboldt did not understand it. If this amendment is adopted, I propose then to offer an amendment to the second section, so that it will read:

"The Governor, and other State and judicial officers, except justices of the peace, under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment," etc.

Then we shall have the third section, providing for the removal of judicial officers by the two-thirds vote of the Legislature, and then Section 4 providing for the removal, by statute, of any officers "other than those in this article previously specified," for malfeasance, etc.

Mr. BROSNAN. The judicial article, as here printed, provides that the Legislature may create inferior courts. Now in case that is done in any city or town, there might require to be an exception made in this provision.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will not the use of the words "except justices of the peace" embrace such inferior Courts?

Mr. BROSNAN. That is a question, as to whether it would or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to Section 4, offered by the gentleman from Washoe.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question was stated on the amendment proposed by Mr. Nourse to Section 2, to strike out in the first line the words "civil officers," and insert instead the words "State and judicial officers, except justices of the peace," so that the section would read:

"The Governor, and other State and judicial officers, except justices of the peace, under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office," etc.

Mr. DUNNE. I do not see the propriety of excepting justices of the peace from the provision as to impeachment, and at the same time leaving the recorders in little towns within that provision.

Mr. NOURSE. Will the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. DUNNE. No, sir.

Mr. NOURSE. It only includes the State officers, such as the Governor, Attorney-General, Secretary of State, and so on, and leaves all the county officers out.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. WETHERILL. It was not contemplated, I believe, that we should have County Courts, according to the judicial article; but here in Section 3, Judges of County Courts are spoken of. I should think it would be better that one or the other were stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a part of the programme at present, I believe, that we shall have one District Court in each county, and leave it for the Legislature to provide for County or other Courts, if deemed expedient. Hence, the word "county" should be retained.

Mr. BROSNAN. I call attention to another matter. It seems that these officers are rendered liable to impeachment "for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office." I should like to know whether they would not be liable to impeachment for felony?

Mr. NOURSE. It is provided that they may be removed by law "for malfeasance or nonfeasance."

Mr. BROSNAN. Malfeasance or nonfeasance in office is a misdemeanor. All offenses which are not punishable by imprisonment are misdemeanors: those that are punishable by imprisonment are felonies.

Mr. JOHNSON. I cannot just now think of a case where a person would be guilty of felony in office, although he may be guilty of a misdemeanor in office. I do not recollect of any place where such a term as "felony in office" is used.

Mr. BROSNAN. Suppose we say "felony, malfeasance, or nonfeasance in office?"

Mr. JOHNSON. Then if an officer is guilty of felony, you would subject him to impeachment?

Mr. BROSNAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. It seems to me that would be using two words for one thing. If they have any special meaning, it occurs to me that the words "malfeasance and nonfeasance" cover the whole ground. Then we have a provision for mismanagement, or doing things wrong, and also for neglecting to do those things which are required to be done. It does appear to me that the word "misdemeanor" is not at all applicable, and might be left out without deducting in the slightest degree from the strength of the sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee. If gentlemen wish to debate they should offer some amendment, so as to make a question to speak to.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the permission of the committee, I wish to say, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Humboldt, that those words to which he refers are used in different sentences, as he will observe. It seems to me, that as they are here used, those terms, "malfeasance," and "nonfeasance," greatly differ in their meaning. Malfeasance is the improper doing of acts with which a judicial officer may be intrusted, and that seems to be regarded as a higher offense—at least that is the sense in which I understand it here—and punishable with more severity than nonfeasance, or the failure to perform some duty with which the officer may be charged—the one being made ground for impeachment, and the other only cause for removal. In the one case, the wrong doing of an officer—corrupt practice, if you please—may be punished by impeachment; while in the other case, the failure to perform some duty with which the officer is charged, the punishment is removal only. If it is the opinion of gentlemen, however, that nonfeasance, or failure in the performance of duty, should be embraced or included within the terms of the second section of the article, that is, that it should be made a ground-work of impeachment as well as removal, I have no special objection.

Mr. BANKS. What is the object of using the word "misdemeanor"?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it is more comprehensive and significant, implying more than the other word; and they certainly are not synonymous in this connection. I think there is an evident distinction. The provision is copied almost literally from other Constitutions, where the expression is found in the same connection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, the Secretary will proceed to read the next article.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move that the committee rise and report this Article VII back to the Convention. I am opposed to the article as amended, but I want to get it into Convention, where we can vote on the amendments. I do not suppose we shall be deprived of that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand the motion is to rise and recommend the passage of the article.

Mr. BANKS. I shall vote against the recommendation.

The question was taken, and, upon a division, the motion to rise and report was agreed to—ayes, 14; noes, 4.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article VII, entitled Impeachment and Removal from Office, and had instructed him to report the same back to the Convention with certain amendments, in which the committee asked the concurrence of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on adopting the report of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BANKS. I am in favor of adopting a part of the report, and opposed to the adoption of other parts; that is to say, I am in favor of the adoption of Sections 1 and 2, and opposed to the adoption of all that follows. I therefore hope that the question will be taken on each of the sections separately.

Mr. DUNNE. As it is now nearly time for the noon recess, I move that the time be extended ten minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The article will be voted upon by sections, if there is no objection. The Secretary will read Section 1, as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

SECTION 1. The Assembly shall have the sole power of impeaching, but a majority of all the members elected must concur in an impeachment. All impeachments shall be tried by the Senate, and when sitting for that purpose, the Senators shall be upon oath or affirmation, to do justice according to law and evidence. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall preside over the Senate, while sitting to try the Governor on impeachment. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators elected.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was agreed to.

Section 2 was read, as amended by the Committee of the Whole, as follows :

SECTION 2. The Governor and other State and judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office ; but judgment in such case shall not extend further than removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust under this State. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

Mr. BANKS. Now, Mr. President, it will be observed that the amendment which was proposed to this section by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) and which has been adopted by the Committee of the Whole, is an essential, or at least a very important part of the general plan which the Committee of the Whole saw fit to agree upon in respect to impeachments and removals. I am opposed to that general plan, and therefore opposed to the adoption of this amendment, and to the adoption of any amendment to any portion of the article which provides for anything further in the way of impeachment than simply that which was originally provided for by Section 2 of this article. I do not care about taking up the time of the Convention now in regard to it, as it is time for our noon adjournment, and therefore I move that the Convention take a recess until two o'clock.

The question was taken, and on a division the motion was not agreed to—ayes, 10 ; noes, 11.

Mr. BANKS. Now let us see what we propose to do by this amendment. We propose, in the first place, that we will ignore the teachings of the experience and the wisdom of the grandest minds that have ever been called upon to consider the propositions involved in this article. We propose to place in the hands of the Legislature of this State a power greater than that which the people possess. Sir, I think we have nearly all come to the conclusion that there must be, or, at least, that there ought to be, stability in some department of our government. It has been the teaching of our earliest years—it has been the belief of all the great statesmen of our country, that the Executive, Judicial, and Legislative branches of our government should be distinct and separate. Now there is nothing more antagonistic to that teaching than the proposition which you here propose to incorporate into Article VIII of this Constitution. I think that the teachings of those great minds, and the lessons of experience of the past, are worthy of more consideration than has been given to this matter.

Let us inquire how in practice this thing will work. We are nearly or quite all united in the desire that the judiciary shall be independent—that the bench should be rendered wholly independent of the excitements of political elections—and in our neighboring State of California, amendments have been recently adopted by which that end has been at least partially secured. For one, I believe that there should be no election by the people of judicial officers, but that the judges should be appointed in some manner which will secure conservatism upon the bench. I am very sure, however, that no such view of the subject as that would be likely to be adopted by the people of this Territory. I think, on the contrary, that the general opinion is, that we should have elections of judicial officers, but at the same time that those officers should be surrounded by all the devices and arrangements which are calculated to secure the ascendancy of conservative influences. Now what is the practical operation of this matter? Under the plan here proposed, not only your judicial officers, but all your State officers, would be practically under the control of the legislative power of this State, and the result of that would be that there would exist no real independence. There will be really no power, except in the legislative department of your government. Now I do not believe that legislators are free from the excitements which exist in the community. On the contrary, I do know, from past observation, and in some little degree from my own experience, that of all men they are the most likely to be influenced by the prevailing excitements in those communities, which they acknowledge as their constituencies.

I have not time, nor, if I had time, have I the desire to occupy it, to say all that might be said on this subject, for the hour of adjournment is near at hand ; but I will say, that I hope no gentleman will cast his vote in favor of so radical a change as is now proposed, without first well considering the subject. By so doing, they will be departing from all the teachings of the statesmanship of the past, and violating nearly everything which we have been in the habit of regarding as most sacred. I believe if gentlemen will but look to the state of affairs which must almost inevitably exist in our community in the future, they will see that there are many evils to be apprehended from the adoption of this course of policy, more than could be pointed out even in the course of a two hours' speech. I hope that gentlemen will carefully consider these matters before they undertake to make so radical an innovation.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Humboldt. He starts out by saying that those who favor this proposition are about to ignore all the teachings of those who have gone before us. Now I am not willing that this vote should be taken, with such an assertion as that uncontradicted. There has been read here, I think in the presence and within the hearing of the gentleman from Humboldt, by the advocates of this amendment, the provisions of the Constitutions of other States, showing that nearly, if not quite all of the States, which have within a recent period of time revised their Constitutions, have put into those Constitutions about such a provision as the one we propose to adopt, and that therefore we are not only not ignoring the wise teachings of past experience, but, on the contrary, in this matter we are taking lessons of wisdom from those who have gone before us.

DUNNE—FRIZELL—WARWICK—BANKS.

[July 21.

Now, sir, I believe that a judge is a man. I believe, furthermore, that a great many judges are corruptible men. I also believe that there is not a Territory in this Union where the incentives to corruption are anything like as numerous or as strong as they are in this Territory. And I believe, sir, that we ought to adopt this simple and summary way of remedying the evils which may arise in consequence of these facts. When we find that we have a judge who is corrupt—when we learn that fact upon evidence which is uncontradicted, and which is satisfactory to a body of men as intelligent as is likely to be assembled to constitute the Legislature of this State—and I trust, and have confidence to believe, that no man will ever be convicted, unless upon evidence so plain and palpable as to leave the matter beyond a doubt—I say that under such circumstances, I believe the people ought to be promptly relieved from the sway and authority of such a judge—the greatest nuisance, and the most damnable curse that ever afflicted a people.

I am reminded that it requires a two-thirds vote to remove a judge upon impeachment. If that is not a sufficient safeguard against any possible act of injustice, what would gentlemen have? I consider, that when the thing has become so palpable that two-thirds of the Legislature, after a fair and impartial hearing, are convinced that a man is corrupt, it is time to apply the remedy. I ask if justice to those whom he has been elected to represent, upon the particular subjects with which his office is connected—if justice to those whose property, interest, prosperity, life, and everything else is at stake, does not demand that in such a case the remedy shall be promptly applied, and they be relieved from—I will not say a nuisance, but a curse—an actual curse, hanging like an incubus over their prosperity, and over their liberties and lives.

Mr. DUNNE. I only want to call the attention of members to this fact, that they are never going to make a perfect system—that it is not in the power of human nature to produce perfect works. And while gentlemen are endeavoring in this particular to improve and perfect the judiciary and judicial system, I apprehend that the action they propose in that direction would tend to a far greater extent to ruin the system in the other direction. In my judgment, this one amendment would in itself constitute the ruin of the whole judicial system.

Mr. FRIZELL. Disregarding any and all precedents in other States—and I hold that we have numbers of them, although we may admit that no stain of reproach ever rested upon the judicial ermine, perhaps, in the States of Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, and Illinois—yet, I say, disregarding all these precedents, we do surely need to apply radical remedies in this State. Supposing that we had not a single precedent, yet I hold that in this State our situation and our wants are peculiar, and we need to make provision in our Constitution to correspond with our peculiar circumstances.

Mr. WARWICK. I rise to a point of order; that the hour of recess has arrived and passed.

The PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken, and the Convention is at recess.

Accordingly, at ten minutes after twelve o'clock, the Convention took a recess until two o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

IMPEACHMENT AND REMOVAL.

The PRESIDENT stated that the question pending was on the adoption of the amendment made in Committee of the Whole to the article entitled Impeachment and Removal from Office, Section 2 of that article being immediately under consideration.

[Mr. CROSMAN in the chair.]

The question was stated on the adoption of Section 2 as amended by the Committee of the Whole, and the section was read as amended, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Governor and other State and judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office; but judgment in such case shall not extend further than removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust under this State Government. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

Mr. BANKS. There were some things I intended to say, while I was on the floor before the recess, which I did not express on account of the obvious want of time, and I do not desire now to protract the debate unnecessarily. In conclusion of what I was then saying, I will state that this would be just the result, that at every election men who are running for the Legislature will be questioned, either privately or publicly, as to their views in regard to the judiciary. In other words, the Legislature will become a judicial as well as a legislative body; for men will be selected to be sent to the Legislature with reference to their views upon certain judicial decisions. Not merely questions of State policy, but questions which ought to be determined alone by the courts after judicial investigation, will be involved in the political canvass. Inquiries will be made in regard to the standing of gentlemen upon the one-ledge theory, or some two-ledge theory, or some question of riparian rights or possessory rights, it may be, or, to use language which was employed on another occasion, gentlemen will be inquired of as to the meaning of "chattels real" or "real chattels," or something of that kind. Such will be the character of the questions involved every year in the elections of members of the Legislature, and I contend that they are not legitimate or proper. For the reason that by thus questioning the candidates, and voting for or against them with reference to their standing upon such issues, we shall be making the tribunal elected to enact the laws, also the tribunal by which the statutes and the Constitution are to be judicially construed and determined. If we adopt in our Constitution a provision of the nature proposed, I conceive that the most appropriate device for our State Seal would be a representation of Justice as a prominent figure, either sitting or standing, with a bandage over her eyes, but the bandage raised with one finger, and Justice peeping around at the Legislature. [Laughter.] That, it seems to me, would be the most appropriate device, for the plainest logical deductions, drawn from a knowledge of human nature, will lead to the inevitable conclusion that under such a system the Judges of our Supreme Court would be forced to defer to the wishes of the Legislature from year to year, and to the prevailing opinion of the community as it may be manifested from time to time, upon any particular question. There will be no such thing as judicial independence, but on the contrary there will be inaugurated a state of things, under our present circumstances, (and doubtless to continue for a long time to come,) but little removed from pure Red Republican Democracy—little less than anarchy. Every man having an end to attain will be likely to secure his own elevation, or that of some tool of his, to the Legislature, for the purpose of exercising a most dangerous power over the administration of justice. Men of strong, vigorous intellects will be sent to the Legislature, and, acting upon the prejudices excited by violent articles in the public press, they will propose resolutions expelling judges from the bench, and thus a system of terrorism will be established over our judiciary, controlling them by the power of threats, so that they cannot, if they would, act independently. I should deprecate the existence of any such condition of affairs. I know that gentlemen refer us to the bad state of things now existing in our Territory; I know that they tell us there are are well-grounded opinions relative to the corruptibility of our courts, and I believe that is really a very great evil. I do not believe it is as great an evil, however, as it is said to be, or that the corruption is so wholesale as the language of gentlemen would imply, but I am willing to admit, for the sake of the argument, that there have been men on the Supreme Bench of this Territory who were not what they should be, either in point of morals or ability, for the discharge of the duties of that position. All that I am willing to concede; but nevertheless, I ask, shall we adopt as a permanent system, one involving so much of danger as does the proposition which is now before us for consideration, and which I greatly fear is supported, conscientiously and candidly I have no doubt, by a large majority of the members of this body.

Mr. WARWICK. I know, sir, that it is natural for men to shrink from an experiment the results of which are entirely problematical; but, after listening to the arguments, pro and con, I fail to perceive the dangers to which the gentleman from Humboldt alludes, and I am only astonished that he should have advanced the idea that we can with any degree of propriety place upon our great seal of State a standing figure of Justice, with one hand applied to a bandage over her eyes, signifying politically that justice is "all in my eye." [Laughter.]

Mr. BROSNAN. I hope the gentleman does not mean any personal reflection upon the Committee on State Seal. [Merriment.]

Mr. WARWICK. In order to show that I intended no allusion to the gentleman, I will remind him that my friend from Humboldt referred to a sitting figure, while I distinctly said that my figure was standing. That "lets the gentleman out."

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman mean to keep Justice standing all the time?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Gentlemen will please preserve order, and not interrupt the gentleman from Lander.

Mr. WARWICK. Now, sir, I do not imagine that the attention of those we send to the Legislature will be exclusively drawn to the judiciary, or any more to that than it will be to other subjects. If that were the sole question to come under their consideration, then there might be a chance of the evils arising which have been foreshadowed by the gentleman from Humboldt. But there are other important matters for their consideration, and it is impossible that a Legislature could be selected simply and solely with regard to how members stand on any question connected with the judiciary. There may be far more grievous evils to redress than those under which the community is now suffering, from the clogging of the wheels of justice, and the want of that even balance of the scales, which every citizen, even the humblest, has a right to expect. I am in favor of adopting the amended section.

Mr. DELONG. I am not afraid to adopt anything, merely for the reason that it may have the character of novelty, although it may be an innovation upon all the precedents of the past. If I could see, from the suggestions of the friends of the measure, that any good was likely to result from it, I should not hesitate to give it my support, and it may be that I am unfortunate in not having been present before to-day, so as to hear the views advanced by others in their advocacy of this proposition. But from the lights before me, and my experience in the past, I must say that I can foresee no good to result from such an innovation, while, on the other hand, I think that I can see that much of evil may ensue.

DELONG.

[July 21.

In the first place, it strikes me that the proposition is a blow aimed directly at a theory which lies at the very foundation of our government; I mean that theory which proposes to keep the three great departments of the government as independent of each other as it is possible to make them, and at the same time not allow either to be so completely independent that it may perpetrate wrong with impunity, with no power anywhere to remove, or in any manner to punish for the wrong-doing. It is that independence which, above all other things, attracts the admiration of all good citizens to behold—that independence which, in an hour of trial, at a period of time when the public mind seems to have run wild in its condemnation of some man, or some particular measure, perhaps, enables the judge occupying his official position, to stand as firm and unbending as a granite monument, throwing around the man who may be charged with crime, or the cause which may be prejudged by interest or by passion, all the protection which the law affords, and which justice accords to that man or that measure, never yielding in the least to the demands of popular clamor. Sir, I tell you, and I tell this Convention, that in this country, above all others, our judiciary needs to be left in a position of independence—free from the danger to arise from the clamor of temporary public excitement—so that they may discharge their duties fearlessly and impartially, with manly firmness, and liable only to impeachment by that deliberate and solemn mode which is pointed out in the Constitutions of other States.

There has been since the inauguration of the judiciary in this Territory, a series of the most damnable "raids," if I may be permitted to use that expression, concocted and carried on against the judiciary, and against every man who has occupied official judicial position in this Territory. Not a man has been so unfortunate as to occupy a seat upon the bench of Nevada Territory, but has been charged with corruption and wrong-doing, in one way or another. And why? There are a good many reasons which might be assigned. In the first place, there are many bad, unprincipled men here—men who have come here with the design of snatching a fortune by some means, and then leaving the Territory; and when such men have seen the coveted fortune within their immediate grasp, and then failed to obtain it, because they had no right to it, they have turned around, and out of revenge have endeavored to blast the character of the judges by whose decisions their designs have been thwarted. There are also other reasons for such a state of things. Good men are often divided in their interests and their opinions, upon questions which the judiciary are called upon to settle; and it is almost impossible to convince a man of that class, in this Territory, who has lost a case in Court upon a question on which he, like other citizens, has formed and cherished the most decided opinions as to what are the real merits involved in the issue, that the judge who has decided against his views, is anything but corrupt and unworthy. Such men think that the whole world should view everything through their eyes, and they are not disposed to charity in regard to any man who may differ with them. Mining suits are commenced or conducted by learned counsel, surrounded all the time by men who are interested and engaged in preparing it, and during its progress of preparation, for six months or a year, they see only their own side of the case. Being wholly absorbed in that, they never get a glimpse of the other side. Go to one of them in such a case, and you will find him perfectly sanguine—not a doubt in the world that he is going to win, there appears to be such an abundance of proof, and such a clear case. Not looking at the case at all from the stand-point of the other side, they are perfectly surprised and astounded by a judgment against them, although the other side, with their view of the case, would perhaps have been equally surprised by a judgment the other way. What is the consequence? Why, that not one case in a hundred of this class is decided, but the party defeated comes right out and charges the judge with corruption. That is almost inevitably the case. Sir, I have come at last to regard the complaints of these parties as scarcely worthy an instant's attention, and much less would I allow them to shape our institutions, in a matter of such vast moment as the judicial system of the State.

I know that preparations are going on to arraign a party against certain decisions of the courts affecting the mining interests, and public meetings are to be called to ascertain how many are in favor of one theory or another; and the decisions of the judges, one way or another, are to be discussed in public meetings, as they are in the public prints. What is the object? It is simply to show the opposite side, and the judge who might possibly be inclined to decide in their favor, that if they do so they are in danger of public condemnation—that they cannot decide in a particular way without great danger, because the voice of the community is the other way. Now I do not charge these people who are engaged in getting up such public demonstrations with doing wrong, for it is the right of the people at all times to assemble together and discuss questions of public interest. I admit that such is their undoubted right, but I refer to this matter merely as an instance in point, as an illustration, to show the great danger of leaving the judiciary, above all other departments of the government, in a condition to be swayed by every temporary popular excitement, instead of by their own convictions of right.

DELONG—COLLINS.

It is different with the Legislature, coming fresh from the people every two years. I know it has passed into a fashionable custom throughout the United States, and in every State in the Union, for the people to charge the Congress of the United States, and their several State Legislatures, with corruption and dishonesty. It is fashionable everywhere in this country to accuse the great mass of legislators of being corrupt. It has been my pleasure to be for four years a member of the Legislature of a sister State, and I know that it became so common to speak of passing "thieving bills," and of buying up the votes of members, that it was not regarded as an insult, even, when referred to in the presence of members of that legislative body. The thing became so customary that it ceased to attract attention, no matter how broadly the assertion might be made. I do not, for myself, believe there is generally good ground for such sweeping charges against legislative bodies, but although the fashion of making them is undoubtedly fraught with evil, yet they are charges which do not strike so deep, as when men come to attack the character of the judiciary, by charging the judges on the bench with corruption. The people are content as to the Legislature, because they know that if they pass laws that are wrong they have their remedy in reserve, by an appeal to the courts. They have a right to go to the courts, and, if error has been committed in the passage of any law, they can there find relief. But carry these popular denunciations a step further, and impress upon the people the idea that not only the Legislature, but the Judiciary also, are corrupt, and that moment you instil into the public mind a contempt for all law, and a strong tendency to anarchy—an end which bad men among us may desire, and perhaps hope to accomplish.

I tell you, sir, that we cannot be too careful to preserve the public respect for the judiciary, and hence it would be dangerous to attempt this proposed innovation, especially now and here, where the community is made up of men who have met together from every land, for the most part strangers to each other, not knowing who is to be trusted, where interests involving millions are often to be decided in a single case, and where consequently the passions of men are more inflamed, and hence the hazards of the State are greater. I maintain that our safety lies in preserving the public respect for the judiciary, and I hope to see the time when it will not do for public journals of any class, or in any quarter, to bruit a rumor against a man holding judicial position, until the facts can be shown as the foundation of the rumor, until the specifications can be made public in connection with the charge, so that the man accused may know what he has to reply to. Why, sir, to-day the papers are teeming with charges against one whom I believe to be as high-minded and incorruptible as any man in our community, and as high above his accusers as the sun is above the earth; and yet, though you may answer and deny these charges, you call in vain upon the papers uttering them, and their correspondents, to specify the basis of a single charge, or to name any particular instance in which he has been corrupt or has done wrong, in order that it may be answered. The paper and the correspondent are silenced by such demands, but yet only a few days will elapse before the stream of invective breaks forth again from a new source, and again challenges reply; and so the thing goes on, until the man assailed, and his friends, are sick and tired of noticing it.

I hope that at this time, when we are suffering under so many evils, we shall not so far lose sight of our duty as to place the judiciary within the power of public opinion, so that men filling responsible and honorable judicial positions will be compelled to forget the cause of the culprit at the bar, or of the party who happens to be engaged in the defense of an unpopular issue, and yield to public clamor in order to save their judicial ermine. I hope we shall not place our judges in a position where they will be forced to mete out what the popular party calls for, right or wrong. It is because I am afraid this innovation would have that effect, that I think it is dangerous, and I cannot see that, on the other hand, there is any compensation by securing an uncertain good. I ask that the amendment may be defeated, believing, as I do, that it will be most mischievous in its consequences.

Mr. COLLINS. I look upon this amendment as anything but mischievous in its tendency, and to omit the insertion of something of this kind in our Constitution, would be, it seems to me, almost an innovation upon the general usages and customs of the several States in this Union. My friend, the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong.) says, as I understand him, that during his membership of the California Legislature, almost every bill that was passed, the charge of corruption was bruited about; but I ask the gentleman, how much of value was attached to charges and declarations of that kind? Why, sir, they have no value at all; and it is not to be presumed that this nervousness and irritability, to which he has referred, occasioned by judgments pronounced on the bench against certain parties, will have any influence over the public mind generally, and certainly not over a legislative body. I ask the gentleman what influence statements of that kind, under such circumstances, would have over a body like this? Just none at all; and I question whether, with all the declarations that have been made against members of the judiciary of this Territory, it would be possible to get two-thirds of any legislative body to pronounce against any one of them. It must be a very serious charge, indeed, and well sustained by evidence, before impeachment would be given by the Legislature.

But this provision does not relate to impeachment; there is another section providing especially for that subject. Everybody knows how difficult it is to secure the impeachment of a judge, however guilty he may be, because that punishment is so extreme that men shudder at it; and if there is a possibility of raising a doubt in relation to the guilt of the party accused, he will never be removed by that process. This proposition contemplates other matters, and another remedy, and I contend that the people have some rights, as well as the judges on the bench. It contemplates, in the first place, the case, for example, of a man who may be in feeble health, and for that reason unable to discharge the duties of a judge. He may be unable to appreciate his own condition, and feel sanguine as to his speedy recovery, although all his friends know that his case is hopeless, and his remaining upon the bench is an injury to the community. And whenever a case of that kind is brought before the Legislature, without any charge being made which would affect the moral standing of the judge, or the man, it is provided that the Legislature, having in view solely the interest of the community, may have the power to remove him. It is no good reason why the wheels of justice should be blocked, that it is unpleasant to bring a man before the legislative tribunal, who is really unable to perform the duties of a judge, although he thinks he should still be allowed to enjoy the salary.

Again, a man may unfit himself for the judicial position by his own misconduct. His intemperate habits, his consorting with gamblers, perhaps, or his associations generally, independent of any judicial decisions, may be such as to create a strong prejudice against him, destroying the confidence of men, and rendering his judicial reputation of no value. I say it would be doing the State a very great injustice to allow such a man to hold on to his position, and let the public interests suffer without any remedy for the evil. I might go on, if necessary, and rehearse a dozen instances of similar character, where the circumstances would not be such as to warrant a proceeding by impeachment, and yet there ought to be some remedy, such as is proposed in this section, by which to relieve the people from the burden imposed upon them.

Mr. JOHNSON. I regret that the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) has retired, because I desire to reply to some remarks which he has made. I regret also that the gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) was not present this morning, when this subject was under discussion, as then he would have been advised of a fact of which I apprehend from the general tenor of his remarks he is not at present cognizant. When the gentleman speaks of innovation in connection with this matter, I do not entirely understand his meaning; whether he means to imply by the word "innovation" that we are proposing something here which is novel and untried, a feature which has not been adopted in the Constitutions of other States, or whether he means merely that it is proposed to do something which the committee did not contemplate; that is, reinstate something in the article which the committee deemed it proper to strike out, and thereby make a change in our action, or pursue a course different from what was contemplated by the committee.

Mr. DELONG. It is partially both. I will state that so far as my acquaintance extends it is an innovation upon the general system pursued throughout the United States, although I may be in error in that. My remarks, however, referred to that point, and also to the fact that the proposition, after it had received the calm and careful deliberation of that large portion of this body constituting the Judiciary Committee, had failed to meet with the approval of that committee. It was partly on that ground that I spoke of it as an innovation.

Mr. JOHNSON. I apprehend that the gentleman meant mainly to refer to the action of the committee, because I am convinced that if he had investigated the subject himself, or had been present this morning when reference was made to so many States which have adopted substantially the same provision, he would not have regarded it as in any sense an innovation upon judicial systems, as found in the Constitutions of other States. And so far as the action of the committee is concerned, I am sure, because I fully appreciate the gentleman's sound judgment, that he did not mean to imply by his remarks that there would be any impropriety in reversing the action of the committee, or that the opinion of the committee should be in any manner binding upon the Convention, or even upon his own action in the Convention.

Mr. DELONG. I will say this: that if I meet with a committee to deliberate on any subject, and unite with the committee in making a report upon it, and thereafter for any reason my views on that subject change, I would consider that I had just as much right, in Convention, to go right against the letter and spirit of such report as if I were not on the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt of that. If any member acts on a committee, and unites in making a report, especially after the subject has received but limited investigation, he is not necessarily bound by the action of the committee. I would not conclude so myself, certainly, unless under very extraordinary circumstances.

Then, as to this other matter—the point made by the gentleman, as I understand him, that this proposition is a change or innovation upon the Constitutions of other States. In my remarks on the subject this morning, I stated that the time afforded, since the discussion arose, had not been sufficient to enable me to examine all the State Constitutions, with reference to this particular provision, and I may furthermore say, that the time since morning has not sufficed for so thorough an examination as I would like to make, my attention not having been specially directed to the subject. But here I find some additional references, which may have some bearing in the way of precedents, so far as they are applicable, for the guidance of the Convention. I refer the gentleman from Storey now more particularly to the provision in the Constitution of the State of Maine, Article IX, Section 5.

"Every person holding any civil office under this State may be removed, by impeachment, for misdemeanor in office; and every person holding any office may be removed by the Governor, with the advice of the Council, on the address of both branches of the Legislature. But before such address shall pass either House, the causes of the removal shall be stated, and entered on the journal of the House in which it originated, and a copy thereof served on the person in office, that he may be admitted to a hearing in his defense."

In the Constitution of Massachusetts, to which I referred this morning, we find this provision in Chapter III, Article 1 :

"The tenure that all commissioned officers shall by law have in their offices, shall be expressed in their respective commissions; all judicial officers, duly appointed, commissioned, and sworn, shall hold their offices during good behavior, excepting such concerning whom there is different provision made in this Constitution. Provided, nevertheless, the Governor, with consent of the Council, may remove them upon the address of both Houses of the Legislature."

The Constitution of the State of New York, to which I adverted at some length this morning, contains provisions which I then read, and which are not dissimilar to what we here propose.

Mr. DELONG. Do you refer to the revised Constitution of the State of New York?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Convention which framed it met in 1850.

Mr. COLLINS. In 1846.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, at all events, it is the Constitution, the provisions of which are now in force in the State of New York, and I read from Section 11, of Article VI, of that Constitution :

"Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Court of Appeals, may be removed by concurrent resolution of both Houses of the Legislature, if two-thirds of all the members elected to the Assembly, and a majority of all the members elected to the Senate, concur therein."

Here, it is provided that the judges of the highest Courts known to the laws of that State, may be removed by a simple resolution of the Legislature. In the first two States to which I referred, Massachusetts and Maine, it is provided that removals may take place upon petitions of the Legislature, whilst in New York, a vote of two-thirds of the members of the Assembly, and a majority of the Senators, is sufficient to accomplish the purpose. Then the section proceeds :

"All judicial officers, except those mentioned in this section, and except Justices of the Peace, and Judges and Justices of inferior Courts, not of record, may be removed by the Senate on the recommendation of the Governor; but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section, unless the cause thereof be entered on the journals, nor unless the party complained of shall have been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal, the yeas and noes shall be entered on the journals."

Such are the provisions we find contained in the Constitution of the State of New York.

Again, in the amendments to the Constitution of Pennsylvania, adopted in 1850, especially referring to and embracing the judicial system, I discover that after fixing the tenure of office of the several judges, of the superior as well as the inferior Courts, for specified terms of years, "if they shall so long behave themselves well," the following provision is added, as applicable to all the judges :

"All of whom shall be commissioned by the Governor; but for any reasonable cause, which shall not be sufficient grounds of impeachment, the Governor shall remove any of them on the address of two-thirds of each branch of the Legislature."

To this clause I especially refer the gentleman from Storey. (Mr. DeLong.)

In the Constitution of Ohio, Article IV, Section 17, a provision of this kind is found :

"Judges may be removed from office by concurrent resolution of both Houses of the General Assembly, if two-thirds of the members elected to each House concur therein; but no such removal shall be made, except upon complaint—the substance of which shall be entered on the journal—nor until the party charged shall have had notice thereof, and an opportunity to be heard."

The Constitution of Indiana was alluded to in the course of this morning's debate. Whilst there is no provision made in that Constitution with special reference to the impeachment or removal of judges, yet, in Section 8 of Article VI, a general power is given to the Legislature in these words :

"All State, county, township, and town officers may be impeached or removed from office, in such manner as may be prescribed by law."

Under that provision it would be competent for the Legislature to provide for the removal of a judge by a simple majority vote of the Legislature, or in such other mode as might be best calculated to subserve the occasion.

The provision in the Constitution of Illinois is couched in language very similar to that which we propose to embrace in this amendment. It is found in Section 12 of Article V.

"For any reasonable cause, to be entered on the journals of each house, which shall not be sufficient ground for impeachment, both Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Circuit Court, shall be removed from office on the vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the General Assembly: provided, always, that no member of either house of the General Assembly shall be eligible to fill the vacancy occasioned by such removal: provided, also, that no removal shall be made unless the Justice or Judge complained of shall have been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have an opportunity of being heard in his defense."

Whilst this language varies slightly, yet in substance it is the same provision which we propose to embrace in our Constitution, by the re-incorporation of Section 3, heretofore stricken out of this article on the recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary.

As to the matter of impeachments, I find contained in the Constitution of Wisconsin a very essential variation from the generally received rule in regard to the number necessary to convict in a case of impeachment, requiring simply a majority instead of a two-thirds vote, as in most other States. The provision is in Section 1, of Article VII.

"The Court for the trial of impeachments shall be composed of the Senate. The House of Representatives shall have the power of impeaching all civil officers of this State for corrupt conduct in office, or for crimes and misdemeanors; but a majority of all the members elected shall concur in an impeachment."

Then proceeding further, it provides that no judicial officer shall exercise the functions of his office after impeachment, until acquittal.

On the subject of removal the Wisconsin Constitution also contains substantially the same provision as we desire to adopt, Section 13 of Article VII reading as follows:

"Any Judge of the Supreme or Circuit Court may be removed from office by address of both houses of the Legislature, if two-thirds of all the members of each house concur therein, but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section unless the Judge complained of shall have been served with a copy of the charges against him, as the ground of address, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal the ayes and noes shall be entered on the journals."

In the Constitution of Kansas I find, Article III, Section 15, this provision:

"Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the District Courts may be removed from office by resolution of both Houses, if two-thirds of the members of each House concur. But no such removal shall be made except upon complaint, the substance of which shall be entered upon the journal, nor until the party charged shall have had notice and opportunity to be heard."

Now, sir, I have not had an opportunity of examining the Constitutions of all the States of the Union, but my impression is that in nearly all of them there are provisions which do not vary materially from those which I have read; and by a comparison of this section which we propose to adopt with those contained in the Constitutions of other States relative to the same subject, it will be seen that we have at least gone quite as far in securing the rights of the party who may be accused as they have in other States; whereas, in some of the instances which I have cited, there is even a wider latitude given. In some States, upon a petition of members of both branches of the Legislature, the Governor has power, with the concurrence of his Council, to remove from office at once; in others, the like end is accomplished by a resolution passed by a two-thirds vote in each branch, and in others, or in one at least, simply a majority of one branch of the Legislature is required, together with a two-thirds vote of the other branch, no State, I believe, going beyond that; and generally the restrictions are no greater than we propose to incorporate into the instrument which we are engaged in framing.

I have not heard in any instance of this system of removal operating injuriously, or that there has been any complaining in regard to it. On the contrary, I find that in many of the instances to which I have adverted the provision has been adopted as the result of experience acquired through the operation and working of similar provisions contained in the Constitutions of other States. In several of the later State Constitutions I remark that the provision seems to have been copied, or adopted in substance, at least, with but very slight change of phraseology, from amendatory provisions in the Constitutions of older States, and I believe the provision will be found embodied in some form in the Constitutions of nearly if not quite all of the States which have been created or organized in later years, or which have within a few years past had occasion to revise their fundamental laws; thus to my mind betokening the fact that such a provision is the result of experience—that it has been found to be a necessity to provide for the class of cases to which it refers—that it is the result of the observation and experience of the eminent men who have participated in the formation of the organic laws of those States; and for my own part I can foresee none of the evils to which my friend from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has alluded, as likely to arise from its adoption.

My friend from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) and his colleague (Mr. Dunne) have both expressed their views on this matter. They find no particular objection to Section 1 of this article, which gives a majority of the Assembly power to impeach, with a view to removal, in that mode, then requiring a two-thirds vote of the Senate to render the impeachment effective. They have no complaint to make that thereby would be granted a dangerous power to the Legislature.

Mr. DELONG. But in that case the Legislature has no power to act at all, unless the party accused is liable to impeachment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very true; but the gentleman will perceive that there may be cases not of a kind to afford ground of impeachment—instances that cannot properly be made the subject matter of impeachment. The idea of an impeachment is, that it carries with it a punishment which may be greater than that of removal; although the punishment cannot extend beyond that of rendering the party incapable of holding any office of honor, profit, or trust, under the government of the State; yet, whilst it does extend to removal from office, it may at the same time embrace, as a part of the punishment, a subsequent inability to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust, under the State Government. Therefore, the very crime with which the party impeached is charged, and of which he is convicted, stands out in bold relief as a higher grade of offense, carrying with it

DELONG—JOHNSON.

[July 21.

this higher degree of punishment; whereas, there may be causes which would not be of sufficient magnitude to justify one branch of the Legislature in impeaching, and the other in convicting the party offending, but at the same time would be sufficient to justify his removal from office, carrying with such removal no additional punishment.

Now, sir, I have heard no complaint from these gentlemen to whom I have referred, or others who are opposed to Section 3, with reference to the operation of Section 1, by which, a simple majority of all the members elected to one branch, is sufficient for an impeachment, requiring, however, a two-thirds vote of the other branch to render such judgment effective, or to convict the party impeached; whilst in this other, the third section, wherein it is proposed that removal shall be secured by a less tortuous course than by impeachment, we go still further, and require the concurrence of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch. Now I cannot conceive what should constitute, in a greater degree, the palladium and safeguard of our rights, than this conservative provision; yet, in the one clause, where a majority of one branch, and two-thirds of the other, is sufficient for removal, gentlemen see nothing objectionable, while in the other, which requires two-thirds of each branch for removal merely, they foresee great evils. Sir, I submit to the good sense of the Convention, which is the more secure, and which is likely to attain the best results, without doing any injury or injustice to the party accused, the provision for impeachment, to which gentlemen do not object, or the feature which we propose to adopt providing for removals from office?

Mr. DELONG. Is not that just the point of the whole thing? Is not the point this: that men would be very reluctant to find a judge guilty under articles of impeachment, on account of the severity of the punishment; whereas, if they were clothed with power to remove simply, without imposing any severe penalty, they might exercise that power of removal in such a manner that evil consequences would be likely to arise? Would not the Legislature prefer, in every case, to remove a man in that manner, rather than resort to impeachment?

Mr. JOHNSON. I apprehend that very few cases of such a kind would arise, where there would be any possibility of obtaining a two-thirds vote. It could only happen in instances where it would be quite obvious that the public interests would be subserved, because it would require a most flagrant case of abuse, or of neglect of duty in office, to secure the votes of two-thirds of each branch in favor of removal. The other gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) has cited an illustration, in which it would undoubtedly be proper to remove a judge without resorting to impeachment, where there is no positive accusation of improper practice—and in repeating it, I am only restating what has already been well said on this branch of the subject. He suggests a case of this kind, where the health of the judge is such that he is incapable of rendering due service, although he may be unwilling to resign, because he naturally clings to the hope of recovery, and yet the public interests are suffering. In such a case there is no relief or remedy provided, without some provision of this character, for we all agree that there would not then exist sufficient ground of impeachment. Must the public interests in such a case continue to suffer, and no possible means be afforded to remedy the evil? The judge could hold his office and receive the salary, and we would have no relief, unless we provide for some supervisory power, with such constitutional authority as will enable us, under proper restrictions, to remove a judge. Where there is an utter failure to perform judicial functions, it is equally as injurious to the interests of the public, as if the judge were utterly corrupt.

I might proceed to an unlimited extent, perhaps, if it were necessary, to enumerate cases where there would be proper ground for removal, although falling far short of being proper ground for impeachment, and where, beyond all question, the public interests would be subserved by removal: and I apprehend that that is the reason why in other States the same rule has been adopted, which we propose to copy, requiring a larger number of votes to remove by resolution than is necessary to impeach.

My friend from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) in his remarks upon this subject, evidently intended to resort to sarcasm, although I confess that I failed to see the point. And I must say I regret, that on this occasion—I believe for the first time in this Convention—he should have seen fit to forsake the line of legitimate argument. I do not see the point of his sarcasm, or its applicability to this question.

I really cannot discover that any injury is likely to result from this proposition, especially when we are only following in the beaten track pursued by the wise men of other States—those who have themselves, in turn, merely followed in the footsteps of other learned men, engaged in framing the Constitutions of States in the early history of our country. If those men found sufficient cause from their own experience and judgment, to warrant them in adopting this so-called "innovation," I do not suppose we can be considered as arrogating to ourselves extraordinary wisdom, if, conceding to that knowledge and experience which induced others to forsake the beaten track, we make this "innovation." I think we shall only be acting wisely by incorporating into our Constitution a provision which the experience of mankind, in our own country, at all events, has found to be necessary.

I confess that I have not that profound and reverential regard which some profess for the men who assembled in Conventions in the early days of the Republic, when the Government was yet but an experiment. Some argue that it is an experiment still, and is at this time being put to the severest test. Be that as it may, I am not, I say, one of those who look with such exalted veneration upon the men who framed our institutions in the days of our infancy, and yet can see nothing worthy of imitation in the labors of those who succeeded them. I think we will do well to observe somewhat the labors of those who have had an opportunity to improve upon what their predecessors have enacted. We have abundant illustration of the wisdom of that course in the constitutional provisions which, as we read, were adopted in recent years by such States as the great State of New York, famed for the wisdom and ability of its statesmen, who assembled in the Convention of 1845; Massachusetts, Maine, Illinois, Kansas, and other western States which have come into the Union within the present generation. I think we are judging wisely when we avail ourselves of their experience in years past, and incorporate into our fundamental law, from the provisions which they in their wisdom and judgment have thought it expedient to adopt, such features as are adapted to our condition. I can foresee no injurious consequences to affect us, which were not just as likely to result by the adoption of the same provisions in those States. For these reasons, as well as others, which I might advance if time could be afforded, I trust the several provisions, as they are here presented, will be adopted and retained, at least in their essential features. ["Question, question!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. stated the question to be first on the pending amendment to Section 2, to strike out the word "civil," and insert instead the words "State and judicial;" and also to insert after "officers," the words, "except Justices of the Peace."

The SECRETARY read the section as it would stand with the amendments, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Governor and other State and judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office; but judgment in such case shall not extend further than removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust, under the State. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law.

Mr. DELONG and others demanded the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 14; nays, 10—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Folsom, Frizzell, Gibson, Hawley, Lockwood, Murdock, Nourse, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—14.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, DeLong, Dunne, Hovey, Kennedy, Mason, and Proctor—10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the voting—

Mr. McCLINTON. I would like to be excused from voting, for the reason that I have not heard the discussion on this matter, and am not well posted.

No objection being made, Mr. McClinton was excused.

The result of the vote having been announced, as above stated—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. said the question next was on the adoption of Section 2, as amended.

The question was taken, and the section was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. stated the question next on the amendment to reinstate Section 3, heretofore stricken out on the recommendation of the Judiciary Committee.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 17; nays, 9—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Chapin, Collins, Crossman, Folsom, Frizzell, Gibson, Hawley, Lockwood, Murdock, Nourse, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—17.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, DeLong, Dunne, Hovey, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, and Proctor—9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. said the next question was upon the amendment to Section 4 offered by Mr. Nourse, to insert after "civil officer," the words "other than those in this article previously specified," so that the section would read:

"SECTION 4. Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, other than those in this article previously specified, for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his duties."

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment, and the vote was—yeas, 15; nays, 11—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Crossman, Folsom, Frizzell, Gibson, Hawley, Lockwood, Murdock, Nourse, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—15.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, DeLong, Dunne, Hovey, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, and Proctor—11.

So the amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question now is on the adoption of Article VII as amended, and ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. BANKS. As it is a short article, and important amendments have been adopted, I ask for the reading of the entire article as now amended. Then we can all vote understandingly.

The SECRETARY read the article, as follows:

ARTICLE VII.

IMPEACHMENT AND REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

SECTION 1. The Assembly shall have the sole power of impeaching, but a majority of all the members elected must concur in an impeachment. All impeachments shall be tried by the Senate, and when sitting for that purpose, the Senators shall be upon oath or affirmation, to do justice according to law and evidence. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall preside over the Senate while sitting to try the Governor upon impeachment. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators elected.

COLLINS.

[July 21.]

SEC. 2. The Governor and other State and judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office; but judgment in such case shall not extend further than removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust under this State. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

SEC. 3. For any reasonable cause, to be entered on the journals of each House, which may or may not be sufficient grounds for impeachment, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the District and County Courts shall be removed from office on the vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, and the Justice or Judge complained of shall be served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have an opportunity of being heard in person, or by counsel, in his defense; provided, that no member of either branch of the Legislature shall be eligible to fill the vacancy occasioned by such removal.

SEC. 4. Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, other than those in this article previously specified, for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his duties.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 17; nays, 9—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Chapin, Collins, Crossman, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Lockwood, Murdock, Nourse, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—17.

Nays—Messrs. Banks, Brosnan, DeLong, Dumne, Hovey, Kennedy, Mason, McClinton, and Proctor—9.

So the article was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

EDUCATION.

Mr. COLLINS, from the Committee on Education, submitted the following report:

Mr. President: Your Standing Committee on Education, to which was referred Article XII, entitled Education, beg leave to report, for the adoption of the Convention, the following article:

ARTICLE XII.

EDUCATION.

SECTION 1. The State owes the children thereof tutorial facilities for a substantial education, and is entitled to exact attendance therefrom in return upon such educational advantages as it may provide. The Legislature shall therefore encourage by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, literary, scientific, mining, mechanical, agricultural, and moral improvement, and also provide for the election by the people, at the general election, of a Superintendent of Public Instruction, whose term of office shall be two years from the — day of January, 1865, and until the election and the qualification of his successor, and whose duties shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for a uniform system of common schools, by which a school shall be established and maintained in each school district, at least six months in every year; and any school district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school, or which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein, may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public school fund during such neglect or infraction, and the Legislature may pass such laws as will tend to secure a general attendance of the children in each school district upon said public schools.

SEC. 3. All lands, including the 500,000 acres of land granted to the new States under an Act of Congress distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. 1841; the sixteenth and thirty-second sections in every township, donated for the benefit of public schools, set forth in the Act of the thirty-eighth Congress, to enable the people of Nevada Territory to form a State Government; the thirty thousand acres of public lands granted by an Act of Congress, and approved July 2, 1862, for each Senator and Representative in Congress; and all lands and parcels of lands that have been or may hereafter be granted or appropriated by the United States to this State; all estates that may escheat to the State; all of such per cent. as may be granted by Congress on the sale of land; all fines collected under the penal laws of the State; all property given or bequeathed to the State for educational purposes; and all proceeds derived from any or all of said sources, shall be, and the same are hereby solemnly pledged for educational purposes, and shall not be transferred to any other fund for other uses; and the interest thereon shall, from time to time, be apportioned among the several counties, in proportion to the ascertained numbers of the persons between the ages of six and eighteen years in the different counties. And the Legislature shall provide for the sale of floating land-warrants to cover the aforesaid lands, and for the investment of all proceeds derived from any of the above-mentioned sources in United States bonds or the bonds of this State; provided, that the interest only of the aforesaid proceeds shall be used for educational purposes, and any surplus interest shall be added to the principal sum: and provided further, that such portion of said interest as may be necessary, may be appropriated for the support of the State University.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall provide for the establishment of a State University, embracing departments for agriculture, mechanic arts, and mining, which shall be free to all white pupils possessing such qualifications as may be prescribed by the Board of Regents.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall have power to establish Normal Schools, and such different grades of schools, from the primary department to the University, as in their discretion they may see fit; and all professors in said University, or teachers in said Common Schools, of whatever grade, shall be required to take and subscribe to the oath as prescribed in Article XVI of this Constitution. No professor or teacher who fails to comply with the provisions of any law framed in accordance with the provisions of this section, shall be entitled to receive any portion of the public moneys set apart for school purposes.

SEC. 6. The Legislature shall provide a special tax of one-half of one mill on the dollar of all taxable property in the State, in addition to the other means provided for the support and maintenance of said university and common schools; provided, that at the end of ten years they may reduce said tax to one quarter of one mill on each dollar of taxable property.

SEC. 7. The Governor, Secretary of State, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, shall, for the first four years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, be a Board of Regents to control and manage the affairs of the University, and the funds of the same, under such regulations as may be provided by law; but the Legislature shall, at the expiration of that time, provide for the election of a Board of Regents, and define their duties.

SEC. 8. The Board of Regents shall, from the interest accruing from the first funds which come under their control, immediately organize and maintain the said mining department, in such manner as to make it most effective and useful. Provided, that all the proceeds of the public lands donated by Act of Congress, approved July 2, A. D. 1862, for a college for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts, shall be invested by the Board of Regents in a separate fund to be appropriated exclusively for the benefit of the two first-named departments to the University, as set forth in Section 4, above. And the Legislature shall provide that, if through neglect or any other contingency, any portion of the fund so set apart shall be lost or misappropriated, the State of Nevada shall replace such amount so lost in said fund, so that the interest and principal of said fund shall remain forever undiminished.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN A. COLLINS, Chairman.

Thursday.] DUNNE—DELONG—CHAPIN—COLLINS—HAWLEY—JOHNSON—BROSNAN. [July 21.]

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the article reported be taken up and considered now.

Mr. DELONG. I would prefer to see it printed first.

Mr. CHAPIN. Could it not be published in the Virginia papers of to-morrow morning?

Mr. DELONG. It can be printed here. I understand. It is too late to send it to Virginia, for publication to-morrow morning. The attention of the Convention has been turned with a very jealous eye towards matters of legislation, and I am apprehensive that if we consider the article now, we might adopt or incorporate in it some provisions which would not meet with our approval, if we had it before us in print. This matter of religious and sectarian influence in the public schools, is, of all things, most calculated to arouse suspicions and jealousies in the public mind, and if the enemies of the Constitution can see anything in our action on that subject to carp at, they will be sure to make the greatest possible amount of capital out of it.

Mr. COLLINS. I would ask if this article cannot be taken up just as well now, the sections being read carefully by the Secretary, one by one, discussed, and amended if necessary, as we come to them? It seems to me, if gentlemen will be attentive, it may be done—and I will state that one feature which has been regarded as obnoxious, has been removed by the committee.

Mr. DELONG. How is it in regard to the positive requirement to send all children to school so much time in each year?

Mr. COLLINS. The committee has removed that provision.

Mr. DELONG. I will withdraw my opposition.

The question was taken on Mr. Dunne's motion to consider the article at the present time, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole—the President pro tem. remaining in the chair—for the consideration of this article.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—EDUCATION.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. CROSSMAN in the chair) and took up Article XII, entitled Education.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

The SECRETARY read Section 1, as follows:

SECTION 1. The State owes the children thereof tutorial facilities for a substantial education, and is entitled to exact attendance therefrom, in return, upon such educational advantages as it may provide. The Legislature shall therefore encourage by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, literary, scientific, mining, mechanical, agricultural, and moral improvement, and also provide for the election by the people, at the general election, of a Superintendent of Public Instruction, whose term of office shall be two years from the — day of January, 1865, and until the election and the qualification of his successor, and whose duties shall be prescribed by law.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish to inquire of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee—I have not yet examined his report, and I admit that the fault is my own—whether it is contemplated to have a separate judicial election?

Mr. BROSNAN. There is no special election contemplated to be held for judicial officers; they are to be elected at the general election, at the same time as other officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. I made the inquiry with a view to proposing an amendment, if necessary; because I observe that the section as read provides for the election of Superintendent of Public Instruction at the general election.

Mr. DUNNE. I do not know that I understand altogether this enunciation of a doctrine in the first section. If I understand it correctly—and I will inquire of the chairman of the committee whether I am right or not—the doctrine enunciated is substantially this: that the State has a right to establish educational institutions, including therein moral instruction, and has a right to insist upon the attendance and reception of such moral instruction as the State may establish, or provide for in such institutions, on the part of all the children of the State.

Mr. COLLINS. That is, in the general sense of morality. It was the view of the chairman, and I think the committee generally agreed with him on that point, that the State may properly encourage the practice of morality, in contradistinction to sectarian doctrines. For instance, if a child insist on the practice of using profane language, I presume it should be made the duty of the School Superintendent, the teacher, or the Board of Education, to insist that he shall either refrain from such practice, or be expelled. There must be power somewhere to exact conformity to the general ideas of morality entertained by civilized communities.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of Section 1.

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE ON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BROSNAN. For my own information, in order that I may be able to vote intelligibly, I will ask that Section 2 of this article be read.

The SECRETARY read Section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for a uniform system of common schools, by which a school shall be established and maintained in each school district, at least six months in every year; and any school district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school, or which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein, may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public school fund during such neglect or infraction, and the Legislature may pass such laws as will tend to secure a general attendance of the children in each school district upon said public schools.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to call the especial attention of the gentleman from Storey to that provision. I wish also to call the attention of the Convention to the clause in this section, in the old Constitution, which has been stricken out, reading as follows :

"The Legislature shall, within two years, pass such laws as shall make it compulsory with parents and guardians that all white children under their charge, between the ages of six and fourteen years, shall receive educational instruction for at least three months in each year, unless physically or mentally incapacitated."

That clause has been stricken out by the committee, and in lieu thereof the language of the section just read is proposed, providing that the Legislature may pass such laws as will best tend to secure a general attendance of children, in each of the school districts, on the public schools.

Mr. DE LONG. I thought from the first reading the language was, "to require attendance."

Mr. HAWLEY. It is, "tend to secure a general attendance."

Mr. BROSNAN. I only desired to have the section read in order to be able to vote intelligently on the preceding section.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will suggest to the chairman whether it would not be better to strike out the first sentence of Section I, which seems to be merely in the nature of a preamble. Will the Secretary read it?

The SECRETARY read, as follows :

"The State owes the children thereof tuitional facilities for a substantial education, and is entitled to exact attendance therefrom, in return, upon such educational advantages as it may provide."

Mr. HAWLEY. I know that the provision of the former Constitution, making it compulsory on parents to send their children to school, met with a great deal of opposition. And for myself I certainly consider it entirely at variance with the spirit of our institutions. Now inasmuch as the language of that portion of the section seems to assert the same doctrine, and inasmuch as it is in fact at variance with the provision contained in the second section, as reported, with all respect to the committee I will move to amend by striking out that clause, and also the word "therefore" in the succeeding clause, so that the section will commence—"The Legislature shall encourage by all suitable means," etc.

Mr. COLLINS. The chairman of the committee certainly has no objection to striking out that language, although, in his opinion, it only expresses the true doctrine.

Mr. DUNNE. Although I shall be in favor of striking out that preamble, yet it will not be for the reason which has been assigned, of discarding the idea of exacting the attendance of children on the schools. I believe that should be done, and I believe the provision should be substantially the same as in the former Constitution, but with some amendments, which are obviously necessary. In order to reach that end, I will make a motion that we pass over the section for the present.

Mr. COLLINS. I will state the reason for the insertion of that preamble. In the first place, let me suggest to the Convention that it only declares the right of the Legislature to exact attendance upon school—some school. It does not say that children shall be compelled to attend the public school, but that the State has the right to exact attendance upon such educational advantages and facilities as may be provided. The Constitution framed last year, which forms the basis of our action, declared that all children should be required to attend school at least three months in each year, but that provision has been removed, and we propose instead to give the Legislature permission to make laws providing for and encouraging a general attendance at school. It seems to me that if the Legislature should have that right, then this preamble is correct, and if not, then the preamble has no business here. I am not tenacious about it, myself, however, though I really think there should be some provision by which the children of the State, growing up to be men and women, should have the privilege secured to them of attending school—that they should even be required to attend school somewhere. We have no right, and we cannot afford to allow children to grow up in ignorance. The public is interested in that matter, and it is one of too great importance to be neglected. Even if parents are too parsimonious to send their children to school, or for other reasons are indisposed to give them the educational advantages which the State has been at great expense to offer, I do not think the public can afford it. My opinion is, therefore, that it is the duty of the State to furnish the children the means of education, and then, as a corollary, if it is the duty of the State to furnish tuitional facilities, it is the duty of the children to attend upon them. There are many children who are daily squandering their time, and what is far worse, contracting habits which will ultimate in crime in some form, and if we shall adopt some provision by which the authorities can exact their attendance upon the schools, they may be saved from an evil destiny, and the State will certainly be the better for it.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Hawley, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. The striking out of the word "therefore," follows, as a matter of course, I suppose?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be considered as a part of the amendment adopted.

TERM OF SUPERINTENDENT.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move to further amend the section by filling the blank in relation to the term of the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction with the word "first," so as to read, "whose term of office shall be two years from the first day of January, 1865," etc.

Mr. JOHNSON. Perhaps it would be better to make it read the first Monday of January. Then it will correspond with the terms of the other officers of the Executive Department of the Government.

Thursday.]

BROSNAN—JOHNSON—WARWICK—COLLINS—MCCLINTON—HAWLEY.

[July 21.]

Mr. BROSNAN. It will be necessary to use the words "commencing on."

Mr. JOHNSON. No; not "commencing on." The terms of the other officers commence on Tuesday; if you say "from the first Monday," the term will commence on Tuesday, like other officers.

Mr. BROSNAN. Very well; then let it read "from the first Monday in January."

The question was taken on the amendment as modified, and it was adopted.

The question was taken on the adoption of Section 1 as amended, and it was adopted.

SECTARIAN INSTRUCTION.

The SECRETARY read Section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for a uniform system of common schools, by which a school shall be established and maintained in each school district, at least six months in every year; and any school district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school, or which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein, may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public school fund during such neglect or infraction, and the Legislature may pass such laws as will tend to secure a general attendance of the children in each school district upon said public schools.

Mr. WARWICK. Will the Chairman of the committee explain a little, as to what is meant here by "sectarian?" It says that any school district "which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein, may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public school fund," etc. Does that mean that they have no right to maintain Catholic schools, for example?

Mr. COLLINS. This provision has reference only to public schools, organized under the general laws of the State. It is not to be supposed that the laws enacted under it will stand in the way of, or prevent any Catholic school from being organized or carried on; but the provision prevents the introduction of sectarianism into the public schools.

Mr. WARWICK. That is entirely proper, but it seems to me that it might better be worded a little differently. It says, "which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein"—not in the school, but in the district. I do not suppose that is the intention.

Mr. COLLINS. You will find that it has reference only to public schools, and to the appropriation of the public funds. If they permit sectarian instruction, they are deprived of the use of the public funds, so that it has direct reference to the public schools, and clearly cannot refer to anything else.

Mr. WARWICK. I would like to examine that a little more carefully.

Mr. MCCLINTON. I think all the objection can be easily obviated, and leave the section substantially as it is, by making a very slight change. Suppose we say, "in the public schools of said district."

Mr. WARWICK. That is the idea, exactly. It seems to me, as it now reads—and the gentleman will correct me if I am wrong—that it is not in the school, but in the school district that shall establish or allow instruction of a sectarian character, that this penalty is to be applied. It says:

"And any school district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school, or which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein, may be deprived," etc.

The word "district" evidently governs the sentence, and that is where the change ought to be made, so that the prohibition of sectarian instruction may apply, not to the districts, but to the schools.

Mr. MCCLINTON. I will make a motion to amend the section by striking out the word "therein," and inserting instead the words, "in the public schools of said district."

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Lander whether he imagines that the language of the section as it now stands would make any difference in regard to payments of the school-money, under the law, in a case, for instance, where, under the laws of the State, parties may have organized a Catholic school, entirely separate and distinct from the public schools? Does the gentleman think that the mere fact of the existence of that Catholic school in the district could have any possible influence in preventing the payment of the school-money under the law? In other words, I ask him whether he believes that any school district could be held responsible for the action of private parties, in organizing sectarian schools within such district?

Mr. WARWICK. No, sir; that would be manifestly unjust, and that is the reason why I want this amendment. I do not want the school district to lose on account of the establishment of a Catholic school, a Methodist, a Baptist, or any other school, and therefore I say the language should be such as will not be open to the slightest imputation of that construction.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well; I will consent to the amendment, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. COLLINS. I wish to call the attention of the Convention one moment to the language of the section as it now stands. I desire to make any change that will be an improvement, but if the sentence is already clear, we should certainly take care to avoid tautology. Now I will read the section again, and emphasize the words as I think they ought to be, and gentlemen will see, I think, that a multiplication of those phrases is scarcely necessary, and certainly it would not sound very well. If we can secure the same sense, without a change of phraseology that would destroy the emphasis of the sentence, we should certainly do so, in accordance with the laws of composition. Now let us see how it should read:

"The Legislature shall provide for a uniform system of common schools, by which a school shall be established and maintained in each school district, at least six months in every year."

The subject of the sentence is "common schools," and "a school" to be established "in each school district." These are the words which should receive the stress of the voice. Then follows :

[July 21.

"And any school district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school, or which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein—"

In what?

Mr. WARWICK. In the district.

Mr. COLLINS. No, sir; in "such a school." That is the only proper construction. If the word "therein" does not refer to "such a school," then I do not understand the English language.

Mr. WARWICK. If the "district" does not stand in the nominative case, then I am not able to parse the sentence.

Mr. COLLINS. But what effect can that have? It only goes to show that it is the district which is to be deprived of its proportion of the school fund, for "district" is the nominative governing the verb "deprived." I would not object to any change there with a view to perspicuity, but I really do not think this is necessary.

Mr. WARWICK. If the gentleman thinks it is correct, all right; I hope the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. McCLINTON. I will withdraw it. I merely offered it for the sake of obviating any possible objection of that nature that might be made.

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE—AGAIN.

Mr. DUNNE. I stated at the time the amendment was proposed, which was subsequently adopted, to strike out a part of Section 1, that I believed it to be a right which the State has to exact attendance from the pupils. I believe, also, that the only objection of any considerable weight which was urged to that compulsory clause contained in the Constitution submitted to the people last year, was the fact that it made no distinction between children whose parents reside in populous places, where there are abundant facilities for sending them to the public schools, and those residing in out-of-the-way places where it would be very difficult and sometimes impossible. I think it would be a wise measure to insist, that in incorporated cities and towns, at least, children shall be compelled to attend school, and we ought certainly to insert a provision of that kind in this article. It is in such places that children grow up surrounded by temptations which are not to be found, to the same extent, at any rate, in the rural districts. Our cities are always the hot-beds of crime, and schools of vice for the rising generation. It is from the cities, and from the class of children in them which neglects to attend the public schools, that most of our criminals come, and I maintain that where facilities for attending school are afforded, it should be made compulsory upon parents to send their children. And the reason why I think so is this: Ours being a Democratic form of government, every person upon arriving at mature age who was born in the country or has been naturalized according to law, who has not been convicted of crime, etc., has a voice in the administration of the public affairs of the country—in the making and administering of the laws—and I consider it only a fair proposition that he should not have that privilege unless he has some knowledge of the nature of the duties which devolve upon him. Therefore when the State has provided a system of public instruction, a means of obtaining education, it should also require that all who are to become its citizens, and take part in the formation of its laws, shall avail themselves of those means, or go so far at least as to know how to read and write.

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as towns and cities are concerned, I am not aware that I should very strenuously object to such a requirement, but there is one question which I have not heard satisfactorily answered, and that is, what are the means by which attendance is to be compelled?

Mr. DUNNE. That is a question which has received its solution in many countries.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know it has in Prussia, but where else?

Mr. DUNNE. In Scotland, also. Whether it has been done in any of the United States, I do not know; but I see no difficulty in the way of providing that between the ages of six and fourteen years, for example, all children shall attend school at least long enough to learn how to read and write. And I do not think that in a country like this any American citizen should be permitted to exercise the elective franchise unless he is able to read and write. That is my view of the subject, and for the purpose of testing the sense of the Convention, I will move, when it shall be in order, that a special committee of three be appointed to prepare and report an amendment providing that all children residing in incorporated cities and towns, between the ages of—years, shall attend the public schools for at least three months in each year.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman allow me a word or two further in the way of a suggestion? In drawing up this article we have provided that the Legislature may pass such laws as are best calculated to secure the attendance of children. My idea on that subject is, or was this: that the most practicable method of securing attendance would be to pass a law providing that unless a certain proportion of the children in each district shall attend, the district shall be deprived of its proportion of the interest on the school-money. The result of that would be that parents would feel more interest in having a full attendance, and would take it upon themselves to visit those who are less careful, and urge them to send their children. By that means, I think the interests of education would be best subserved and promoted. And the query arises, in my own mind at all events, whether under that general provision authorizing the Legislature to make such laws as are best calculated to secure attendance, it would not be authorized even to pass a law which should compel them to attend? It seems to me that if the word "may" is equivalent to the word "shall," and that point appears to be very generally conceded, then the Legislature already has all the power necessary. I am free to say, however, that I believe the incorporation of the provision as it stood in the former Constitution would be likely to array a large class of ignorant people against the Constitution, and against education. That is my own view of the matter. Still, I am perfectly content to leave it to the friends of education in the Convention, although I would submit to the gentleman from Humboldt, whether under the provisions of the section as it now stands, the Legislature would not have the power to compel attendance?

DUNNE—COLLINS.

Mr. DUNNE. In regard to the power conferred upon the Legislature to secure general attendance, I like that provision, and so far as that is concerned, it is applicable all the year round. I have no doubt but that it would give power to temporarily suspend the attendance of children who may not be regular in their attendance, and that would be a great step towards preventing irregularity in that respect. A question has sometimes been raised as to the legality of the action of Boards of Education where they have attempted to compel scholars to be regular, and to that end have passed orders that if a scholar is absent a certain number of days or weeks in a month, he shall forfeit altogether his right to attend. There have been doubts as to the constitutional power of a Board of Education to make and enforce such an order, and I think this provision would go perhaps no further than to give power and force to an ordinance providing that unless a scholar is somewhat regular in his attendance, he may forfeit his right to remain in the school. But that is not the class which I wish to reach. I am aiming to reach that class which does not attend at all; to reach those parents who keep their children away for selfish motives, who take them away from school in order, perhaps, that they may earn a little money, and so deprive them of the advantages of education. I could not let this matter pass without bringing it to the attention of the Convention, and I propose merely to test the sense of the Convention as to the propriety of requiring all children between certain ages, to be specified, to attend school at least three months in each year.

Mr. COLLINS. I should dislike to have incorporated cities and towns designated in this article as the only places in the State where parents are unwilling to send their children to school, or to give them educational facilities. I admit that the evil is as prevalent in towns, possibly, as in the country, but in many country places there is very general neglect to provide good schools, and to induce children to attend them. Outside of cities and towns there are many men who have themselves been reared without education, and who look upon it as having a tendency to disqualify or unfit young men and women for hard work. Seeing no prospect before their children but a life of labor like their own, they regard education as objectionable on that ground especially. There are also, perhaps, a good many who retain their children from school on account of indifference, or from mercenary motives. Many keep their children at hard work, or, worse than that, allow them to run about in idleness, when they ought to be at school. I think, therefore, that if the provision is to be adopted, it should be made to extend further than merely to embrace incorporated towns. I would have it apply all over the State, and I am in favor of every appliance that can properly and justly be brought to bear upon the whole community, to exact from them such obedience to the requirements of the laws of the State as shall give to every child in the State some kind of education. If a parent is disposed to send his children to other than a public school, or to bring a governess or tutor into his own house to instruct his children, I see no objection to it, and the provision, of course, would not affect those cases; but where there is indisposition on the part of parents, whether resulting from their own ignorance, indifference, or avarice, the Board of Education should have some means of exacting the attendance of the children.

But I would not confine it to cities and towns. I would go out into the settlements—into your agricultural valleys, for example—where will be found the greatest amount of neglect and indifference. It is not in the large cities that you are most likely to encounter these evils. The best schools on the globe are found in the large cities of Europe and the United States. In the large towns is where schools always flourish, and they are supported and attended by all classes, more or less; but in the agricultural districts, in the remote and sparsely settled portions of the State, the influences which are most favorable for the promotion of the cause of education, are not so active, nor so much felt. There is not the same contact of mind with mind, men are not so much stimulated by ambition, and they do not so much value or appreciate the advantages of education, because they do not see so much of its influences upon the individual, the family, or the public at large. I was very reluctant, in committee yesterday, to accept the proposition to remove the clause requiring compulsory attendance of children on the schools, and I shall be perfectly willing to confer on the Legislature the power to exact attendance by law, at such times and in such places as may be deemed expedient. I know that in Virginia we suffer very much for the want of such a power, and if the Boards of Education had power to exact attendance for three months or six months in the year, it would be a great advantage to the

WARWICK—COLLINS—McCLINTON.

[July 21.

Territory. I know of many instances where it would have an extremely beneficial influence, and I am in favor of extending it all over the State. Rather than confine it, however, to particular places, I would prefer to let the section remain as it is. Then if the Board of Education of Storey County asks for such power, the Legislature may grant it, and the good influence arising therefrom will shine and reflect upon other localities, until they in their turn seek to secure the same advantages.

Mr. WARWICK. I think there are some subjects which are justly and properly objects of legislation, and among them, one of the most worthy is that of education. But while we are legislating on that subject, do not let us forget that we are living in a Republic, that a man's house is his castle, and that in it he has a perfect right to exercise full authority and control over his children—to send them to school, or to keep them at home, just as he pleases. The very character of our free institutions forbids this proposed interference with the private rights of the citizen. No man desires to promote the general interests of education more than I do; no man is more anxious to have his own children educated than I am; but I really think we are forgetting the spirit of our institutions when we are seeking to compel our fellow-citizens to send their children to the public schools. The moment we invade the home of any man, telling him that he must do this, and must not do that, seeking to make men good according to our notions of goodness, we are traveling, in my opinion, out of the line of our duty, and departing from the fundamental principles of our Republican form of government. I repeat, that the very spirit of our American institutions is in opposition to this proposition. We are not living here under a Prussian monarchy.

Besides, it seems to me that such a measure is entirely unnecessary, because the spirit and temper of our people is quite sufficient for all that gentlemen are aiming at. Here and there a man may be found who would keep his children at home, and deny them the privileges of education, but these cases are the rare exceptions, so rare as scarcely ever to require being looked after by the law-maker. We are legislating here for general principles, not special or exceptional cases, and I sincerely trust that we shall not adopt any provision which will allow a little body of men, assembled here to legislate for the State, to undertake to compel men to do that which only one government in the world, and that a monarchy, ever has had the courage to compel.

Mr. COLLINS. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose a boy brought up in ignorance, in consequence of such breeding, commits a felony. If he is convicted, his imprisonment of course involves a charge to the State. Now which is the better investment for the State, to instruct him or to imprison him?

Mr. WARWICK. To instruct him, by all means. But Fagans are scarce. Men who train their children to crime, thank God, are not numerous. It may be that here and there a father or a mother may err in regard to the advantages of education, but that evil is not commensurate with the evil we should do by a palpable violation of the spirit of American free institutions. Let us not do evil that good may come. If this may be done, we may advance step by step in our encroachments, until by and by every right and privilege, now the pride of the American citizen, will be lost and destroyed. It is not by such means that morality, virtue, and religion are advanced in the world. They are encouraged and promoted by a wholly different process. Compulsory laws, enacted for the purpose of their advancement, never have been found to work well in practice, in any community, and ultimately, in the advancement of all those principles, the great apostles of reformation in every age and nation, after the trial of all other means, have been compelled to fall back on the great lever of moral suasion. You cannot enact laws to compel the education of the people, because the very spirit and foundation of our institutions are against it in principle. I should be sorry to see any article or section incorporated into the fundamental law of our new State, whereby any of these matters might be rendered compulsory upon the people. I have always looked with disfavor upon every description of sumptuary laws. Laws to enforce temperance, or compel virtue in any respect, are bad in principle, and bad in practice. You cannot legislate people into virtue. Other means have to be resorted to in the end, and they are found to be potent enough in our time to carry on all those great works of reformation and advancement. I sincerely trust the proposition suggested by the gentleman from Humboldt will not be incorporated into our Constitution.

[The PRESIDENT in the chair.]

Mr. McCLINTON. I do not believe there is any gentleman on this floor who has a higher appreciation of the benefits to be derived from a good system of common schools than I have. I had the honor to graduate in the chimney corner, by the fire-light in my father's little, old log cabin, and I feel the want of a polite and classical education. I am willing, therefore, to do all I can to encourage common schools; all I can for the encouragement of every species of educational improvement, and morality; but I am not willing to carry my own desires so far as to bring them in conflict with what I consider one of the fundamental principles of our government. I cannot resist the conviction in my own mind, that the proposition to compel parents to send their children to our public schools, or to any other schools, is inimical to the spirit of our Republican institutions.

And I am opposed on other grounds, also, to the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt. If we say that in incorporated cities and towns we will compel parents to send their children to school, we certainly make an invidious distinction in favor of people residing in the country, and that would be a palpable violation of the broad principles which we intend to lay down and establish, or which, unquestionably, we ought to implant in our fundamental law. I believe that education is a proper subject of legislation, but we should merely mark out here a sort of outline of the course which we intend the Legislature to pursue on that subject, and then leave the rest to the wisdom, intelligence, and patriotism of those legislators, who, we may be permitted to presume, will be not only as wise, but as earnest and zealous in the cause of education as we ourselves. For these reasons, I hope that the gentleman's proposition to refer the subject to a special committee, with instructions to add such a provision, will not be adopted.

Mr. DUNNE. With the consent of the committee I will withdraw the motion I made, inasmuch as it is not competent for the Committee of the Whole to appoint a special committee, and instead I will offer an amendment, which I have prepared and sent up to the desk.

The SECRETARY read the amendment, as follows:

Provided, That the Legislature shall have the power to pass such laws as shall make it compulsory with parents and guardians that all white children under their charge, between the ages of six and fourteen years, residing in incorporated cities or towns, shall receive educational instruction for at least three months in each year, unless physically or mentally incapacitated."

The CHAIRMAN. I hope the gentleman will leave out the word "incorporated." There are but two or three incorporated cities or towns in the Territory, I believe. This city is not incorporated.

Mr. WARWICK. I wish to make one inquiry. Does the gentleman mean to give to negroes larger liberty than he does to whites? It seems that white people are to be compelled to send their children to school, while the negroes are not.

Mr. DUNNE. I will reply that my object is to make such provision in regard to education that those who are entitled to vote, may vote intelligently; but I do not mean by any action of mine to allow negroes to vote.

Mr. BANKS. If we leave this clause out entirely, will not the Legislature still have the power, as a reserved right, to pass such a law? It seems to me they would have that power without our saying anything more about it, and therefore this amendment simply enables, not requires, the Legislature to do what I think they already have the right to do.

Before I sit down, I wish to suggest a slight verbal amendment in the section as reported. It reads—"tend to secure a general attendance," etc. It seems to me it should read "the general attendance," instead of "a." That would be in accordance with the rules of grammar, which we certainly ought not to ignore in this article.

Mr. McCLINTON. I believe the Legislature has already as much power, in relation to compelling the attendance of children in the schools, as this Convention ought to confer.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood the gentleman from Humboldt, last on the floor, to suggest an amendment to correct the grammar of the original section. It certainly would be a bad place to ignore the rules of grammar in the educational feature of our Constitution.

Mr. BANKS. I merely say I think the word "the" would be more appropriate there than "a."

Mr. DUNNE. In reply to my colleague's remarks, I have only to say that in my judgment, unless we delegate this power expressly to the Legislature, they will not have it, because all the rights and powers which are not granted are reserved to the people.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope this amendment will not prevail, because without it the Legislature will undoubtedly have the right to enact such laws under the language already contained in the section. It says at the end of this section:

"And the Legislature may pass such laws as will tend to secure a general attendance of the children in each school district upon said public schools."

That is ample to cover the whole ground. The Legislature has that right already, and I believe there is propriety in it; and I do not think it will be any trespass or infringement upon democratic rights, either, to exercise that power. I think we should leave the section just as it is, for the whole ground is amply covered.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I wish to say a few words, merely to throw out a suggestion to the gentleman from Humboldt who proposes this amendment. I have had some little experience in schools in California, and I know there is a class of persons to whom such a provision would be extremely repugnant. I have seen persons so bigoted in their religious faith—as, for example, the Roman Catholics, although I do not mean to mention them invidiously—that they would claim that all the public schools were sectarian, and rather allow their children to grow up in ignorance than attend them. Now the question is, it seems to me, whether or not it is better for the State to violate the prejudices of this class of persons, even for what we believe to be their own good?

Mr. DUNNE. This amendment does not propose to compel attendance on the public schools at all; it proposes merely to require that all children shall receive educational instruction to a certain extent, each year, and the parents may send them to school wherever they please. The objection suggested by the gentleman from Ormsby, therefore, does not apply.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I think we have cases in point right here in town. We have no sectarian schools, but there may be a Baptist, a Presbyterian, or a Catholic, perhaps, who conscientiously believes that it is better not to educate his children at all, than to place them in our public schools. Now the question is, shall we, on account of such religious prejudices, suffer children to grow up in ignorance in our midst? The operation of our form of government, and the principles upon which it is based, have been referred to in connection with this subject, but I will say that I do not see in those matters any particular bar to this amendment. Every gentleman knows, who is at all acquainted with the operation of religions or sectarian schools in Europe, that the principal part of the teaching is in regard to matters of religious belief. I think about two-thirds of the time of such a school is ordinarily occupied by the priests, or those whom they regard as their spiritual advisers. They do not teach their children any of the essentials of literature or the arts, but they confine their instructions rather to blinding them, as some of us might regard it, or indoctrinating them in their religious creeds, forms, and ceremonies. Now, sir, I do not wish to do violence to the conscience of the humblest individual in the land, by any provision which we may adopt in the educational feature of our Constitution, yet there is an opposite extreme. I will merely suggest this, however, that while I believe it is a very good thing for an individual to attend church, and that if everybody went to church on Sunday very few crimes would be committed on that day; yet I think the gentleman from Humboldt will very readily agree with me that if it were proposed to adopt a proposition in our Constitution compelling everybody to attend church on the Sabbath, it would not be sanctioned by a vote of this body.

Thursday.]

DUNNE—FRIZELL—COLLINS.

[July 21.

Mr. DUNNE. One word only, in regard to the Prussian system which has been spoken of, and the time which the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Lockwood) thinks is taken up in religious instruction in schools of the class he has referred to. This amendment has nothing to do with the Prussian system, but there, as I understand, the usual school instruction is kept entirely separate from religious instruction, and not allowed to conflict with it in any way. Every parent who wishes religious instruction for his children, is required to register his name and creed, and at certain hours each day, set apart for that purpose, each child is instructed in the religious tenets of that creed. It does not interfere at all with the secular branches of education taught in those schools.

Mr. FRIZELL. No man can more fully appreciate the excellent motives of gentlemen who advocate the amendment, than I do. It appears that this same object which they are now endeavoring to reach, has in past years been the subject of discussion very frequently in other States. Now, sir, writers on the subject of crime tell us, and others who are not writers are willing to admit it, that ignorance is the parent of crime. Therefore it follows that if we can by law establish any system that will either induce or compel parents to educate their children, it will do very much towards preventing crime, and consequently will be a good thing for the State. But, not only various objections to the practicability of the measure proposed, but also the very spirit of our institutions, appear to stand in the way.

But what I wished to call the attention of the Convention to more especially, is the fact that there is another question which arises here, that has not been mentioned by any of the gentlemen who have occupied the floor on this subject. That question is the age at which children should be sent to school. You are perfectly well aware, Mr. President, and so is every gentleman here, that people differ widely in their views in regard to the physical education and mental training of their children. During the last fifteen years especial attention has been turned throughout the United States to the subject of the physical development of children. At the present time you will find no two parents out of three, perhaps, who would not be willing to send their children to school, even at the tender age of six years; and yet there are a great many who prefer at that age to let them play and exercise, and develop their physical systems, for a year or two longer, it may be, before going to school.

Now, sir, taking into consideration the many barriers that stand in the way of a proposition of this nature, I say that while I would be glad to go with these gentlemen, while I appreciate their motives and would approve of the object at which they are aiming, if we could only reach it, yet it seems to me entirely impracticable to make any provision compelling parents to send their children to school; and I object especially to that feature of the amendment which relates to the age of the children, because I know that many parents are not willing to allow their children to attend school at the age of six years.

Mr. COLLINS. I think the gentleman from Humboldt will find, upon a more careful examination, that the section already contains language which covers all the ground he desires. It says the Legislature "may pass such laws as will tend to secure a general attendance." There is something sufficiently elastic to cover everything which has been suggested during this discussion, to meet every changing condition of public feeling on the subject of education. If the Legislature shall hereafter deem it proper to enforce the attendance of all scholars of a certain age, it has the power to do so; or if the Legislature, coming up fresh from the people, shall be imbued with the idea that it is impracticable to make a general enactment of that kind, but the County of Storey, or Ormsby, or some other county, asks for the advantages of such a law, the Legislature has power to grant the request, and confer on such county the privileges solicited. The provision is elastic and comprehensive, and may be adapted to any want of any particular portion of the community, or any condition of progress of the public mind. On the other hand, this amendment proposed by my friend from Humboldt, is peremptory and inflexible; and while I agree with him in the general principle, and believe that his amendment only provides for carrying out a great truth, yet it appears to me that at the present time it would strike the public mind with a degree of alarm and disapprobation, and I am inclined to think it would be wiser to leave the Legislature, from year to year, to adapt its action to the progress of public sentiment.

DUNNE—COLLINS—HAWLEY—BANKS—CROSMAN.

[July 21.

Mr. DUNNE. But does not my amendment leave it also to the Legislature?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes; but at the same time it makes an exaction, requiring a certain course of action by the Legislature.

Mr. DUNNE. No, no! The language is, "that the Legislature shall have the power to pass such laws," etc.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, sir; but it also mentions particular ages, and consequently forbids the enactment of any law specifying different ages, although the Legislature might desire to extend the limit from six to eight years. I remember that my first child went to school as soon as she could toddle—almost as soon as she could speak; and she learned her lessons—everything they undertook to teach her—things which she forgot about as readily as she learned them. My own observation and experience tend to the conclusion that education, such as is generally imparted in the common schools, is not adapted to the weak minds of young children, and I am strongly inclined to favor the plan of combining physical and mental training, something like the system of "object teaching." I think the time may come when the age of eight years will be generally regarded as sufficiently early to commence the severe system of our schools. I think the section as it now stands covers all the ground we want to cover, while my friend's amendment is altogether too definite and specific. That limits the Legislature to a certain course marked out in advance, whilst this is expansive in its nature, giving the Legislature all the power they may require, not only to-day, but perhaps a thousand years hence.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to suggest to the friends of this proposition, whether it does not occur to them that parents might, in some cases, appeal to the law, and create troublesome litigation on this subject. I believe that if a law were passed under such a constitutional provision, to compel parents to send their children to school, and if a child were taken from its parents under the provisions of such a law, the parents would have a right to apply for a writ of habeas corpus, and under that could secure the release of their child. That is one of the grounds upon which I base my opposition to this amendment. My experience is not perhaps very great, but judging from what I have observed, I honestly believe that more can be done to build up the public schools by one man who will devote a little time to the subject—giving lectures on education, for example, through the country, and in that manner arousing the attention of men to the importance of educating their children—than ever would be accomplished by all the sumptuary laws that can be incorporated into any Constitution, or enacted by any Legislature or any Congress in the world. I desire, sir, without further occupying the time of the Convention, to enter my protest against the adoption of any such provision as is contained in this amendment.

Mr. BANKS. There is one further objection to this amendment which I wish to mention, and that is, that the Legislature would be inhibited, by clear implication, from compelling the attendance of children anywhere else than in incorporated cities and towns. I would urge this in addition to the fact that no such provision is necessary to give the Legislature ample power to enact whatever laws may be required, and I conceive that the last objection is a very strong one.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Dunne, and it was not agreed to.

NEW SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

Mr. CROSMAN. I have an amendment which I wish to offer. It will probably come in best about the middle of the section. I will move to insert after the words "during such neglect or infraction," the following:

"Provided, That the Legislature may make provision for the distribution of the school fund to school districts during the first year of their organization, without reference to the time that a school has been held therein."

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that if this amendment is to come in at all, it would be more applicable in the following section, where provision is made for the apportionment of the interest from time to time among the several counties. I attempted yesterday to remove the doubts of certain members upon that subject, and at a proper time I will renew my efforts to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the amendment is appropriate in Section 2, as proposed by the gentleman from Lyon.

Mr. CROSMAN. My impression is, that the amendment comes in properly here, in Section 2 of the article under consideration. I wish to call the attention of the Convention to one fact in connection with this subject. If I understand the reading of this section, as it has been presented before us, it might occur that a new district having had a school in operation, even for a period of ten or eleven months, would get none of the school fund. In the first place, I understand that the first school year will embrace portions of 1864 and 1865, beginning and ending probably the same as at present. Then this section provides that a school shall be maintained in the district at least six months in every year, and under my interpretation, it might so happen that a new district would be obliged to have its school in operation for eleven months before it would receive any appropriation. I called up this same question in the committee, but other members thought differently, and no action was had upon it. Upon looking at the matter further, however, I am satisfied that it might occur in the manner I have indicated. Now I consider that it ought to be our policy to so frame our Constitution that the Legislature may encourage the organization of school districts: and if there ever is a time when they need assistance, when the State should foster the interests of education in a district, it is at the commencement. Let us leave the time to the Legislature, and allow it to provide in its discretion, so that the new district which shall have had two or three months of school may receive its portion of the school money, but let us not compel a school district to go along without aid, for nearly a year, in the outset. At least, do not leave it so that the Legislature cannot encourage school districts in their infancy.

HAWLEY—CROSMAN.

[July 21.

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me a few words of explanation, as to the manner in which the distribution of the school money is made under our present system: The Superintendent of Public Schools of each county is notified twice a year—I believe in May and November—by the General Superintendent, as to the amount appropriated to his county. At that time, when such notification is made to the County Superintendent, the latter refers to his list of the school districts in his county, and the census of the School Marshal, and thus ascertains how much, pro rata, of the whole amount drawn by the county is to be paid to each school. The amount to which each scholar is entitled, multiplied by the number of scholars in any district, of course, will give the amount which must be paid to such district. Now under that system, if a new district is organized, no matter if it is only ten days before drawing this fund from the State, it has been placed on the record of the County Superintendent, with the number of its scholars, and the district receives its proportion of the fund the same as the other districts. The only question is, as to the time when it is to be paid to the district. If it has been organized only ten days, under the Territorial law it cannot receive the money immediately, but is required to have school for three months before the amount appropriated can be paid over. Now it is proposed to require the districts to have school for six months. In the meantime, the money is not to be given to the old districts, but their pro rata proportion is retained for the new districts. I think it is not very material at present, however, what arrangement may be made in respect to newly organized districts, for I believe that in all probability every district has already been organized that will be for some time to come. But even supposing that a new district should be organized two months prior to the framing and passage of the school laws, to take effect under the Constitution, when we become a State, I insisted yesterday in the committee, and I insist here to-day, that those two months will be accredited upon the first payment due to the district. I also contended yesterday, and still insist, that if we pay an equal proportion to those districts which have had school only three months, we thereby work an injustice and hardship to those which have maintained their schools perhaps nine months in the year, and in which the sums required for the payment of the teachers are, perhaps, more than two-thirds made up by private subscriptions. I candidly think that the more equitable plan is to require that, before any money is paid to a district, school shall have been taught therein for at least six months, and I think, still, that the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosman) labors under a misapprehension as to the character of the requirement in regard to the length of time that school shall have been taught in a new district before it can receive its proportion of the school money. I insist that if a school shall have been maintained in a district two, three, or four months prior to the adoption of the Constitution, the district will be given credit for that length of time, and will receive its pro rata of the public money accordingly, and at the same time I am entirely opposed to allowing the money to be paid to any district before it shall have supported a public school for at least six months. I do not believe in compulsory education, and I think there is not in the Territory, and will not be in the State for a long time, any district in which a school will be maintained for a longer period, certainly, than nine months in a year.

Mr. CROSMAN. Allow me a word in reply. I may not, perhaps, differ materially from the gentleman from Douglas in regard to the term of six months, but I wish to have the language of the section so constructed that we can understand clearly that when a school has been maintained for six months, the district shall be entitled to the money. But this section says "every year." It requires that a common school shall be maintained "at least six months in every year," and it proceeds to provide that any district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school, may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public school fund during such neglect. Now, with regard to the time, I do not propose by my amendment to fix it definitely; I prefer to leave that to the Legislature. The gentleman tells us how the present school system operates, but he must remember that we shall have to be governed in the future by such rules as we fix and establish in this instrument, not by the practice under our Territorial laws. I think it is nothing but right for us to provide that any district organized within a few months of the close of the school year, when it has had school for six months—or I would prefer to say for three months—shall be entitled to receive its proportion of the school money.

Thursday.]

COLLINS—HAWLEY—CHAIRMAN—CROSMAN.

[July 21.]

Mr. COLLINS. My excellent friend, the gentleman from Lyon, thinks he perceives a difficulty, which, after a good deal of thought and turning the matter over carefully in my own mind, (for the gentleman suggested it to the Committee on Education while the article was under consideration in that committee,) I have been, I confess, unable to appreciate. I think the difficulties which occur to his mind have no real basis, for the reason that this constitutional provision is merely an outline by which the Legislature is to be governed. It contemplates that the Legislature shall establish a school system, and that one of the requirements of that system shall be that each district, in order to obtain its proportion of the public money, shall maintain a school for at least six months in each year. Now it is not to be presumed that the Legislature, in framing a school law under that provision, will so frame it as to deprive a school district just organized, or organized within the last three, or the last six months of the school year, of its proportion of the school money. The language of the section does not necessarily imply, in my opinion, that there must be absolutely six months of school teaching before the district can receive any money whatever. It does not require six months of school teaching within the school year, but it may be, as I understand, three months of school at the end of one year, and three months at the beginning of the next year. If in any district a school has been in operation three months in the school year, and had been organized three months in the previous year, it is not to be presumed that a legislative body, organizing a school system under great difficulties, is going to make such provisions as will cut that district off, and prevent its receiving any of the school money. The constitutional provision simply lays down the general principle that in every district there must be a school for six months in each year, and the penalty is, that if a district does not maintain a school during that proportion of the time, it cannot be allowed to receive any portion of the public money.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I be allowed one moment to repeat a statement which I made yesterday in the committee, and which I think may have some bearing upon this very point? It is, that the appropriation is made in all cases, but a school must have been taught in the district for the period of time required, before the district can draw the money. I wish the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosman) to understand this perfectly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Douglas will please to take his seat one moment. I believe there is not a quorum present. Let the Secretary count the Convention.

The SECRETARY counted, and reported that eighteen members were present.

Three or four other members having come in from adjoining rooms, a quorum was found to be in attendance.

The CHAIRMAN. We have had but little more than a quorum during a considerable portion of this afternoon, and the Chair will suggest that it will be necessary for members to remain in the Convention, in order that we may not find ourselves without a quorum for business. The gentleman from Douglas will proceed.

Mr. HAWLEY. As I was saying, the appropriation is made including any district which may have been formed, say ten days, or any other time within three months, before the notification to the County Superintendent of the amount due to the county. That appropriation then becomes a part of the property of that school district. It is held in trust for the district by the Treasurer, and cannot, in any event, be diverted from the use of such district, until the close of the year from the time the appropriation was made. It must lie there for the entire year, in order that the Superintendent may ascertain at the end of the year whether or not the district has been entitled to receive it according to law. I know it is so in my own county. I have now an appropriation of about two hundred dollars belonging to a district which has not complied with the law, and that amount must remain in the treasury for twelve months before I can throw it out of the district fund into the general fund of the county, for distribution among the other districts which have complied with the law. Therefore, I say that the seeming hardship, to which the gentleman from Lyon refers, does not exist. If newly organized districts continue their school for the time required, the money cannot be diverted from them, and will not be by any honest Superintendent; but if for the space of a whole year they refuse or neglect to comply with the law, then the money is divided among the other districts. I think it is an excellent check upon the several districts, and I trust it will be continued.

Mr. COLLINS. It is to be presumed that the Legislature, in framing or drafting a school law under our Constitution, will frame it, not, perhaps, in exact accordance with the present system, but in such a manner as to harmonize with the requirements of the Constitution. Now almost any man, if disposed to be critical, might point out difficulties likely to arise in the workings of any new system which we can devise. But all that this body can do, or ought to attempt to do, is to lay down the outlines of a general system, presuming that the Legislature will be as much interested, and have as deeply at heart the cause of common schools, as the members of this Convention. The members of the Legislature will have to exercise their best judgment in devising the means of carrying out in detail these general provisions, and they will undoubtedly frame their law with a view to meet any and all such difficulties as that which has been suggested by the gentleman from Lyon.

Mr. CROSMAN. But what right will the Legislature have to frame a law providing for this difficulty, if in the Constitution we prohibit the Legislature from doing so?

Mr. COLLINS. I think there is no such prohibition, and I imagine it would be no particular trouble to me, if I had the time, to draft a law, under this provision, which should meet that very case. But even supposing that difficulty could not be met, still I maintain that it would be better to let the new districts suffer a little temporary hardship of that kind, than to have our whole educational system deranged. The great object is to stimulate the support of the public schools, and I wish it were possible to keep them going for twelve months in the year instead of six. We provide that the State shall offer a premium for the longer term of six months. We know that there are very few districts in which schools would not be kept from one to three or four months in the year, by the voluntary contributions of the citizens, even without the aid of the public money; and by offering this premium a stimulus is presented, inducing them to contribute such amounts as shall suffice, together with the public money, to carry on the schools for six months, at least; whereby they secure the advantage of the State aid, and are enabled to educate their children. The experience of all other States has shown the great advantages of such a system. I hope the gentleman from Lyon will withdraw his amendment, because I am satisfied that the difficulty which he apprehends does not exist in the section as it now stands before the Convention.

Mr. WARWICK. As it is nearly five o'clock, will the Chairman allow me to make a privileged motion to extend the time for the adjournment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will wait until the committee rises.

TIME OF MAINTAINING SCHOOLS.

Mr. BANKS. I prefer that we should simply require the Legislature to provide for schools for six months in a year, leaving all matters of detail for the Legislature to arrange, from time to time, as occasion may arise. I therefore move to amend by substituting these words, in place of the language now contained in the section:

“The Legislature shall provide for a uniform system of common schools, by which a school shall be maintained in each school district at least six months in every year.”

The CHAIRMAN. The effect of that amendment would be, as the Chair understands, to adopt a substitute for Section 2.

Mr. COLLINS. I trust that amendment will not prevail. I hope that the Convention will be disposed to offer a premium to every school district in this State, which shall maintain a public school for six months in the year; and I also hope, most sincerely, that we shall provide in our Constitution for keeping out of our schools sectarian instruction. It will require strong influences to exclude such instruction, and money is the great motor—one of the most powerful influences of civilization. Wherever its power is brought to bear, it always has potent sway. The gentleman from Humboldt who offers this amendment is almost always right, but it seems to me that he has been a little wrong in his investigations on this subject, and therefore I trust that the Convention will not sustain him. If we adopt his amendment there will be nothing left which will be adequate to keep out sectarianism, and no stimulus which can be relied upon to keep up the public schools for more than one, two, or three months in the year; and if the Legislature has only the public school money, and no power to support the schools by taxation, perhaps, in many districts, they will not be maintained more than one month in the year.

Mr. McCLINTON. I suggest that the clause in the section as reported, prohibiting sectarianism, be incorporated into the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt.

Mr. BANKS. I will accept that.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman from Humboldt may accept it, but I shall not.

Mr. BROSNAN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not now in order.

Mr. BROSNAN. I intend it as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt. It is to add to his amendment the following:

“But no sectarian instruction shall be allowed in any public school so established.”

Mr. BANKS. I accept it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Convention, but in my judgment the result of the removal of that section as reported, could not be anything but bad. Such action must necessarily have a pernicious influence. Sir, the object of the committee in framing Section 2, now under consideration, was to create a stimulus which would incite the different school districts to maintain their schools for longer periods than they otherwise would. But let the several districts have it in their power to put their hands upon the public funds, whenever a school has been taught in them for one, two, or three months, when they have taken up some strolling applicant for the position of teacher, and placed him in charge, to neglect his duties, as I know to have been sometimes the case in my own county, and it will bring forth no good results. What we want is a basis upon which to build the educational superstructure, by means of which we can afford every child a sufficient amount of instruction to enable it to go creditably through life. At the same time, we wish to make the people understand that with the limited resources of the State, and with the heavy expenses necessary to support the schools as they should be supported, they will be required to put their own shoulders to the wheel. Now, although I am a member of the committee which reported this article, I have no hesitation in saying that under its provisions, in my opinion, a law could be framed, and would require to be framed, which would accomplish these good results; and with all deference to the gentleman from Humboldt, I think that his amendment would result in the establishment of a system which would do but little good—which would contain no features calculated to sustain the interests of public education.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XII, entitled Education, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. WARWICK. In order to enable the Convention to finish the consideration of this article to-day, I move that the time for adjournment be extended until half-past five o'clock, and then I will move, inasmuch as the Committee on Schedule desires to hold a meeting to-night, that at that time the Convention adjourn until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock.

The question was taken on the motion to extend the time for adjournment until half-past five o'clock, and it was agreed to.

The question was next taken on the motion that when the Convention adjourn, it adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at nine o'clock, and it was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—EDUCATION.

On motion of Mr. STURTEVANT, the Convention again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President remaining in the chair,) and resumed consideration of Article XII, entitled Education.

NEW SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

The CHAIRMAN stated the amendments pending to Section 2.

Mr. DUNNE. It seems to me there are four or five amendments; I think they cannot all be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state the question. In the first place, the committee has under consideration Section 2, of Article XII, as reported by the Committee on Education. The gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) moves to amend the section by incorporating a proviso, and to that amendment the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) offers an amendment which is of the nature of a substitute, and is in order as an amendment to an amendment. A further amendment, suggested by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) was accepted by the gentleman from Humboldt, and therefore becomes a part of his amendment. Hence, the first question before the committee, is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) as subsequently modified by him.

Mr. FRIZELL. Mr. President—

Mr. BANKS. I ask the gentleman from Storey to give way one moment, that I may make a suggestion. It appears to me that the better course would be to put the vote first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) which I understand is to perfect the section. Then the question will properly come upon my amendment, to strike out the whole section, and insert instead the language which I have proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection that course will be adopted.

Mr. FRIZELL. In the outset of the remarks which I propose to make on the questions now pending before the Convention, I desire to say, Mr. President, that I am sorry to be impelled to utter anything adverse to amendments, coming as these do from able and good men; yet I feel it my duty to state why I shall be compelled to vote against them. I think that when anything like a system of education comes from the hands of such a committee as that to which this article has been referred, the men composing it being able men, who have devoted their entire attention to the subject for many days, it is entitled to most respectful and careful consideration at our hands. Certainly, sir, there are no more competent gentlemen in this Territory than those who compose that committee, and the important subject which they have had under their consideration is a theme suited to the men constituting the committee. Therefore, it seems to me that when a report comes from that committee to this Convention, it comes as a whole—in all its beauty, in all its force, in all its harmony. Sitting here, as one humble member, I might possibly find fault with a single section, as I hear it read by the Secretary, but unless I can hear the whole, take in and understand the harmony of all the parts, and appreciate the beauty and force of the entire report, I think I am scarcely competent to offer an amendment to any part of that report. And I apprehend that no member, no matter what his qualifications may be, can really make any valuable addition or amendment to the report, unless he can see through the beauty and strength and harmony of the whole of it; and hence I fear that any proposed amendment would be more likely to mar than to improve that harmony and strength. For these reasons, I am unwilling, unless gentlemen can offer something which will be extremely well marked and plain in the way of an improvement, to undertake to make any change whatever in the report which has been made by our committee.

The SECRETARY again read the amendment proposed by Mr. Crosman, as follows:

“Provided, That the Legislature may make provision for the distribution of the school fund to school districts, during the first year of their organization, without reference to the time that a school has been held therein."

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

PENALTY FOR NEGLECT.

The question was next stated on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, as subsequently modified, to strike out the whole of Section 2, and insert instead the following :

"Sec. 2. The Legislature shall provide for a uniform system of common schools, by which a school shall be maintained in each school district, at least six months in every year ; but no sectarian instruction shall be allowed in any public school so established."

Mr. BROSNAN. Now, sir, I move to amend that amendment, as just read, by adding thereto the following words, which I find here in the section as reported by the Committee on Education :

"And any school district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school, or which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein, may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public school fund during such neglect or infraction."

Mr. BANKS. While I do not see any obvious necessity for that, I see no objection to it, and therefore I accept the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment as thus modified, and it was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the adoption of Section 2 as reported, and it was adopted.

THE SCHOOL FUNDS.

Section 3 was read as follows :

Sec. 3. All lands, including the 500,000 acres of land granted to the new States under an Act of Congress distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. 1811 ; the sixteenth and thirty-second sections in every township, donated for the benefit of public schools, set forth in the Act of the thirty-eighth Congress, to enable the people of Nevada Territory to form a State Government ; the thirty thousand acres of public lands granted by an Act of Congress, and approved July 2, 1862, for each Senator and Representative in Congress ; and all lands and parcels of lands that have been or may hereafter be granted or appropriated by the United States to this State ; all estates that may escheat to the State ; all of such per cent. as may be granted by Congress on the sale of land ; all fines collected under the penal laws of the State ; all property given or bequeathed to the State for educational purposes ; and all proceeds derived from any or all of said sources, shall be, and the same are hereby solemnly pledged for educational purposes, and shall not be transferred to any other fund for other uses ; and the interest thereon shall, from time to time, be apportioned among the several counties, in proportion to the ascertained numbers of the persons between the ages of six and eighteen years in the different counties. And the Legislature shall provide for the sale of floating land-warrants to cover the aforesaid lands, and for the investment of all proceeds derived from any of the above-mentioned sources in United States bonds, or the bonds of this State : provided, that the interest only of the aforesaid proceeds shall be used for educational purposes, and any surplus interest shall be added to the principal sum ; and provided further, that such portion of said interest as may be necessary, may be appropriated for the support of the State University.

STATE UNIVERSITY.

Mr. DUNNE. I wish to speak to the last proviso, which authorizes the appropriation of such portion of the interest on the public school fund as may be necessary for the support of a State University. I find that special provision is made in the next section for a State University, and in a subsequent section there is a provision for levying a special tax for its support. Now I am entirely in favor of taxing the State for a State University, whenever the State can afford it. I believe, however, in turning our undivided attention, in the first place, to the common school system of the State, and I do not think that the interest derived from the school fund should be taken from the common schools and applied to the purpose of building up a State University. Therefore, because there is special provision made elsewhere for a State University, and because we ought to endeavor, in the first place, to secure to our children the advantages of a good common school system, I move that this last proviso in Section 3 be stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to call the gentleman's attention, and that of the Convention, to the language of that section. It only provides for the appropriation of "such portion of said interest as may be necessary."

Mr. DUNNE. I am aware of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to strike out the last proviso in the section.

Mr. HAWLEY. It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a matter which should be left discretionary with the Legislature. I do not think there is any danger that a body of men, elected by the people, and convened here to legislate for the interests of the new State, are going so blindly to work as to appropriate at once, and exclusively, the entire sum received for interest on the public school fund to the support of a State University, leaving the common schools entirely unprovided for. The gentleman from Humboldt must be well aware that to create a State University, to build up its various departments, and fill it with professors, is a work of time. It will, of course, be the duty of the Legislature, first, to locate and rear the structure, and it does seem to me that the Legislature will, beyond any doubt or question, agree with the gentleman from Humboldt, and the rest of us, in realizing the paramount necessity of preparing the new State for a University before they build it—of placing both parents and children in such a position, in the first place, that they may be competent to avail themselves of the advantages of a University. Therefore, I trust that the amendment will not prevail.

I desire, further, to call the attention of the gentleman to another provision in Section 6—the section which authorizes the special tax, to which he has referred—a provision which he has evidently overlooked. The section prescribes that this special tax may be appropriated "for the support and maintenance of said University, and common schools." Now I submit to the consideration of the Convention, whether it would not be better to leave some little discretionary power on these subjects to the Legislature, and trust to its good sense in regard to appropriating such small proportion of the school funds as may be proper, towards laying the foundation of the material superstructure of the University. I have no doubt that they will devote a sufficient portion for the benefit of the common schools.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Dunne, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I call for the reading of so much of the section as relates to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, donated by Congress for school purposes. I think there is a mistake as to the number of the sections.

The SECRETARY read that portion of the section.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. That is where the error is; it should be the thirty-sixth, instead of the thirty-second sections, according to the Enabling Act.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a mere verbal error; I move that the Secretary be directed to make the necessary alteration.

By unanimous consent, the Secretary was instructed to make the correction, by substituting the word "thirty-sixth" for "thirty-second."

PUBLIC LANDS—CONSENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. FRIZELL. I rise for information. I see that this section includes, and devotes to educational purposes, the lands donated by Congress for internal improvements. I would like to hear some explanation of that.

Mr. COLLINS. Our chairman proposed to bring in an amendment relating to that subject, after the section was read, and at his suggestion I will offer it. Allow me to explain, in the first place, that this is the five hundred thousand acres appropriated by Congress to each of the States for internal improvements, but which has been by most of the States diverted to educational purposes instead. The chairman makes a suggestion, however, which strikes me as a very good one, namely: that probably, or at any rate possibly, we cannot divert the land donated in that manner, and enjoy the benefit of it, without the authority of an Act of Congress, inasmuch as we are still a Territory, and therefore he proposes to insert a clause appropriating the land to this purpose, provided the permission of Congress can be obtained for devoting it to such use and purpose. I will read the amendment he suggests for the information of the Convention.

Strike out all of the first four lines of the section as printed, and add after the word "State," in the seventh line, the following:

"And also the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new States under an Act of Congress, distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. 1841, provided that Congress makes provision for, or authorizes such diversion to be made for the purpose herein contained."

Let the Secretary read the section as it will stand with the amendment proposed by the chairman.

The SECRETARY read, as follows:

Sec. 3. All lands, including the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in every township, donated for the benefit of public schools, set forth in the Act of the thirty-eighth Congress, to enable the people of Nevada Territory to form a State Government; the thirty thousand acres of public lands granted by an Act of Congress, and approved July 2, 1862, for each Senator and Representative in Congress; all proceeds of lands that have been or may hereafter be granted or appropriated by the United States to this State; and also the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new States under an Act of Congress distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. 1841;—provided, that Congress makes provision for, or authorizes such diversion to be made, for the purpose herein contained; all estates that may escheat to the State; all of such per cent. as may be granted by Congress on the sale of land; all fines collected under the penal laws of the State; all property given or bequeathed to the State for educational purposes; and all proceeds derived from any or all of said sources, shall be, and the same are hereby solemnly pledged for educational purposes, and shall not be transferred to any other fund for other uses; and the interest thereon shall, from time to time, be apportioned among the several counties, in proportion to the ascertained numbers of the persons between the ages of six and eighteen years in the different counties. And the Legislature shall provide for the sale of floating land warrants to cover the aforesaid lands, and for the investment of all proceeds derived from any of the above-mentioned sources in United States bonds or the bonds of this State; provided, that the interest only of the aforesaid proceeds shall be used for educational purposes, and any surplus interest shall be added to the principal sum; and provided further, that such portion of said interest as may be necessary, may be appropriated for the support of the State University.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state that the amendment presented, as I prepared it, makes no change in the section, except the transposition of the language and the addition of these words: "Provided, that Congress makes provision for, or authorizes such diversion to be made, for the purpose herein contained." I think that without the amendment a legal objection might exist to our making the provision absolutely, and incorporating it in our Constitution, without in any manner asking the consent of Congress.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Collins, (in behalf of the chairman,) and it was agreed to.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was adopted.

STATE UNIVERSITY—FREE ADMISSION.

Section 4 was read, as follows:

Sec. 4. The Legislature shall provide for the establishment of a State University, embracing departments for agriculture, mechanics arts, and mining, which shall be free to all white pupils possessing such qualifications as may be prescribed by the Board of Regents.

The CHAIRMAN. Without leaving the chair, by leave of the Convention, I would ask the Chairman of the Committee on Education to explain this section. I see that one of the essential features of the corresponding section in the former Constitution is omitted, namely, that which required that the parents or guardians of the pupils shall be residents of this State. Is it contemplated that the institution shall be made free to all pupils, although their parents may not be residents of the State?

Thursday,]

COLLINS—JOHNSON—NOURSE—WARWICK.

[July 21.

Mr. COLLINS. The committee had that subject under consideration, and was of opinion that there may arise cases where, if this school shall obtain the reputation which it is hoped it may acquire, by reason of our large mining interest, and the peculiarities of our agricultural lands, a restriction of that nature would be inadvisable. There may be individuals from other States who would like to avail themselves of the advantages of such a school, and who would be able and willing to pay liberally for their tuition, and that would be a source of revenue to the institution, and an advantage not only to those individuals, but to the public also. That consideration was what influenced the committee to make the change to which the gentleman refers.

[Mr. McCLENTON in the chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I call the attention of the gentleman from Storey to the language of the section. I think it provides that instruction in the University shall be free to all pupils. If instruction is to be given free, I do not see how there can be any revenue.

Mr. COLLINS. If that is the construction to be placed upon the language of the section, the committee, I am sure, will be very anxious to change it. The University is to be placed under the care and direction of a Board of Regents, the members of which Board, it is presumed, will feel a strong interest in its prosperity; and as every such institution is languishing for want of money, it is hardly to be supposed that the Board will call in strangers to enjoy its facilities and advantages, unless the institution is to derive some benefit from them in return.

Mr. JOHNSON. This is the point I make: that when we declare that education shall be free in the institution, it is not within the province of the Board of Regents to prescribe regulations by which those pupils who come from abroad shall be compelled to make payment. I would prefer the language as we find it in the old Constitution. Whilst I would be in favor of making the University free for all pupils living within the State, I am unwilling to make it free also for those who come from abroad. The intention of the former Convention was, that free tuition should be given only to those whose parents or guardians might reside in the State, and as to those coming from abroad, the Regents would, of course, have the power to make such regulations as should be just and satisfactory.

Mr. COLLINS. I perceive the correctness of the criticism, and I think that some language should be added.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will move then to amend the section by adding the words as printed in the former Constitution: "And whose parents or guardians are citizens of this State."

Mr. NOURSE. Does not the section then exclude pupils residing outside the State, on any terms?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think not. The language of this latter portion of the section applies only to those whose parents or guardians are citizens. It gives the benefit of free admission to those living in the State, but there is nothing to prevent the Board of Regents from allowing others to enter upon such terms as they shall see fit to prescribe.

Mr. WARWICK. Would it not be better to incorporate in the section the idea that the Regents may prescribe the terms of admission of pupils from abroad?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it is at all necessary. We only declare here the one proposition that the institution shall be free to those who reside in the State. That declaration is expressed in unmistakable language in the section, but nothing is said, directly or by implication, in regard to pupils who reside without the limits of the State. The Board of Regents may therefore prescribe such terms as they please for their admission, and I do not think that anything further is needed on that subject.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not think that the word "free," as there used, has reference to money. It strikes me that it means, rather, that all white citizens shall be at liberty to come in, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed. I do not think the pupils are to be free in the sense that it is to cost them nothing, but that the privileges of the institution are to be free to be availed of by all the children in the State.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will only say this, that such was the sense in which the word was understood by the Convention which framed and adopted this section last year—namely, that children whose parents reside in this State shall be admitted free of charge. If, however, that word is not sufficient to convey our meaning, let us use language that will. I had something to do with the preparation of this article in the other Convention, and I know that the sense in which the word was understood then, was that education in the institution should be free. Now I repeat, if the word does not mean that, and we intend it, then let us substitute other words that will express our intention; and if, on the other hand, such is not our intention, let us adopt such language as will clearly express what we do intend. I am unqualifiedly in favor of providing that the instruction imparted in the University, to the children of the State, shall be without cost, and we can use that expression if gentlemen consider it more definite. But the word "free," as employed in the section, does not refer to white or black; I, for one, did not intend it to have any application or reference to the individual.

Mr. COLLINS. I am in favor, to a certain extent, of free schools, and yet I do not believe it is the duty of the public, unless it has ample means, even to open the common schools without exacting some small compensation. If the State is pressed for money, limited in its resources, or overburdened with debt, it must require parents, even though they may be poor, to contribute something towards the expense of educating their children, although I would like to have all the schools free, in the most liberal sense of the word. I think that the word employed in this section should be changed, and I suggest that we say "open," instead of "free"—"which shall be open to all white pupils," etc., under such regulations as may be prescribed. I really never dreamed that it was proposed to make the institution perfectly free to everybody in the State, so that men might attend, if they pleased, up to the age of twenty-five, or over, at the expense of the State. I know there are many colleges having departments in which men, up to the age of thirty, receive instructions adapted to the various walks of life, but they always exact compensation for such instructions. It seems to me that we ought only to provide that the University shall be open to all.

Mr. JOHNSON. That might be susceptible to the criticism that it would be very inconvenient to keep the door open, especially on a cold winter day. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLLINS. I use the word in the common acceptance of the term. As to the word "free," where it occurs in this section—I do not find it at this moment, the report has been so much disarranged and mixed up—

Mr. NOURSE. Allow me to make a remark while the gentleman is looking for that section. It seems to me that when we have gone so far as to provide for a Mining Department, we have said quite enough; all the rest, in regard to establishing rules and regulations, might better be left to the Legislature. As to making the institution free, I do not think it is practicable with the small amount of population in the country—

Mr. COLLINS. I have the floor, I believe. I find the word "free" in the fourth line of the section as reported. It says:

"The Legislature shall provide for the establishment of a State University, embracing departments for agriculture, mechanic arts, and mining, which shall be free to all white pupils."

"Open to all white pupils," as I would prefer to say—

"Which shall be open to all white pupils possessing such qualifications as may be prescribed by the Board of Regents."

That, it seems to me, covers the whole ground, and we need go no farther. Under that section, you may let pupils in, if you please, from California, from Maine, from Georgia, or from Kam-schatka.

Mr. WARWICK. The only objection I see, is that our State is rapidly increasing. It is well known that an institution of this kind will be eagerly sought after by all classes; and if we admit the pupils free, I doubt whether we shall be able to build an institution large enough to contain all that will apply. There must be a limit established. It will be like the Girard College of Philadelphia, the Smithsonian Institution, founded by a benevolent foreigner, and other similar institutions, all of which have a limit. Therefore I think, as the gentleman from Washoe has said, that when we have provided that such an institution must be reared, all the rest may be left to the Legislature. I will move to strike out all that latter part of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending already, and consequently the gentleman's amendment is out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say but a single word further. I have referred to the action of the former Convention on this subject, and the sense in which that body used the word "free," in the original section, and I think the members of that Convention who are present in this will not disagree with me in respect to the meaning which was attached to the word when it was there employed. Although the Chairman of the Committee on Education seems to differ from me in regard to the sense in which the word now appears, in the section under consideration, yet I certainly conceive that what I have stated is the correct meaning and import of the expression, and hence I shall insist on my amendment to add the remaining portion of the original section—"and whose parents or guardians are citizens of this State." I insist upon this because I do not wish to throw open the institution without cost to everybody who may choose to apply for admission.

There seems to be some considerable difference of opinion on this subject in the Convention, and I would like an opportunity to make some estimates in regard to it, and to present some reasons why, in my judgment, this Convention should accord the special privilege which I propose to the children or wards of the citizens of the State, without cost in money. I think I can justify that policy, and show that there are ample compensating advantages to result to the State from making such a donation to the children of the State.

But, as there is not sufficient time before the hour of adjournment to give proper consideration to this important matter, I will now move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, for the further consideration of this article.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XII, entitled Education, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

Friday.] HAWLEY—CROSMAN—HOVEY—BROSNAN—WARWICK—MASON—BANKS—CHAPIN. [July 22.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

On motion of Mr. CROSMAN, at twenty-five minutes past five o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 22, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock A. M.

Mr. HAWLEY moved, in the temporary absence of the President, that Mr. Mason take the chair as President pro tem.

The SECRETARY put the question, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON declined to take the chair.

Mr. CROSMAN moved that Mr. Hawley take the chair as President pro tem.

The SECRETARY put the question, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY accordingly took the chair, as President pro tem.

The roll was called, and all the members responded, except the following: Messrs. Ball, Collins, Crawford, DeLong, Earl, Fitch, Folsom, Haines, Hudson, Jones, Kinkead, McClinton, Morse, Nourse, Parker, Tozer, Wellington, Williams, and Mr. President. Present, 20; absent, 19.

Subsequently, Messrs. Collins, Nourse, and the President came in, and were recorded as present, on the roll-call.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. NIMS.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOVEY. I ask indefinite leave of absence for Mr. DeLong, on account of the ill health of his wife.

Mr. BROSNAN. We have but little over a quorum now, and if we go on granting indefinite leave of absence to members, we shall very soon find ourselves without a quorum.

Mr. HOVEY. I will ask, then, that he be granted leave of absence for one day.

The question was taken, and leave of absence was granted to Mr. DeLong for one day.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask leave of absence for myself this forenoon, having business to attend to.

The question was taken, and leave of absence was granted to Mr. Johnson in accordance with his request.

Mr. WARWICK. Leave of absence was yesterday granted to Mr. Earl, for one day only, but with an understanding that the leave would be extended, if the necessities of the case should require it. I now ask that he have leave of absence for another day.

The question was taken, and leave of absence for to-day was granted to Mr. Earl.

Mr. BRADY asked leave of absence for Mr. Folsom for one day, which was granted.

Mr. MASON. My colleague, Mr. McClinton, obtained indefinite leave of absence the other day, but under a late ruling of the Chair, I fear that it may not avail him, and therefore I ask leave of absence for him for to-day.

The question was taken, and leave of absence was granted to Mr. McClinton for one day.

Mr. KENNEDY asked leave of absence for Mr. Hudson for one day, which was granted.

IMPEACHMENT AND REMOVAL.

Mr. CROSMAN, from the Committee on Engrossment, reported correctly engrossed Article VII, entitled Impeachment and Removal from Office.

The report was received, and the article ordered on file for its third reading.

PHRASEOLOGY.

Mr. BANKS, from the Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement, submitted the following report:

The Standing Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement beg leave to report, that they have carefully examined the following articles, as engrossed and passed by the Convention:

Article VIII, entitled Municipal and other Corporations;

Article IX, entitled Finance and State Debt;

Article X, entitled Taxation;

Article XIII, entitled Militia;

Article XIV, entitled Public Institutions;

Article XV, entitled Boundary;

Article XVII, entitled Amendments.

And your committee recommend the following amendments:

In Article XIII, Section 1, line 2, before the word "organizing," strike out the word "the," so as to read—"The Legislature shall provide by law for organizing and disciplining the militia," etc.

In Article XVII, Section 2, strike out the last words "at such election," and insert the same after the word "cast," in the 24th line, so as to read—"Reference shall be had to the highest number of votes cast at such election for the candidates for any office, or on any question."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES A. BANKS, Chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair understands that these amendments are only of a verbal character, the latter being merely a transposition.

Mr. BANKS. That is all.

The report was adopted, and the amendments agreed to by unanimous consent.

STATE SEAL.

Mr. CHAPIN, from the Committee on State Seal, submitted the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT—Your Committee on State Seal recommend that the following prominent features be represented upon the State Seal, to wit:

In the foreground, two large mountains—at the base of which, on the right, there shall be located a quartz mill, and on the left a tunnel, penetrating the silver leads of the mountains, with a miner running out a car load of ore, and a team loaded with ore for the mill. Immediately in the foreground, there shall be emblems indicative of the agricultural resources of the State, as follows: a plough, a sheaf, and a sickle; in the middle ground, a train of railroad cars passing a mountain gorge—also a telegraph line extending along the line of the railroad; in the extreme background, a range of snow-clad mountains, with the rising sun in the east. Thirty-six stars to encircle the whole group. In an outer circle, the words "The Great Seal of the State of

Friday.] JOHNSON—DUNNE—KENNEDY—BANKS—CHAPIN—WARWICK—BROSNAN, ETC. [July 22.

Nevada" to be engraven, with these words for the motto of our State, "All for Our Country."

SAMUEL A. CHAPIN, Chairman.

The question was taken on the adoption of the report, and it was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose it is necessary that there should be a motion to discharge the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It may be desirable hereafter for the committee to take further action.

SCHEDULE.

Mr. DUNNE. In the absence of the Chairman of the Committee on Schedule, I wish to say that we are not yet prepared to report in full, but we expect to present a partial report this afternoon or evening. There has been a meeting of the committee called for a quarter before one o'clock to-day, and it is very desirable that each county should be represented, if not by the regularly appointed member, then by some other member from the county, who may be admitted to participate in the deliberations, by vote of the committee. I hope there will be a full attendance.

LIMITATION OF SPEECHES.

Mr. KENNEDY offered the following resolution :

Resolved, That no member be allowed to speak more than once, nor longer than five minutes upon any one subject, and if said time be consumed, he shall not be allowed to explain his vote.

Mr. BANKS. I move to strike out all of that resolution, except so much as limits the time. I am willing to confine gentlemen to a limited time of speaking in debate, but if a member wishes to explain his vote, he should have that privilege.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will state that it is not my desire to limit debate, at all, but we have got into such a position that it is absolutely necessary, in my opinion, if we intend to make any Constitution at all, that we should finish it by Saturday night. I know that some gentlemen expect to go home to-morrow morning, and I am apprehensive that we shall find ourselves left without a quorum. I think it is time for us to vote more and talk less. I will suggest further, that if there should be some cases arise where it is necessary for a member to speak longer than five minutes, he can do so by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNNE. That should be inserted, then, for as it reads now, it requires only a majority vote to extend the time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will accept the suggestion, and insert the words, "except by unanimous consent."

Mr. CHAPIN. I will suggest an amendment, that the five minutes limitation be made to apply only to any question before the Convention. Then a member can make short speeches as often as he pleases, so long as he does not consume altogether more than five minutes of the time of the Convention.

Mr. JOHNSON. Perhaps we should go a little further and have a time-keeper appointed, if each member's time is to be divided into fractions. I will suggest, however, that the number of times of speaking is not limited by the rule heretofore adopted for the government of the Convention. And another thing, if we are to have such a rule, it is quite as important that it should apply in Committee of the Whole as in the Convention.

Mr. KENNEDY. I intended it to apply to both.

Mr. WARWICK. The difficulty is that there is frequently a delicacy on the part of the presiding officer, about calling a member to order who has exceeded his time.

Mr. JOHNSON. In regard to that, I will say that the rule which has governed the Convention hitherto regarding the length of speeches, in my opinion, left it discretionary with the Chair to call a member to order or not, unless objections were made. If, however, a different rule shall be adopted, which is imperative in its character, absolutely limiting the time of speaking, without reference to objections being made or not, I should, while in the Chair, feel it my duty to enforce such rule.

Mr. WARWICK. Very well; I hope the resolution will be adopted with that understanding.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope it will be considered the bounden duty of the Chair to enforce the rule.

Mr. BANKS. I will withdraw my proposition to amend the resolution, because a member may make an explanation by consent of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Several other amendments have been accepted, I understand, by the mover of the resolution.

Mr. KENNEDY modified his resolution, so as to read as follows :

Resolved, That no member be allowed to speak longer than five minutes upon any one subject, either in Convention or in Committee of the Whole, and if said time be consumed, he shall not be allowed to explain his vote.

The question was taken upon the adoption of the resolution as modified, and it was adopted.

THE FINAL ENROLLMENT.

Mr. BROSNAN. I would like to ask a question for information, and that is, at what time the Constitution will probably be enrolled and prepared for the signatures of members of the Convention. I make the inquiry, because I learn that some of the members desire to leave this week, and I do not see how, in that event, their signatures can be obtained.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. (Mr. Hawley.) I will state that the Enrolling Clerk assures us, that every portion which has been placed in his hands will be ready by to-morrow morning, and probably, if any more shall be handed in to-day, it will also be included. Nevertheless, I will state, from the best information I can obtain, that it will be impossible to have the whole instrument enrolled by to-morrow night. The article on the Judicial Department, and the Schedule will be very long, and those are not yet in the hands of the Enrolling Committee.

Mr. BROSNAN. I made the inquiry mainly in order that members of the Convention may be apprized of the fact that their signatures to the document are necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON. How many signatures are necessary to give it validity?

Mr. BROSNAN. I do not know; but it is usual for each member of a Constitutional Convention to append his sign manual to the instrument which he has assisted in framing.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope to see it enrolled by to-morrow evening, so that there may be no loss of time. I trust, therefore, that the committee will attend to the business, and have the work done without delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It will be impossible, unless the articles on the Judiciary and the Schedule shall be finally acted upon.

Mr. CHAPIN. We are going to act upon them to-day, I hope.

Mr. DUNNE. I do not think it will be possible to have it enrolled before ten o'clock on Saturday night; but perhaps members can pursue the same plan which was adopted by the last Convention—that is, sign their names in blank.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—EDUCATION.

On motion of Mr. DUNNE, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President pro tem.—Mr. Hawley—remaining in the chair,) and resumed consideration of Article XII, entitled Education.

FREE ADMISSION TO STATE UNIVERSITY.

The question was stated on the amendment offered by Mr. Johnson to Section 4, to add thereto the words—"and whose parents or guardians are citizens of this State;" so that the section would read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall provide for the establishment of a State University, embracing departments for agriculture, mechanic arts, and mining, which shall be free to all white pupils possessing such qualifications as may be prescribed by the Board of Regents, and whose parents or guardians are citizens of this State.

Mr. JOHNSON. There was another amendment offered in the form of a substitute for the section, either by the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse,) or the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks.)

Mr. BANKS. I think that was lost.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir. I wish to call the attention of those gentlemen to the facts. I am confident there was an amendment to Section 4—in its character, a substitute for the section—offered by one or the other of those gentlemen.

Mr. BANKS. My recollection is, that I offered an amendment, which was voted upon, providing that the Legislature should pass such laws as would secure the keeping open of the schools for six months in the year.

Mr. JOHNSON. That was in Section 2; the one I allude to was proposed to Section 4, now under consideration; or, if not offered, it was at least read for information. The effect of it was, to omit all after the first three lines, stopping at the words "mining department," in the section as printed in the old Constitution. I think there was an amendment pending of that purport.

Mr. NOURSE. I believe I made that suggestion, but I made no motion.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will move to strike out that latter portion, after the word "Regents." That will leave the matter entirely open for legislative action.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recollects that objection was made to the latter clause on the ground of certain privileges to which children, whose parents or guardians reside in this State, are entitled, and in view of that objection the Chair was about to propose an amendment. I will suggest to the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) to present that amendment, which I think will do away with all the objections urged against the section.

Mr. CROSMAN. There does not seem to be any motion at present before the Convention, and I will ask the Chair to put my motion, as it has been seconded. That will leave the whole matter to the Legislature, to determine whether the institution shall be free for all children, or free for all white children, or what shall be the terms of admission in any and all cases.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a motion pending, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson.)

Mr. JOHNSON. I will withdraw that amendment. I do not consider it necessary, unless we retain the other portions of the section.

Mr. COLLINS. In order to harmonize this matter, I will say that I have no particular objection, for my own part, to striking out all, except that portion which requires the establishment of the University. And here is an amendment which has been handed to me that seems to cover the entire ground. It is to strike out the latter clause, and substitute the following:

"And the Board of Regents shall prescribe the terms upon which pupils shall be entitled to the privileges of said University."

Mr. CROSMAN. Now I submit to the Chair and to the Convention, whether it would not be more explicit, and better in every way, to let the section provide simply for the University, and then for a Board of Regents, and leave all the rest to the Legislature.

Mr. COLLINS. I am satisfied with that. Here is something, handed me by the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) that would be short and concise:

Friday.]

NOURSE—CROSMAN—BROSNAN—JOHNSON—COLLINS—CHAPIN—MASON.

[July 22.]

"The Legislature shall provide for the establishment of a State University, which shall be under the control of a Board of Regents."

Mr. NOURSE. I like the general idea of that very much, only I would suggest to add to it, "whose powers and duties shall be prescribed by the Legislature," and not leave it to be inferred, perhaps, that they have absolute control. I will vote for it with that addition.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will accept of that, although I think it would rather be inferred.

Mr. BROSNAN. I rise for information, and would like to get the attention of the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) for a moment. I suppose it is intended, in the establishment of this institution, to comply with the Act of Congress of 1862, granting lands to the several States for agricultural colleges, and that Act, I believe, provides that the institution shall possess various features. It is not to be devoted to agricultural purposes only, but the mechanic arts and military tactics are also to be taught.

The CHAIRMAN. Allow me a word of explanation on that subject. There is another section which provides for these matters, and the gentleman will observe that it is not left discretionary whether those branches shall be taught or not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will further suggest that the section which has been reported by the committee, is more extended than the printed section, in the old Constitution. The chairman of the committee will be able to explain the objects intended to be gained by the section.

Mr. COLLINS. The law of 1862, which has been referred to by my learned colleague, (Mr. Brosnan,) makes it obligatory that the college established by aid of the fund provided for, shall be for the purpose of the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts; and in prescribing the details of such institution, in one portion of the Act, it designates military tactics as one of the branches in which pupils are to be instructed. It also provides that the fund arising from the sale of the thirty thousand acres of land donated to the State for each member of Congress, shall be set apart for these specific purposes. The subsequent section, as it will be seen, provides for the matter fully.

And here allow me to say to the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) that if his amendment is to prevail, I hope he will modify it so as to include this language: "A State University, embracing departments for agriculture, mechanic arts, and mining." I desire that modification merely for the purpose of covering the entire ground.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will accept that.

Mr. COLLINS. I will say, further, that so far as I am concerned, I would rather have preferred to leave the whole matter to the Legislature, but in deference to the former Convention, the committee desired to retain as much of the language of the original section as possible.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not know that my amendment will be necessary, as the section is now proposed to be modified, but it will undoubtedly cover the whole ground if we add "under such regulations as shall be provided by law."

Mr. CHAPIN. Allow me to suggest that we shall save time by having this whole article read through carefully, section by section.

Mr. COLLINS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Crosman,) that the presumption is the Legislature would provide for a Board of Regents, even if there were no further provision on that subject.

Mr. MASON. I rise to a question of order, that we have not a quorum present.

The SECRETARY counted the Convention, and reported that nineteen members were present, being one less than a quorum.

Mr. CHAPIN. I will move that the committee rise, in order that we may have a call of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. I see that one member has come in since the count, making a quorum. I hope that members will bear in mind our attenuated condition, and remain in attendance as much and as long as possible.

Mr. CHAPIN. I withdraw the motion.

The SECRETARY, by direction of the Chairman, read through the entire article.

Mr. NOURSE. I find that Section 7 covers the whole ground, so that my amendment is not necessary.

Mr. COLLINS. The proviso in Section 8, I will state, was made in conformity with the requirements of the Act of Congress.

PRESERVATION OF SCHOOL FUNDS.

Mr. NOURSE. I see it is provided that the interest on the funds coming under the control of the Board of Regents, must be used.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, sir. The law of Congress provides that if any portion of the fund invested shall, by any accident or contingency be lost, it shall be replaced by the State.

Mr. NOURSE. But this section provides that both principal and interest shall remain undiminished.

Mr. COLLINS. That refers to interest which may accumulate.

Mr. NOURSE. I understand that the interest must be used from year to year in carrying on the institution, and I think that portion relating to the interest had better be stricken out. You cannot apply the interest to the purposes of education, and have it, too.

Mr. COLLINS. I think very likely that the gentleman's criticism is just, and an amendment may be necessary there.

Mr. NOURSE. Suppose you use there the exact words of the Act of Congress?

Mr. COLLINS. By unanimous permission of the committee, I will amend that part of the section by striking out the words "interest and."

No objection being made, Section 8 was so amended.

ADMISSION TO UNIVERSITY—AGAIN.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 4 is now under consideration, and the Chair understood the gentleman from Lyon to offer a substitute. Does he withdraw it, or insist upon it?

Mr. CROSMAN. I do not know that I understand the purport of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins.) Is it different from the report of the committee?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there appears to be only a little difference in the language, but no real difference in the meaning.

Mr. DUNNE. I wish to address a remark to the gentleman from Storey. The word "interest" having been stricken out by his amendment, leaves the word "principal" alone. Now would it not be better to use the word "capital"?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order. That amendment will not come up until the section is reached.

Mr. DUNNE. I understood the Chair to state the question on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Storey.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the amendment to Section 4. No other section is now under consideration.

Mr. COLLINS. I will state that my amendment is—although I am more than half inclined to leave the subject entirely to the Legislature—to provide that the Legislature shall appoint a Board of Regents, and said Board of Regents shall prescribe rules and regulations for the State University.

Mr. CROSMAN. Then I do not withdraw my motion. I think this amendment is much more concise and to the purpose, providing that the Legislature shall provide for the University and Mining Department. I want the Legislature simply to provide for the University, and then let it be under the control and management of the Board of Regents, as provided by law.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) provides, in the first place, that the Board of Regents shall prescribe regulations for the University, and that then the section goes on to say, that pupils shall be admitted under the rules and regulations prescribed by that Board. If that is so, it looks to me like tautology.

Mr. DUNNE. It appears to me that this matter is getting very much mixed. I move that the committee rise, and recommend that the report be recommitted to the Committee on Education.

Mr. COLLINS. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Crosmán) is very complete, and all that is required. It is only a moment's work to agree upon it, so as to be satisfactory to all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Humboldt insist on his motion?

Mr. DUNNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRIZELL. I hope it will not prevail. They can get the section perfected in a moment.

The question was taken on the motion that the committee rise, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. This seems now to embrace all that is needed. I will read it:

Sec. 4. The Legislature shall provide for a State University, embracing departments for agriculture, mechanic arts, and mining, to be under the control of a Board of Regents, as may be provided for by law.

Mr. CROSMAN. I accept that.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I desire to suggest to the gentleman to put in the first line there, the words "for the establishment of." It seems to infer that, as it is, but it will make the language clearer.

Mr. COLLINS. Very well; I will insert that, if there is no objection, and will make another slight correction.

The SECRETARY read the amendment as finally modified, as follows:

Sec. 4. The Legislature shall provide for the establishment of a State University, which shall embrace departments for agriculture, mechanic arts, and mining, to be controlled by a Board of Regents, whose duties shall be prescribed by law."

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, as a substitute for the section originally reported by the Committee on Education, and it was adopted.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SCHOOLS.

Section 5 was read, as follows:

Sec. 5. The Legislature shall have power to establish Normal Schools, and such different grades of schools, from the primary department to the University, as in their discretion they may see fit; and all professors in said University, or teachers in said common schools, of whatever grade, shall be required to take and subscribe to the oath as prescribed in Article XVI of this Constitution. No professor or teacher who fails to comply with the provisions of any law framed in accordance with the provisions of this section, shall be entitled to receive any portion of the public moneys set apart for school purposes.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I do not desire to delay action, but just to take the sense of the Convention. I move to strike out in the second line the words "normal schools." The Legislature is authorized to establish all grades of schools, and it is not necessary to mention normal schools specially.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section as read, and it was adopted.

SPECIAL SCHOOL TAX.

Section 6 was read, as follows:

Sec. 6. The Legislature shall provide a special tax of one-half of one mill on the dollar of all taxable property in the State, in addition to the other means provided for the support and maintenance of said University and common schools; provided, that at the end of ten years they may reduce said tax to one quarter of one mill on each dollar of taxable property.

Mr. CHAPIN. Before this section is adopted I would like to suggest whether it is not desirable to make one alteration. There seems to be provision made in a previous part of the article

Friday.]

DUNNE—CHAPIN—COLLINS—FRIZELL—NOURSE.

[July 22.

for a school fund, which may be entirely ample, and I would like to alter this language, where it says the Legislature shall provide a special tax of one-half of one mill on the dollar. I move to strike out the word "shall," and insert, "may in its discretion."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNE. What is the use, now, of the proviso at the end of the section?

Mr. CHAPIN. I move to strike out the proviso also.

Mr. DUNNE. I want that word "shall" put in again, and I hope it will be.

Mr. COLLINS. I regret that it has been stricken out, for I am confident the Board of Regents will have great difficulty in getting funds. It is always the case that institutions of this character are embarrassed for the want of funds, and I hope the committee will reconsider that amendment.

Mr. FRIZELL. There is no doubt that if any funds shall be needed for the State University, or for the support of normal or other schools, they will be provided. There will be American citizens in the Legislature, and if the money is needed, and they may in their discretion appropriate it, the Legislature will vote the required amount of money. There can be no doubt about that. On the contrary, it appears that there is ample provision made by this article, both for the schools and the University, and consequently it may be that no special tax will be needed. Now which horn of the dilemma is it best for us to take? I say we had better leave it to the discretion of the Legislature, because it is certain that the tax will be levied, if it is needed.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope my amendment will be adopted striking out the proviso. Every gentleman knows that the hearts of our people are set on the common schools; and who can doubt that the Legislature, representing such a people, will levy a tax if there shall be any occasion for it? But I do not believe in compelling the Legislature to burden us with a tax, unless it shall be really needed; therefore I trust that the proviso will be stricken out.

Mr. COLLINS. The committee had in view the difficulties which every new State has encountered in the establishment of State Universities and the maintaining of the common school interest. Now this section contemplates that the Board of Regents will set aside the proceeds of this tax of one half mill upon a dollar for the special purpose of creating a fund, to be allowed to accumulate until there shall be money sufficient to lay the foundation of an institution such as the wants of the State may demand. Having the proceeds of the thirty thousand acres for each member of Congress, which will be ninety thousand acres for this State, they may set that apart as a permanent fund for the support and maintenance of professors in the University. If this matter of the special tax is left to the Legislature, what will be the result? That body will be under a pressure, a terrible pressure I have no doubt, which will impel them to postpone the tax from year to year; whereas, if the tax were levied at once, a small tax that nobody would really feel, it would go on gradually accumulating into a fund of some magnitude, until five, ten, or twenty years hence, as the case may be, it will become sufficient in the aggregate to lay the foundation of an institution that will be a benefit and an honor to the State. I hope we shall not neglect to provide for an important matter like this, while we are still in an embryo state. I do not believe that the Legislature is likely to be as earnest in this matter of education as gentlemen appear to anticipate. The Legislature of last winter demonstrated the fact that it did not possess that degree of earnestness on the subject that I had hoped existed. I trust, therefore, that we shall make such provisions in our Constitution that men coming into our State may come with a full conviction and assurance that a proper foundation has been laid for affording the means of instruction to their children as they grow up, without the necessity of sending them to other States to be educated.

The question was taken on Mr. Chapin's amendment to strike out the proviso, and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was adopted.

THE BOARD OF REGENTS.

Section 7 was read, as follows:

SEC. 7. The Governor, Secretary of State, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, shall for the first four years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, be a Board of Regents to control and manage the affairs of the University, and the funds of the same, under such regulations as may be provided by law; but the Legislature shall, at the expiration of that time, provide for the election of a Board of Regents, and define their duties.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move that the section be adopted as read.

Mr. NOURSE. I suggest that the words "at the expiration of that time," do not come in at the right place. It seems to me that they should be inserted after the words, "Board of Regents," where they last occur, so as to read: "but the Legislature shall provide for the election of a Board of Regents at the expiration of that time, and define their duties." As it is now, it would seem to imply that the period for any action of the Legislature will not arrive until the expiration of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make any motion?

Mr. NOURSE. I will move that the language be transposed so that the words "at the expiration of that time," shall come next after the word "Regents," where it last occurs in the section.

The Secretary read the section as proposed to be amended.

Friday.] NOURSE—CHAIRMAN—COLLINS—FRIZELL—CHAPIN—DUNNE—BROSNAN. [July 22.

Mr. NOURSE. Perhaps it would be better still to say, "whose term of office shall commence at the expiration of that time."

The CHAIRMAN. Let me make a suggestion, that the language be so modified as to say that the Legislature shall provide for the election of a Board of Regents.

Mr. NOURSE. Very well; or "their successors."

Mr. COLLINS. What is the objection to the original section?

Mr. NOURSE. We merely mean to specify the term of office, or the beginning of the office; but this language might be construed to mean that the Legislature shall have no authority for the first four years.

The CHAIRMAN. The section as it now reads, states that the Legislature shall, "at the expiration of that time, provide for the election of a Board of Regents." That refers to the end of the four years. Now it might happen that the Legislature would not be in session within six months or a year after that time, and in that case would there not be an interregnum, when there would be no Board?

Mr. COLLINS. But the section says they shall hold for four years, "and until their successors are elected and qualified."

Mr. FRIZELL. The provision for the election of a new Board does not take effect until after the expiration of the term of office of the Board created by the section.

Mr. COLLINS. I can see no difficulty in that.

Mr. FRIZELL. The concluding clause requires that "at the end of that time" the Legislature shall provide for the election of a new Board. Consequently, there is no power in the Legislature to provide for the election of a new Board, until the term of office of the old one shall have expired.

Mr. NOURSE. I will have an amendment prepared in a moment.

Mr. CHAPIN. I suggest that we make it read that "the Legislature shall provide for the election of a new Board of Regents, and define their duties."

Mr. NOURSE. "And term of office."

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend by striking out those last three lines, and inserting the following:

"But the Legislature, at its regular session immediately before the expiration of the term of office of said Board of Regents, shall provide for the election of a new Board of Regents, and define their duties."

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope that amendment will be adopted, but I would like to have the word "immediately" stricken out.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Dunne, and it was agreed to.

Mr. NOURSE. I move to add to that amendment the words "and fix their term of office."

Mr. BROSNAN. I think that is provided for already.

Mr. COLLINS. Section 4, I believe it is, covers that ground.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that the words "next preceding" should be used in the amendment just adopted, instead of "immediately before," so as to read—"The Legislature, at its regular session next preceding the expiration of the term," etc.

Mr. DUNNE. All right; let the Secretary make the change.

By unanimous consent, the Secretary was directed to make the amendment suggested.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was adopted.

PRESERVATION OF FUNDS.

Section 8 was read—as previously amended—as follows:

SEC. 8. The Board of Regents shall, from the interest accruing from the first funds which come under their control, immediately organize and maintain the said mining department, in such manner as to make it most effective and useful. Provided, that all the proceeds of the public lands donated by Act of Congress, approved July 2, A. D. 1862, for a college for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts, shall be invested by the Board of Regents in a separate fund to be appropriated exclusively for the benefit of the two first-named departments to the University, as set forth in Section 4, above. And the Legislature shall provide that, if through neglect or any other contingency, any portion of the fund so set apart shall be lost or misappropriated, the State of Nevada shall replace such amount so lost in said fund, so that the principal of said fund shall remain forever undiminished.

Mr. DUNNE. I move now to strike out the word "principal," as well as "interest," in the last clause, and insert the word "capital."

Mr. BROSNAN. I will move that after the word "arts," in the proviso, there be inserted the words "and including military tactics."

The CHAIRMAN. Allow the Chair to suggest that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt takes precedence, and must first be disposed of.

Mr. BROSNAN. I thought that had been acted upon.

The question was taken on Mr. Dunne's amendment, and it was agreed to.

MILITARY TACTICS.

Mr. BROSNAN. Now I offer my amendment to insert the words "and including military tactics." My object in proposing such an amendment is this: The Act of Congress of 1862, with the provisions of which this section is intended to comply, requires that the interest on the fund, created by those provisions, shall be inviolably appropriated by each State for the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college, wherein the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific studies, and including military tactics, to teach a knowledge of agriculture and the mechanic arts, and so on. Military tactics being specially mentioned, I have offered this amendment to conform to the requirement of the Act of Congress.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROSNAN. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Education, I would like to propose a further amendment, so as to conform to that last adopted. The section now reads, in one portion of it, "to be appropriated exclusively for the benefit of the two first-named departments." I would say "the first named department," striking out the word "two."

MINING SCHOOL.

Mr. FRIZELL. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, to differ with the Committee on Education, which has recommended the passage of this section, and with those who are amending it. But, sir, I know of no great school, or college, within the limits of the United States, where the science of mining is especially taught; and if there is any locality in the United States, in which a college of that kind could grow up to great importance, it is here, at the foot of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in this Territory. And what I dissent from, and wholly disagree to in this section, is the preference proposed to be given to agricultural science and mechanics, and even to military tactics, according to the amendment just adopted, over the science of mining.

The CHAIRMAN. I will suggest one consideration to the gentleman, right here, and that is, that this provision is directly in pursuance of the Act of Congress, which requires this fund to be specially devoted to those objects, and unless such provision is made the State will not be entitled to the benefit of the Act of Congress.

Mr. FRIZELL. I see the difficulty which arises, and I am glad to be corrected. If that is the case, I suppose no other course can be pursued than that which the committee has adopted.

Mr. COLLINS. Is mining anywhere mentioned in that Act of Congress?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir. But it is contemplated in this article, as I understand, only to have a mining department. The question now is on the amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) to strike out the word "two."

Mr. CHAPIN. I am sorry to detain the committee for one moment, but I would like to understand a little better this matter of confining the expenditures to these two objects. That, it seems to me, just defeats the section. I know that in the former Convention there was a deep interest felt in having a mining school provided for, and I know I had the honor to present the subject to that Convention myself. And one of the sections, as adopted by the Convention, and incorporated into the section now under consideration, provides as follows:

"The Board of Regents shall, from the interest accruing from the first funds which come under their control, immediately organize and maintain the said mining department, in such manner as to make it the most effective and useful."

But it appears to me that all that is rendered nugatory by this subsequent proviso.

Mr. COLLINS. This proviso was made in exact conformity with the Act of Congress, requiring the proceeds derived from this particular donation to be set apart exclusively for the specific purposes named in the Act—that is, for teaching the science of agriculture, and the mechanic arts, and military tactics. But I will suggest to my colleague, that the proviso does not include the five hundred thousand acres granted for internal improvements, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of school lands in each township, and all the other sources of revenue, or advantages belonging to the school fund. The proceeds of the ninety thousand acres which we receive under the Act of 1852, and which we cannot receive or enjoy on any other conditions, we devote exclusively to these objects, conforming strictly to the letter and spirit of the law of Congress, but the proviso touches no other fund.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have a recollection of the object or intention which the former convention had in view at the time of framing this portion of the Constitution. The object was to comply strictly with the Act of Congress of 1852, but at the same time, in consequence of the peculiar condition of our State or Territory, and the necessity existing here for more thorough education and information in regard to mining pursuits, the Convention sought to provide for a mining school, or rather a mining department, in addition. The design was that the mining school should be a distinct department of that college which was contemplated by the Act of Congress, but in no manner conflicting with the requirements of that Act, the intention being simply to provide for the necessities of our people, who would derive great benefit from a thorough knowledge of the science of mining operations.

Mr. CHAPIN. I believe the gentleman has stated the views of the former Convention correctly.

Mr. COLLINS. If I may be allowed to say a word farther, I wish to state that I think no one is more interested than I am in the subject of a mining school, and I fully believe that in this Territory a school of that kind, properly located and well conducted, would challenge the attention of people in other States, and be of immense advantage to our mining localities. It would save millions of dollars annually to the people of this Territory to have a good school in which the young, growing up in our midst, could be properly educated, and thoroughly inducted into a practical knowledge of the different branches of mining; how to locate and construct shafts and tunnels; the best mode of timbering a mine; the most advantageous process of reducing the various kinds of ores, and so on. Such a school would soon create a demand for our young men in every mining region, where they would be called upon to superintend mining operations.

Friday,]

STURTEVANT—DUNNE—WARWICK—BANKS—HAWLEY.

[July 22.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I hope the gentleman will bear in mind that the mines are not to be taxed for the support of that school.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment proposed by Mr. Brosnan, to strike out the word "two," and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section, as amended, and it was adopted.

THE SPECIAL TAX—AGAIN.

Mr. DUNNE. I believe we have now passed through the whole article, and I move a reconsideration of the action of the committee by which the word "shall," and the proviso in regard to a special tax were stricken out of Section 6.

Mr. WARWICK. I will ask the gentleman if he voted in the affirmative on those questions.

Mr. BANKS. I voted in the affirmative, and I will make the motion to reconsider.

[Mr. COLLINS in the chair.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I most sincerely trust that the reconsideration will prevail, and that we shall make it mandatory on the Legislature to provide this special tax. I have read carefully the last published report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of California, the thirteenth Annual Report, and he lays particular stress upon the difficulty with which the Legislature of California has been prevailed upon to make sufficient appropriations for educational purposes. And at this very day, petitions are in circulation, and have been for some time past, throughout the whole of the State of California, for the purpose of receiving signatures praying the Legislature to impose upon the whole of the taxable property of that State, a tax of five mills on the dollar for educational purposes, instead of one-half of one mill, as we propose in this section. Now if the State of California can afford to pay a tax of five mills, I think the State of Nevada can certainly afford to pay one-half of one mill; and this Convention, taking into consideration its solemn duty towards the rising generation, should at least make it mandatory on the Legislature to impose a tax of that amount.

Time will not permit, nor is it necessary that I should recapitulate the arguments which have already been urged to show that among the first and the highest duties of the State, is the duty of educating the rising generation. Nobody will dispute that proposition, and I submit it to the good sense of the members of the Convention, with only the remark that they will reflect honor upon themselves and upon the new State, by making this provision mandatory, whereas if we shall leave it discretionary with the Legislature, which may be influenced by men in private life, or holding subordinate positions, to withhold the educational appropriations, or take only half-way measures from year to year, neglecting to do its whole duty, we shall be doing injustice to the rising generation, and a discredit to ourselves, if I may be permitted to use that remark in regard to the action of the Convention. Therefore I hope that the mandatory features of this section, as reported, will be allowed to remain unchanged.

Mr. DUNNE. The principal argument advanced in favor of striking out the mandatory language in this section was, that the Legislature would levy a tax, if necessary, without any question, and therefore it was not necessary to make the provision mandatory—that if the people of the United States, and of Nevada in particular, were firmly impressed with the necessity of any one thing in the general policy of government, it was the necessity of fostering and protecting the common school system. Now this State University is a departure from the general common school system, and it is exactly because it is such a departure that the Legislature may be unwilling to levy this tax, however necessary it may be. There is no doubt that the Legislature would readily levy a tax for the support of the common schools, but there has always been a great prejudice in the minds of many men against applying any portion of the public money to the establishment or maintenance of anything of the character of a college or university. Every possible argument has been advanced to defeat such appropriations, and devote the whole of the public funds to the common schools. Men would say, "Let us give the money to the education of the people, in their common schools, and allow those who want these new-fangled higher grades of learning to pay for such institutions themselves."

That is the reason why I think it may be sought to evade this tax, unless we make it mandatory. If it is left optional with the Legislature, then those who would evade at such a tax would have an opportunity to work upon the members, and influence them to prevent the levying of the tax by saying that the measure would be objectionable to the people, and they would gain popularity by opposing it. At the same time, if the subject were left to the people, I think it would pass without question. It is a small tax, of only five cents on each one hundred dollars, but it will go on silently growing and accumulating, without attracting much attention, until at the end of five or six years, perhaps without any one having sensibly felt it, a fund will have accumulated sufficient to establish the University, or at least to start it upon a substantial basis. After it shall once have been set going, I have no doubt that it will be an object of so much advantage to the State that all men will feel an interest, and take pride in it, and there will be no difficulty in regard to obtaining appropriations for it. The amount of the tax proposed is very small, being only one-tenth of what is now being asked for in California, and I sincerely hope that the reconsideration will prevail, and the section be allowed to stand as originally reported.

[Mr. CHAPIN in the chair.]

Mr. COLLINS. One reason why I would urge the propriety of the reconsideration, and letting the provision stand just as it did in the Constitution adopted last year, is, that we are operating under the law of Congress, ceding or donating these ninety thousand acres for an Agricultural College, and by the terms of that act our mining department cannot receive or enjoy the advantages of that donation; but the fund derived therefrom must be set aside for certain specified objects. Now I ask where are we going to acquire the funds for our mining department? The only fund that we can have is that which will accumulate from year to year from this tax. That is what we must rely upon to supply and sustain this important department from which we hope to derive such great benefits and advantages in the future. I want the action of the Convention reconsidered, because I feel the absolute importance of the matter. We are situated here, far removed from the great seats of learning in the Atlantic States, and unless we make provision at an early day, by which the rising generation of our youths, soon to grow up and develop into manhood, can receive the advantages of education at our own hands, we shall be obliged to spend fifty times the amount that this contemplated institution would cost us, to educate our children at arms' length. It will be the greatest economy we can adopt to devise means and mature plans by which children can be educated in our midst, so that they may have an education corresponding with surrounding life; and in these departments of our State University we shall be able to provide the means by which they can acquire maintenance and good standing, and secure their own advancement.

While we are engaged in laying the foundations of a great and mighty State, do not let us be niggardly in such a matter, and by want of a comprehensive foresight on our part, in regard to the great wants of the future, force children to leave the State to acquire education. More than that, by such a course we discourage the immigration of that most valuable class which regards education as the very foundation of the State. We say to them—"Do not come here with your half-grown up boys, to dwell among, and unite your fortunes with us, because if you do, in a few years you will have to send your boys to the Atlantic States, or over the Sierras to California, to acquire an education, which we engaged here to-day in laying the foundations of a great State, are unwilling to provide for, by requiring the small tax of a half a mill on the dollar to be levied on the taxable property of the State." I trust that those gentlemen who voted for the amendment will look at the consequences, and vote for the reconsideration.

Mr. BANKS. I really hope that this amendment will be reconsidered. Many men feel that education is something that can be done without, or delayed for a time. Private interests may be in the way, or the times may be dull, and in the Legislature men will agree that for that particular year they will make the taxes light by omitting this tax, hoping, perhaps, that the subject will be attended to the next year, when the times shall be better; and thus the matter will be postponed and neglected from year to year. That is the way it has been in California, and in other States in the Union. The cause of education has been thrust aside for other interests. I hope that no gentleman will vote finally on this subject without first considering that the real issue is this: Shall we, or shall we not, have established here a permanent educational institution, which is indispensably necessary for the permanent prosperity and for the credit of our proposed State?

Mr. BROSNAN. I will merely add a word. The Legislature shall establish the institution—we have determined upon that. Now, if gentlemen are afraid to say that the Legislature shall make this provision, and divide the fund between the University and the common schools; if they think it is too much, and that the funds are ample without a special tax, then I submit that they are not acting prudently about it, unless they reconsider, because they say the Legislature will do this thing—that we need not adopt this provision, because the Legislature is abundantly able without it—and if that is the case, the Legislature may see fit to make the tax even larger than we intend. Therefore, I say that on the ground of caution they should vote to reconsider, because here is a tax provided for which cannot prove to be burdensome.

Mr. FRIZELL. I hope the vote will be reconsidered. I am willing to concede to the opinions of the array of able and good men who are in favor of the reconsideration, and to adopt the reasons which have been assigned by them. The present occupant of the chair (Mr. Chapin) will bear me witness that from the beginning I have been willing to leave anything doubtful or difficult which has arisen from time to time to the Legislature, but yielding to the arguments of good men, whom I know to have the cause of education at heart, I am willing to reconsider.

Mr. NOURSE. I am rather inclined to oppose the motion to reconsider. If the section as proposed by the committee agrees with the section as printed in the old Constitution, and I believe it does substantially, then this tax is a matter to be divided between the University and the common schools, and I am opposed to raising money by a State tax for the support of the common schools, for the reason that, as all experience shows, money to be expended economically, and to the best advantage, should be raised in such a manner as to be brought close home to all the people who are to expend it. If the people have to tax themselves for the money they expend, they will take better care of it than they will of the money which they receive from land grants, or otherwise. I have been led to believe, for this reason, that the better policy is to provide that the neighborhood which raises the money shall expend it.

Then comes this question of the college. Sir, I do not anticipate as much advantage from a State College as other gentlemen seem to. It is true that we appear to have peculiar facilities here for a mining college—more probably than in any other place in the world—and if everything here proposed was going to that, I would be strongly in favor of it. But when we come to speak about establishing a college in general, in which the ordinary branches of a collegiate education are taught, I must say, while I would be very glad to see it prosper, that I have but little faith in it. It is too easy to reach other regions, where grass grows, to be trodden under the feet of the pupils, and trees to wave over their heads, and where they do not have to drink in alkali, like the bitter waters of Marah. I do not think, therefore, that a college here would be likely to flourish much. Still, I would like to establish and encourage a mining department, and I think the establishment of such a department is essential, and would be of great advantage to the State, and no doubt it would be well patronized. If the money proposed to be raised by this tax were to go to the mining department exclusively, and not, as I understand it is, to the care of the same men who have charge of the funds for the agricultural department, for which I think this Territory is no proper place, I should be glad to vote for the tax.

Mr. WARWICK. As our time is getting very short, believing that this subject has been fully ventilated, I call for the question.

The question was taken on the motion to reconsider, and it was agreed to.

THE TAX FOR COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. NOURSE. I now move to amend Section 6 by striking out the words "and common schools." I understand that the common schools are otherwise abundantly supplied, getting the advantage of all the land grants, and so on. I make the motion mainly for the sake of hearing how they are provided for.

Mr. HAWLEY. Until within the past year the manner in which the school fund was obtained from taxes, has been by the payment of all the taxes assessed in each county, including the tax for school purposes, from which the Territory received its share, and when the Territory had received such share, each county drew its proportion of the school money. That law was repealed at the last session of the Legislature, and now each county levies its own tax for a school fund. Douglas County has this year a school tax of fifteen cents on each one hundred dollars. Now we propose to levy this special State tax, because we think the people may not for some time obtain any benefit or advantage from the school fund derived from the sale of lands set apart for that fund. In addition to that, we expect that each county will levy a tax sufficient for its own local institutions, and if that is not sufficient to support the common schools, a portion of this State tax of one-half of one mill on the dollar may be appropriated. We expect, moreover, that there will be a balance left which will go towards creating a sinking fund for the benefit of the University, and we do not wish to go along with that at any snail's pace. While we do not desire to impose an onerous tax, which would cause the people to cry out under the burden, yet we do propose to make such provisions as will secure to the State such an institution as is best fitted to prepare its pupils for the duties of life.

Mr. WARWICK. Is it contemplated to set apart any portion of the tax for the purposes of the University?

Mr. HAWLEY. The section provides that the tax shall be levied "for the support and maintenance of said University and common schools."

Mr. WARWICK. Exactly. But that University being in the future, and the schools in the present, would it not be better, I suggest, to set aside some portion of it specially for the purposes of the University?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think so. I have already expressed my views on that subject. The first duty of the State, in my opinion, is to support the common schools, and if the fund for that purpose is not sufficient, as a consequence, persons interested will have to contribute to make up the deficiency, as they do at the present time. But if, on the other hand, there shall be more than is necessary, then we leave it discretionary with the Legislature to set apart such surplus as may remain, for the purpose of an endowment of the University. That is the system which we propose to inaugurate.

Mr. WARWICK. As the gentleman from Douglas is School Superintendent of his own county, he must be aware that the wants of any school district are only circumscribed by its means. For instance, a very plain school-house, and the commonest desks, will suffice, as long as the district is so circumscribed as to be unable to afford anything better; but if its means are increased, it must have a better school-house, and more elegant desks, and a larger number and better class of teachers. I admit that these things improve the schools very much, and are desirable, but unless we provide for specially setting apart a small portion of the tax to that object, we shall have no fund at all for the University.

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to say that that is left discretionary with the Legislature. The committee did not propose to legislate as to what disposition shall be made of every dime.

Mr. WARWICK. Then I understand that the Legislature has discretionary power to make such use of the fund as it may see fit.

Friday.]

COLLINS—WARWICK—NOURSE—DUNNE.

[July 22.]

Mr. COLLINS. I have faith to believe that the Legislature, having the fund in its care, will be disposed to use it to the best possible advantage. Our worthy chairman (Mr Chapin) has suggested that the words "mining department" be substituted for "common schools," proposing to have it read—"for the support and maintenance of said University and mining department thereof." That might, perhaps, devote this fund more directly and exclusively to the use of the mining department; but I am willing to leave the whole matter open to the Legislature, allowing that body, at any and all times, to be governed by the exigencies of the case. If the common schools are languishing, and there are no other funds to sustain them, of course they should not be permitted to suffer for the benefit of the University. They should receive the first care of the State, and next after them the University, and such branches thereof as the Legislature shall conceive to be most important for immediate development. I prefer to leave it all to the Legislature.

Mr. WARWICK. I attach great importance to the mining department clause in the provision for the establishment of this academy, college, or whatever it may be called, for the reason that I am satisfied there is more in it than gentlemen suppose, who have not examined the subject. I had occasion to investigate it to some extent while I was in California. There is a little college at a place in Europe named Freyburg, one department of which is devoted to the exclusive study of the subject of mines and mining; and that little college now has its students distributed in all parts of the world, wherever mining pursuits are carried on, and their services are in great request. And inasmuch as there is no portion of the world where there are such advantages for a school of that character as in Nevada, I imagine that it would be a paying institution and an honor to the State, and therefore I would like to see it encouraged in its infancy. I have no question but that it will be successful after it has once been fairly started.

Mr. NOURSE. I would like to modify my motion, because I do not wish to be placed in the position of an opponent of the common schools, when there is no one a more ardent friend than I am of our common school system. But I find that everything else is provided for, except this poor lone mining department, which really seems to be the most important of all, and therefore I propose to devote to that this half-mill tax, which I think will be none too large for the object. I propose to withdraw my former amendment, and, instead, to amend that portion of the section so as to read—"for the support and maintenance of the mining department of said University." It seems to me that is the only interest which is not already provided for, and it is the most important one.

The question was stated on Mr. Nourse's amendment as modified.

Mr. DUNNE. I prefer to leave the section as it is, and I differ with the mover of the amendment now pending, in the proposition which he advanced a short time ago, namely: that it was not, in his opinion, right policy to levy a State tax for the support of the common schools. In his able argument he stated as his reason, that he thought a school fund would be most effective, or that the most good would result from it, if it were to be raised from the immediate vicinity in which it is to be applied. But, sir, I think, in a country like the proposed State of Nevada, there is something due to those living in the outside portions of the country. When people go to those outermost regions, becoming the pioneers of civilization, enduring the hardships inseparable from a life in such a country, taking their families there, and endeavoring to build it up, I believe that some little consideration is due to them, and for that reason I say that a general school tax should be imposed, and the money derived therefrom divided all over the State in proportion to the number of the children in each locality. And the reason for it, in my mind, is this: that the more populous portions of the State ought to contribute somewhat towards the support of education in the outside places.

Now I represent, in part, what might be considered an outside place, and perhaps it may be said that I am open to the charge of being interested; but I explain my position in this way: That such a system works no injustice to the parents of children living in the populous counties, because they draw the same amount of money in proportion to the number of their children that is distributed to the children living in those outskirts of civilization; and the application of the rule is simply that the large capitalists of the metropolis, who have no children, and therefore derive no benefit to their families, or individually, pay their proportion for the education of the children of the whole State. What the capitalist pays goes to the general fund, and is thence distributed, and it works for the interest and advantage of the largely populated communities also, for the reason that they draw from the fund in proportion to the number of children they have, and hence they suffer no injustice. And it works no injury to the capitalist, because under the theory of our government he should be made to pay for the protection of his property, and I suppose it will not be disputed that there are no better means of affording such protection than the support of good common schools. Therefore he cannot complain—or if he does we should pay no attention to his complaints, but continue to levy a small tax upon his wealth, for the support and encouragement of public instruction.

For the reasons which I have stated, I should like to see the section left as it is, so as to permit this fund to remain in the treasury, to be divided among the educational institutions of the State, then leaving its particular disposition to the Legislature. If, upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, the Legislature is willing to devote a portion of it to the mining department of the State University, let it be done; and if the Legislature deem that the public interest will be better subserved by devoting one-half, or a greater portion of it, to the common schools at large, let that be done. It is a question which depends upon the condition of things from year to year, and therefore we cannot now determine upon it, but should leave it to the Legislature to decide, from year to year, as the necessity of the case occurs.

And now I call attention to the necessity of adopting something here that shall be obligatory upon the Legislature. I want to make it positively mandatory upon that body. It is not necessary, however, to pursue that point further than to call attention to it. Besides, my time has expired, and I can appreciate the fact that this body is sick and tired of this protracted discussion.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I think the best way is to levy a direct tax on the mines for the support of this mining school, and I will suggest that the section be referred to a select committee of three, with instructions to amend so as to levy a direct tax on the mines.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Nourse, providing that the special tax shall be levied "for the support and maintenance of the mining department of said University," and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of Section 6, as reported by the Committee on Education, and it was adopted.

The question was next taken on the adoption of the entire article, as amended, and it was adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the committee rise, and report the Article on Education back to the Convention, with the amendments which have been adopted, and recommend its passage.

Mr. CROSMAN. I think we had better go forward with the other work before the committee.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I think there is no more business to come before the committee in its regular order.

The question was taken on Mr. Hawley's motion, and it was agreed to, and the committee accordingly rose.

IN CONVENTION.

The SECRETARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XII, entitled Education, had made some amendments thereto, in which they had instructed him to ask the concurrence of the Convention, and recommended the passage of the article as amended.

The report was accepted, the several amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole were agreed to, and the article as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. DUNNE. In order to get the article befor the Enrolling Committee, I will move that it be considered engrossed, and put upon its final passage at this time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope that will not be done. There have been several amendments made, and the article should be engrossed. I will say further, that the Enrolling Committee have already enough work before them for the present.

Mr. DUNNE. Then I will withdraw the motion.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—SALARIES.

On motion of Mr. KENNEDY, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the President pro tem., Mr. CHAPIN, remaining in the chair,) for the consideration of Article XI, entitled Salaries and Appropriations.

Section 1 was read, as follows:

SECTION 1. For the first term of office succeeding the formation of a State Government, the salary of the Governor shall not exceed four thousand dollars per annum; the salary of the Secretary of State shall not exceed three thousand six hundred dollars per annum; the salary of the State Controller shall not exceed three thousand six hundred dollars per annum; the salary of the State Treasurer shall not exceed three thousand six hundred dollars per annum; the salary of the Surveyor-General shall not exceed one thousand dollars per annum; the salary of the Attorney-General shall not exceed two thousand five hundred dollars per annum; the salary of the Superintendent of Public Instruction shall not exceed two thousand dollars per annum; the salary of each Judge of the Supreme Court shall not exceed seven thousand dollars per annum. The salaries of the foregoing officers shall be paid quarterly. The pay of State Senators, and members of the Assembly, shall not exceed the sum of six dollars for each day of actual service, and forty cents per mile for mileage, going and returning. No officer mentioned in this section shall receive any fees or perquisites to his own use for the performance of any duty connected with his office, or for the performance of any additional duty imposed upon him by law.

Mr. DUNNE. I call for a division of the question, in order that the blanks to be filled according to the report may each be voted upon separately.

The SECRETARY stated (by leave of the Convention) that in accordance with the action of the Convention, accepting the report of the Committee on Schedule, he had filled the blanks in the original section, so that it now stood as a complete section.

INELIGIBILITY OF MEMBERS.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I have an amendment to offer. I move to amend the section by adding the following proviso:

"Provided, That no member of this Convention shall be eligible to any office—Executive, Legislative, or Judicial—for two years from the time this Constitution is adopted."

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend by adding—"Except the gentleman from Washoe, Mr. Sturtevant." [Laughter.]

Mr. STURTEVANT. I am not an office-seeker.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order. The question will be divided as requested by the gentleman from Humboldt, and the first question is on inserting four thousand dollars as the salary of the Governor.

Mr. HAWLEY. What do I understand the Chairman to say has become of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washoe?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been ruled out of order.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I offered it in good faith, and I shall most assuredly have to appeal from the decision of the Chair. I would like to know what authority there is for ruling that amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is ruled out of order, but the present occupant of the chair will not undertake to give any explanations. [Laughter.]

Mr. STURTEVANT. Well, then I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was taken—"Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?"—and decided in the affirmative. So the decision was sustained.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to explain my vote. With all deference to the Chair, I will say that I considered the amendment entirely in order, and hence I voted "no."

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE.

The first clause of Section I was read, as follows:

"For the first term of office succeeding the formation of a State Government, the salary of the Governor shall not exceed four thousand dollars per annum."

The question was taken on the adoption of the clause as read, and it was agreed to.

SALARY OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

The SECRETARY read the next clause, as follows:

"The salary of the Secretary of State shall not exceed three thousand six hundred dollars per annum."

Mr. HOVEY. I move to amend by striking out "six hundred," so as to leave the salary three thousand dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope that amendment will not prevail. I do not care particularly about the difference in the amount proposed, except that it will perhaps make a material difference in the character and ability of the class of men who will be selected for State officers. The gentleman is a very earnest friend of the proposed State Government, but I do not suppose he wants incompetent men chosen for State officers, so as to make it a failure in the outset; and I would like to learn where he will find the competent man who would take this position at the salary specified in his amendment.

Mr. HOVEY. I will withdraw the amendment as to the Secretary.

QUALIFICATIONS OF STATE OFFICERS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think I may be permitted to say that I have some knowledge of the duties connected with the offices of Secretary of State, Treasurer, and Controller, and I regard their duties and responsibilities as about equalized. It is necessary that the Secretary of State should be a man of reputable character and standing—of ability and probity—although it is true that the material duties of the office are generally performed by subordinates. The duties of Controller require a man possessing—I would say, if our mathematical friend from Storey (Mr. Ball) were here—a financial head. He must, at least, be a man familiar with finance, able to understand the financial questions involved in questions of taxation and revenue, and must have capacity to present an intelligent exhibit of those matters, and generally to manage the financial affairs of the State Government.

In regard to the Treasurer, he is required to possess not so much of ability, perhaps, but he must be a man of undoubted integrity. If we are to have a State Government, and collect anything under our revenue laws, there will be a vast responsibility resting upon the Treasurer, whilst the mere labor devolving upon him will not be very great, in comparison to the other officers mentioned. Therefore, my impression is, that the labors and responsibilities of these officers are about equalized, and I do not think we can find a man whom you, Mr. Chairman, or I, or the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Hovey) who has suggested this amendment, would like to see supplying either one of these offices, who would be willing to accept it for a less salary than that specified in the section as it now stands. I think that is enough, and any less amount would be wholly inadequate.

The CHAIRMAN. There are to be no perquisites—none whatever. This salary is to constitute the whole compensation.

Mr. COLLINS. It embraces the fees of office, I understand, but how is it as to the et cetera—clerk hire, and so on?

Mr. JOHNSON. The duty devolves upon the Legislature to make such appropriations for those matters as it may judge to be proper. My impression is that the Secretary of State will require two clerks and the Controller one. I think that would be amply sufficient, and it may be, they can manage with even a less number. Very likely for the first year one clerk would suffice for each. As to perquisites, there possibly may be some "stealings," to use a very common term, but the Constitution, as we have adopted it thus far, certainly does not cut off everything of that character. Clerk hire is a necessary expense, and the Legislature will be called upon to provide whatever of such expense may be necessary, it alone determining what is needful. The business in the office of Secretary of State may increase to such an extent as to demand more clerical force than we can now anticipate, but in that case the fees will increase proportionately, so that the State will really be the gainer. And I will explain that. Gentlemen know this fact, or if they do not I can inform them, that at the present time there are very considerable emoluments belonging to the office of Secretary of the Territory. I do not fix the amount, nor would I state it as high, perhaps, as is generally supposed, but there is a very considerable amount of fees paid into the office of the Secretary of the Territory—fees for copying, for filing articles of incorporation, for furnishing certified copies of laws, and the like. Perhaps there may be twenty different instances of acts of an official character, where the fees go directly to the Secretary of the Territory. But under the Constitution which we propose to adopt not a dollar of those fees would be collected for the use of the Secretary of State—not one dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time, under the rule, has expired.

Mr. NOURSE. I think the particular salary under consideration is well enough, but I shall not vote against any proposition to decrease that as well as the others, if we make an allowance for fees; and at the proper time I shall move to strike out the proviso which prohibits these officers from receiving fees, in cases where they have certain duties to perform, because if I go to an officer and want to have something done, like filling out a commission, or making a copy of a record, or transcript, I do not want to feel that I am taking half a day of his time without paying him for it. I want to be allowed to give him a fair compensation for his service, and I think other people would feel the same way. We may guard against making any claim upon the State for such extra service, and the Legislature can pass such a law as will be just and reasonable, in respect to the amount of the fees, but I do not want to make such a provision as will prevent the payment of any fees. Take, for instance, the office of Surveyor General.

Mr. DUNNE. Allow me to suggest that the language of the section is that no officer "shall receive any fees or perquisites, to his own use."

Mr. NOURSE. Well, I would not feel any better about it, if the fee was to do him no good. The Surveyor General may be called upon to make a survey to be used as evidence in a Court of Justice. He makes his surveys in his official character, as Surveyor General, and only gets his salary of one thousand dollars a year, yet he may be called upon to go all over the Territory to make such surveys. It is certainly a duty connected with his office, and yet, although it may be very laborious, and involve considerable expense, he cannot under that proviso receive any fees or perquisites to his own use. I believe I shall vote for the salaries as they are, but not because I would regard them as sufficient for the services of every character which may be rendered. I believe the laborer is worthy of his hire, and while I think the Legislature should regulate the fees of office so as to be no larger than they now are, I shall certainly oppose the proposition to cut them off entirely so that the officers cannot be paid for services of that nature.

Mr. COLLINS. I like to know, when I am about to vote, whether upon this question or any other, exactly what I am voting for. Now I am opposed to dignifying men with office, and giving them adequate salaries, and then legislating to pay somebody else for doing what they ought to do themselves. I think that system has been, to use a popular expression, "run into the ground." I can see no reason why the Controller should want a clerk for more than one month in the entire year, and no reason why the Treasurer should want a clerk at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. With all respect to the gentleman from Storey, I do not think he has much practical understanding about the duties of those offices.

Mr. COLLINS. I have more confidence in my own general intelligence than the gentleman from Ormsby appears to entertain. I think I do know something about those offices, and I would like to have the gentleman from Ormsby, or any other man, tell me why the Controller needs a clerk, more than a few days, during the session of the Legislature, and what necessity there is at any time for a clerk for the Treasurer. I would like to have him show me why, with our present population, and the small amount of business there is in this Territory, it is necessary to give the Secretary of State a clerk, when he can perform the entire labor of the office himself. I have no hesitation about paying any officer for his labor, but I am opposed to paying him, and then employing others to do his work for him.

Mr. JOHNSON. The best evidence afforded us upon the point in regard to which the gentleman from Storey seeks information, is the fact that the present Secretary of the Territory has from two to four clerks constantly employed, and paid by himself. That is to me conclusive evidence that the public service requires as many as two clerks in that particular office. Mr. Clemens has had employed four clerks, and has two at the present time, paying their salaries himself, and he also labors efficiently, himself, many hours of the day.

Mr. COLLINS. It matters not to me how many he employs, under the present system. I would like to have any member point out to me, under the Constitution which we propose here to adopt, the duties that will require the constant labor even of the Secretary himself. And I say if we elect a man as Secretary and he accepts the office, he is bound to devote his entire labor to that office. Yet it is suggested by the gentleman that he be allowed two clerks besides. I am willing to vote to the Governor, to the Secretary of State, to the Controller, and to the Treasurer, each, a generous salary; but I want to know, when I vote it, whether the Legislature is going to be teased and lobbied.

and lobbied and teased, perpetually, for house rent, for office rent, for clerks that may have had an existence, and for clerks that may have had no existence. I want to know something about these matters before I vote for liberal salaries. The question before us is, Can we have a State Government? The times are pinchingly hard upon us. If we can show that for four years to come we can have a State Government which shall be cheap and well conducted, then there are thousands of men who will vote for it, who otherwise will not. If we shall leave it open and indefinite, so that our expenditures may either be run up to three hundred thousand dollars a year, or be brought down to seventy-five thousand, people will be greatly alarmed, and will instinctively grasp at the larger sum, and look with incredulity and contempt upon the smaller, and the consequence will be that we shall have no State Government. I say, let us look this question fairly and squarely in the face. Let us fix these salaries, and all other expenditures, as nearly just as possible now, and do not let us leave such matters open to the Legislature, to be increased indefinitely.

Mr. WARWICK. It seems to me that in political matters, as in everything else, too great a striving for economy is generally likely to prove the most expensive policy in the end, and I believe in the policy of paying a competent man all he is worth, rather than paying an incompetent man anything. And in order to secure competent men we must pay a competent price for their services. Any gentleman here who attended the lecture delivered the other night, I think will remember one thing which the lecturer impressed upon his audience, and that was, that when men want reliable information upon a subject of importance they do not stand upon the cost. That is undoubtedly the true policy. We are not in a condition to be extravagant, but I insist that the greatest economy, whether in the affairs of a State or in private business, is to pay a competent man all he is worth for the services he renders, and then you may be sure of securing efficient service. There is not a business man, or a firm, in the whole community, that would not rather pay a competent man a good round sum, for his services as clerk, book-keeper, or foreman, for instance, than pay an incompetent man anything. Now can we draw a competent man, a merchant or a lawyer, away from his own business, and get him to give his entire services to the State, for a single term of office, by paying him a sum of money less than he can make at his own business. We propose to call upon men to stand at the head of our Government, to carry it on, to manage its affairs, to control its money matters; we desire to select men for their probity, their honesty and ability; and I say the greatest economy will be found in paying them perhaps five or six thousand dollars a year, so as to enable them to live like gentlemen, rather than in screwing them down to a pitiful salary of three or four thousand dollars a year. By small salaries the State holds out inducements to men to become dishonest. That is a fact which is recognized by all business men, throughout the United States, and all over the world. I do not desire to consume the time, but I hope the Convention will adopt the policy of paying fair salaries for the services of good men.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to remind gentlemen that the salaries are fixed by this section only for the first term of office. After that, the Legislature can increase them, if it is deemed desirable.

Mr. FRIZELL. As to competency, I have no doubt that there are a great many men in this Territory perfectly competent to fill any of these offices, who would be willing to take them at the prices now specified. Another thing, when a man is elected he has a great many "blushing honors thick upon him," and inasmuch as these salaries are fixed only for two years, I think he should consider them satisfactory, and they will certainly be economical.

Mr. BANKS. Some gentlemen have referred to the knowledge which I know they possess in regard to this matter, and I am going to do the very same thing. I know this to be a fact, that in California a man has been elected to the office of Secretary of State who never knew, or pretended to know, anything about the duties of the office, and those duties have been performed under him by a man who had been deemed competent to preside over a high court of justice. And I will say further, that he performed the duties very efficiently and acceptably, and did so, I believe, for only two hundred dollars per month.

Mr. WARWICK. I suppose the gentleman refers to Judge Tuttle.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARWICK. I understand he received three hundred dollars a month.

Mr. BANKS. Very well; at any rate he was not the Secretary of State. And so it has been in other State offices. In San Francisco, too, while the office of County Clerk was held by a man who was receiving something like fifty thousand dollars a year—

Mr. BROSNAN. Ninety thousand.

Mr. BANKS. I wished to be moderate about it, and keep entirely within bounds, and hence I put it at the lowest possible amount. That officer never knew anything about the duties, and they were performed by a head clerk, who received a very moderate salary. Eventually, however, the compensation was reduced to four thousand dollars, and the County Clerk was required to perform the duties himself, taking the place of the head clerk. Now which course of policy shall we pursue? That of appointing men to office who can perform the duties efficiently, and requiring them to perform those duties, or that of creating offices, and selecting men to fill them whose only qualifications are, perhaps, that they can deport themselves in a dignified manner, and then giving them clerks to perform the duties for them?

Mr. WARWICK. I move to fill the blank so as to make the salary of the Secretary of State four thousand dollars.

Mr. WETHERILL. Let us fix it so as to afford him a fair compensation, and then I am willing to give fees to his deputies—say for three months in the year.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I would like to see the amendment adopted which the gentleman from Lander has offered, for one simple reason; and that is, I cannot maintain my family here—I do not know how it may be with other gentlemen—on any less amount than that named in his amendment.

Mr. DUNNE. I rise to a point of order. The committee reported merely filling the blanks, and their report has not yet been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The report of the committee was agreed to.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Warwick, to fix the salary of the Secretary of State at four thousand dollars, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNE. Now I understand the Chairman that the report of the committee has been adopted filling all these blanks, and therefore nothing is in order, except such amendments as may be offered. It seems to me there is no necessity for any division of the question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand the question to be this: We have before us a report of a committee recommending the filling of certain blanks in the section with certain specified amounts. The gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Dunne) calls for a division of the question, and the vote is thereupon taken separately upon filling each blank. The recommendation to fill the blank for the salary of the Governor with four thousand dollars has been adopted, and the question now being on filling the succeeding blank, as the salary of the Secretary of State, with three thousand six hundred dollars, it is competent to move to amend by naming a different sum. If the report had been adopted, I would consider a motion as out of order to strike out and insert, for the reason that the question would be one which had already been passed upon. The motion of the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) being negatived, the question now properly occurs on filling the blank with the sum recommended by the committee.

Mr. DUNNE. So I understood it, but the Chairman has ruled that the report of the committee was adopted, and the blanks all filled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now decide that the committee may take the course indicated by the gentleman from Ormsby, the President, and act upon each clause separately. Then gentlemen may amend the section as they please. The question now is on filling the blank for the salary of the Secretary of State with three thousand six hundred dollars.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

CONTROLLER'S SALARY.

The SECRETARY read the next clause, as follows:

“The salary of the State Controller shall not exceed three thousand six hundred dollars per annum.”

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand the Chair to decide that the report in the aggregate was not adopted, but, on the contrary, that the vote should be taken separately, as recommended by the committee, on each distinct clause of the section.

Mr. DUNNE. If that is the case, then in filling the blanks, under the rules, the smallest sum must be put first.

Mr. BANKS. My colleague is mistaken. Under Jefferson's Manual, by which we are governed, the largest sum must be put first.

Mr. STURTEVANT. The gentleman will find that rule on page 70 of the Manual, requiring the largest sum to be first put to the question, and the rule is referred to in a note—that the largest sum and the longest time shall be put first.

Mr. COLLINS. I confess that my mind is a little muddled as to the question before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee desire to spend time in the discussion of questions of this character, the Chair cannot prevent it; but there is no question before the committee, except the adoption of this clause.

Mr. COLLINS. I want to vote intelligently, and I have a right to know what I am voting upon. Therefore, I have a right to make an inquiry, and I think it is the duty of the Chair to answer my inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will propound his inquiry.

Mr. COLLINS. I understand that this report was accepted in the Convention as a whole. Now we are in Committee of the Whole, and we take up this report, and upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) we take up and consider these several clauses, one by one. There are no blanks in fact, the blanks having been filled by the committee, and their report accepted by the Convention before the article was referred to us. The question was first on the clause fixing the salary of the Governor, and it was adopted; then on the clause fixing the salary of the Secretary of State, which was also adopted—an important motion to amend by striking out, with a view to filling up with another figure, having been lost; and now the question is on the salary of the Controller, which is next in order. As I understand it, there is no blank there, but the question before the committee is on the adoption of that portion of the section as reported, providing for a salary of three thousand six hundred dollars for the Controller. Am I right?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Friday.]

COLLINS—KENNEDY—JOHNSON—BANKS.

[July 22.]

Mr. COLLINS. Now that I understand what I am voting upon, I am satisfied.

The question was taken on the adoption of the clause limiting the salary of the Controller at three thousand six hundred dollars, and it was agreed to.

SALARY OF TREASURER.

The next clause was read, as follows :

"The salary of the State Treasurer shall not exceed three thousand six hundred dollars per annum."

The question was taken, and the clause was agreed to.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL'S SALARY.

The next clause was read, as follows :

"The salary of the Surveyor-General shall not exceed one thousand dollars per annum."

The question was taken, and the clause was agreed to.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S SALARY.

The next clause was read, as follows :

"The salary of the Attorney-General shall not exceed two thousand five hundred dollars per annum."

The question was taken, and the clause was agreed to.

SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT'S SALARY.

The next clause was read, as follows :

"The salary of the Superintendent of Public Instruction shall not exceed two thousand dollars per annum."

The question was taken, and the clause was agreed to.

SALARY OF SUPREME JUDGES.

The next clause was read, as follows :

"The salary of each Judge of the Supreme Court shall not exceed seven thousand dollars per annum."

Mr. KENNEDY. Is that the language of the section all through?—"Shall not exceed?"

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. The Legislature can diminish it, but not increase it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not so understand it. My understanding of the intention of the section is, that it proposes to fix the compensation, in each case, for the first term, be it one, two, three, four, or five years. In my opinion, we should fix the compensation for the first incumbent, and the Legislature will then have no power to change it during such incumbent's term.

Mr. COLLINS. How many Supreme Judges does that provision contemplate?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not indicated, as yet.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to amend the section all the way through by striking out the words "shall not exceed," wherever they occur, and inserting instead the words "shall be."

Mr. COLLINS. I would like to know what benefit is to result from that?

Mr. BANKS. I, too, would like to know it.

Mr. COLLINS. As it is now, it leaves the Legislature the privilege of reducing the salary, if deemed expedient. We do not know but that four thousand dollars, two or three years hence, may really be equivalent to eight thousand now, because we cannot anticipate the future, and hence we should give the Legislature the privilege of reducing these salaries if necessary. I do not see what benefit is to result from fixing them arbitrarily, and so forcing the Legislature, let the stringency be what it may, to pay large salaries. The times may be such that competent men would be glad to serve for two thousand dollars per annum, and why should we tie up the hands of the Legislature, when we really do not know what the value of money is going to be a few years hence.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair first recognized the gentleman from Ormsby.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was going to say, what probably the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) would have expressed, had he obtained the floor, that every man on becoming an aspirant for office naturally and properly desires to know what his salary or compensation is to be, if he is successful; and it is but just that we should fix the salaries of all these offices for the first term, if for no other reason than that the power cannot otherwise exist, before they are elected. If the Legislature were to convene prior to the election of State officers, then it might be proper to leave it to fix these salaries, for then the various candidates for office would be informed as to what their compensation would be. But that is an impossibility. There is no plan of government which we can propose or arrange by which the Legislature would be enabled to define the compensation, before the election of State officers. Therefore this amendment explains that which before was left undefined, on the question of compensation. If we say it shall not exceed a certain amount, in any case, we leave it in the power of the Legislature following the election of the officers, if the choice made by the people is not satisfactory to a majority of the Legislature, to fix the salary at such a low standard as to compel the resignation of the incumbents.

Again, I desire that the public mind shall be instructed in this regard. I want the people to know what is to be the amount of the salary of our first State officers, and also that there can be no deviation from the amount so named. In this way, we not only instruct the public as to the expense of our State Government, but those who may become candidates also, by the adoption of this proviso that the salary shall not exceed, and at the same time shall not fall short of, a specified sum, and thus we afford protection on the one hand to the people, and on the other to the incumbent. I really can see no objection to this amendment, fixing for their respective terms of office, the salaries of those who are to be first elected.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Kennedy, and it was agreed to.

Friday,] STURTEVANT—BROSNAN—JOHNSON—COLLINS—KENNEDY—NOURSE—LOCKWOOD. [July 22.

The question was stated on adopting the clause previously read, fixing the salary of each of the Supreme Court Judges at seven thousand dollars.

Mr. STURTEVANT. How many are there to be?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not yet decided.

Mr. BROSNAN. The report of the Committee on the Judiciary fixes upon three as the number.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Committee agree on that?

Mr. BROSNAN. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. I dissent from the report respecting the number, and shall be in favor of five Supreme Court Judges.

Mr. COLLINS. I shall concur in that.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I suppose the term of office is not to be long, but this looks to me like a tremendous salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can move an amendment.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Well, I move to reduce it to four thousand dollars.

Mr. COLLINS. I would like to hear the gentleman's reasons.

Mr. STURTEVANT. One of my reasons is, that the Supreme Court is not likely to be in session in the aggregate more than six weeks in the year.

Mr. KENNEDY. What does the gentleman expect them to do for a livelihood, outside of their salaries.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Let them work, as I do.

Mr. COLLINS. Is the gentleman willing to permit or require the judges to enter into the business of mining, quartz milling, and all that kind of business, and speculation?

Mr. STURTEVANT. Certainly I am, if they desire to.

Mr. NOURSE. The gentleman says he cannot live here on less than four thousand dollars a year. I suppose a judge of the Supreme Court would naturally have to be at more expense than he, would he not?

Mr. STURTEVANT. I would like to know whether or not the Supreme Court Judges are to act as District Judges?

Mr. NOURSE. No; they are only to act as the Court of Appeal. They are of course debarred from the practice of the law. They cannot work at their profession, which is their only means of support, for a judge of a court cannot very well, when his term is done, go to work in the harvest field. That would be a good deal like having a minister of a church swinging flax in the pulpit while the choir is singing. [Merriment.] If this were an office for life, like that of a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, or that of the District Judges of the United States, it would only be necessary to provide for such a salary as would barely suffice to support a man handsomely, with perhaps a trifle beyond for contingencies; but when a man is elected for a term of only five or six years, he is expected to give up all his business, and then, after he has been out of business for that length of time, he is thrown out of office, or is liable to be, and has to begin his business anew. Under such circumstances it seems to me that something more than what will suffice for a bare living should be allowed him—something more than the four thousand dollars a year which the gentleman himself says is necessary for his own subsistence. Under all the circumstances it seems to me that seven thousand dollars is not at all extravagant, more especially when we consider the great probability that it will not be paid in gold at the time it is due, but will have to be taken in scrip. And what the chances are of that scrip being at par we can all judge pretty well. For my part I think it very possible that the seven thousand dollars will not be really worth in gold more than five thousand dollars.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I will withdraw my motion.

The question was taken on the adoption of the clause as read, and it was agreed to.

The next clause was read as follows:

"The salaries of the foregoing officers shall be paid quarterly."

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend by adding the words "out of the State Treasury."

The amendment was adopted by unanimous consent.

PAY OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The next clause was read, as follows:

"The pay of State Senators and members of the Assembly shall be six dollars for each day of actual service, and forty cents per mile for mileage, going and returning."

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I want to say a few words upon that. In Section 34 of Article IV, entitled Legislative Department, it is provided that the pay of members of the Assembly and Senators shall be eight dollars a day, and that was thoroughly discussed.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. That is stricken out.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I have it down in my book here. For the first session they were to receive that, and then after discussion we concluded to leave it to the Legislature to fix the compensation subsequently. Now to adopt this clause, it seems to me would conflict with Section 34 of that Article, and for one, I am most decidedly opposed to cutting the pay of members of the Legislature down to six dollars a day—a sum barely sufficient for their support. I insist that it is good policy to pay men adequately for their services—to allow a sufficient amount of compensation to command the talent and ability of the State. I submit, sir, that any man who has brains enough to make him a competent member of a legislative body in our State, must think a great deal more of the honor of it than I do, at least, to consent to serve the people for such a compensation as this. Any man who has sufficient brains to be sent to the Legislature ought to be worth more than six dollars a day. I propose to make the compensation eight dollars a day, and therefore I will move to strike out this clause altogether.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. We had that section to which the gentlemen refers before the committee, and we found that it did not provide for any compensation, except certain contingent expenses. I will ask the Secretary to read the section as it was passed.

The Secretary read the section, as follows :

Sec. 33. The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services a compensation to be fixed by law, and paid out of the public treasury ; but no increase of such compensation shall take effect during the term for which the members of either House shall have been elected ; provided, that an appropriation may be made for the payment of such actual expenses as the members of the Legislature may incur for postage, express charges, newspapers, and stationery, not exceeding the sum of sixty dollars, for any general or special session, to each member ; and furthermore provided, that the Speaker of the Assembly, and Lieutenant Governor, as President of the Senate, shall each, during the time of their actual attendance as such presiding officers, receive an additional allowance of two dollars per diem.

Mr. JOHNSON. I regret exceedingly to be compelled to disagree with my colleague on this or any other proposition, but, in this instance, I must dissent in toto from the views he has expressed. Whilst we had this matter under consideration, I was willing to assent to the sum specified in the section as just read by way of compromise, but at the same time my individual opinion was, and is, that it is too much. And such are my views for this, if no other reason, that a member is not inhibited from attending to his ordinary business. The term of the Legislature is limited to a short period, and, as I have stated, there is, as a general rule, nothing to prevent the members from attending to and transacting their ordinary business. There may be some cases, it is true, where they will be inconvenienced by reason of distance, but a great many, and probably a majority of them, can give some attention to their own affairs during the session.

Again, no man aspires to a seat in the Legislature solely for the money he can make there, and I submit that two, three, or four dollars a day will not make any perceptible difference in respect to the class of men who will accept of such positions. I hope that this provision will not be stricken out.

Mr. DUNNE. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say that the Committee on Schedule have appointed a meeting at a quarter to one o'clock, and we cannot meet at that time conveniently, unless we take our recess now. I therefore suggest, as it is the usual time for the recess, that the committee rise.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would have concluded all I had to say in a moment. Nevertheless, I will yield the floor.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XI, entitled Salaries and Appropriations, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

The hour of twelve o'clock having arrived,

The PRESIDENT declared the Convention at recess until two o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at two o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

SALARIES.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. I move that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of Article XI, entitled Salaries and Appropriations, which was left unfinished before the recess.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BANKS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of Article XI, entitled Salaries and Appropriations.

PAY OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose this forenoon, the following clause of Section I was under consideration :

"The pay of State Senators and members of the Assembly shall be six dollars for each day of actual service, and forty cents per mile for mileage, going and returning."

The gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Lockwood) had moved to strike out the entire clause, and the question now is upon that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the question is simply on striking out the entire clause, I would prefer not to present fully my views until that question shall be disposed of. However, I will say, on the general proposition, that I think the amount mentioned in this clause, which is six dollars per day, and forty cents per mile for mileage, is amply sufficient, and my individual judgment would be in favor of fixing the compensation at even a less sum, although I voted for this proposition, in the committee, as a compromise. It was found, upon the calculation which we made, that the forty cents per mile would pay the actual traveling expenses of the members, and also that the per diem of six dollars would suffice for their legitimate expenses during the session. Therefore, all their actual expenses, both in attendance at the capital, and whilst journeying to and from the State capital, would be paid by the State, and in my judgment this is all that the State should do. I feel confident that an increase of the per diem of two or three dollars, above the sum here specified, would not result in securing the attendance and services of a better class of men in the Legislature—that it would not suffice to induce a different and better set of men to accept the position. On the other hand, it would, in the aggregate, materially increase the expenses of the State Government, especially since it is proposed to increase considerably the number of members of the Legislature, by changing the basis of representation. At a proper time, I will ask to be heard on the latter branch of the subject.

WARWICK—JOHNSON—KENNEDY—LOCKWOOD—WETHERILL.

[July 22.

Mr. WARWICK. Is it not proposed to decrease the representation?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir. The proposition now is, as I understand, to adopt such a basis as will make the Legislature consist of thirteen Senators and twenty-six Assemblymen, which will be an aggregate of thirty-nine members of the Legislature. And anticipating that action, although perhaps not entirely in order, I may be allowed to suggest, that especially in view of such proposed increase, it is the better policy to fix the pay of the members of the Legislature at a moderate rate. I am strongly impressed with the conviction that it is not likely to make any material difference as to the individuals who will compose the Legislature, and it matters not whether the per diem shall be six or eight dollars, as a general rule, the same class of men will be found in the Legislature, at each succeeding session.

Mr. WARWICK. I move to strike out this whole clause, and so leave the question of compensation entirely with the Legislature.

Mr. KENNEDY. If you strike it out altogether, how are members of the Legislature to get any pay at all?

The SECRETARY. At the time the committee rose this forenoon, the question pending was on the motion of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Lockwood,) to amend by striking out "six," and inserting "eight," as the per diem.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. No, sir. I made that motion in the first instance, but I immediately modified it by substituting a motion to strike out the entire clause.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is the way I understood it. But I ask if you strike it out altogether, how will you provide for the pay of the Legislature at all? Because we have already provided in the Constitution that their compensation shall not be increased during their term of office.

Mr. WARWICK. If we strike out this whole matter, then there is no compensation fixed for the Legislature, and consequently nothing to be increased. To increase the compensation signifies to start at a fixed sum, and make that sum larger. It presupposes a starting point, and therefore it is evident that there can be no increase unless there is a fixed sum to start with. It will not be an increase, but a creation, if I understand correctly the signification of those words of our language. Therefore I maintain that if we provide no basis to start upon, the Legislature will be at liberty to establish its own compensation, without any violation of the Constitution. The idea of increasing from nothing would be an absurdity, but the compensation which the Legislature shall fix will be a primitive creation.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I may be wrong, and I confess that I have heard arguments which weaken my position somewhat even in my own mind, but my idea was this, that inasmuch as we propose to leave to every Legislature the question of what shall be the compensation of the succeeding Legislature, inasmuch as we have adopted the provisions contained in Section 34 of Article IV, (or Section 33, as it is now numbered,) leaving the whole matter of compensation entirely to the Legislature, it seemed to me to be perfectly competent and proper for the first Legislature to decide what the pay of its own members shall be. The inhibition in regard to an increase, as the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) argues, can only apply after the compensation has once been fixed, because there can be no increase until there is something to increase. Now the members of the Territorial Legislature received a compensation of only three dollars a day, in greenbacks, but they passed a law creating for themselves an extra compensation of seven dollars per day, payable out of the Territorial Treasury. And I will say that in my opinion that was no more than just and proper, for the Territory is able and willing to pay the men whom it employs. It appears to me, therefore, that an appropriation made by the first Legislature for the payment of the per diem of its members would be legal, if we strike out this clause entirely, leaving no provision on the subject in our Constitution.

Mr. JOHNSON. But is there not a Constitutional inhibition remaining?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Not as I understand it. I really do not think there is, if we strike this out.

Mr. WETHERILL. I think we had better fix it for the first year, and leave it for the Legislature to regulate afterwards. It is not necessary to fix a "speculative price," but let us put the compensation at a figure which will be large enough to pay the necessary expenses of the members, and nothing beyond that. I think six dollars a day is ample.

Mr. WARWICK. I will speak as briefly as possible on this subject. The proposition is made to pay the members of the Legislature six dollars a day, and now let us look at that proposition in a business light. It is proposed that the payment shall be made in cash, but we all know that, as the Scottish poet says—

"The best laid schemes o' mice and men Gang aft agley."

Therefore, such a thing may possibly come to pass as the payment of the members of the Legislature in State scrip, and that may chance to be worth, like our Territorial scrip, somewhere from forty to fifty, and by rare good fortune even as much as sixty cents on the dollar. That would make the pay of the members in the neighborhood of three dollars a day. And yet the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) tells us that there is ample provision in this per diem for the payment of the expenses of members at the seat of government. Now let us examine this question of mileage. A member from Lander County has to pay thirty-two or thirty-three cents per mile, in coming to the capital, and has to pay it, too, in gold coin, while you only propose to repay him in this depreciated scrip, so that he is compelled to make up a wide difference out of his per diem. I think it is the poorest kind of policy to refuse to pay your legislators a reasonable compensation, at least as much as you would a respectable bar-keeper, a brick-layer, or a hod-carrier. That is not the way to keep men honest. The people everywhere raise their voices against stealing and corruption in the Legislature. I never saw anything of it myself, when I was a member, although I did hear a great deal of it outside, and I think our Chairman will bear me out in saying that while he was a member of the California Legislature not a dollar went into his pocket, at all events, except his per diem and mileage.

[July 22.]

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's inquiry? Whether I believed the statements, or accusations, as to corruption?

Mr. WARWICK. Well, to bring it directly to a point, I will ask the Chairman if, while he was a member, he ever saw anything of this stealing and corruption? I know he did not. These things are talked about merely for buncombe, and not expected to be believed by sensible, well informed men. But the members of the Legislature should be well paid for their services, and for my part I do not think ten dollars a day would be too much.

Mr. WETHERILL. That would make a difference of somewhere about ten thousand dollars in the aggregate expenses of the State Government. Now, before men are elected to come here as members of the Legislature, they know what they are to receive, and when they consent to come they make a contract with the people to serve for so much compensation. I say, let them carry out that contract.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Esmeralda. (Mr. Wetherill.) whether he would be willing to support a proposition to fix the per diem at two dollars and a half? Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not occupy my full time of five minutes when I previously had the floor, and I would like to say a word or two further on this subject. There is no State in the Union but pays to the members of its Legislature a larger per diem than they would be able to earn by their labor as common mechanics. That fact cannot be denied. And, sir, there is a just medium in this matter. Any man who ever transacted business, or who was ever connected with a mercantile firm, for any considerable length of time, will tell you, as one of the results of his observation and experience, that he may just as well, if not better, pay his employes a sufficient amount to enable them to make a living, because, if he does not, they will steal the balance any way. I believe that a sufficient compensation is an incentive to probity, and therefore the best policy is to pay our legislators a reasonable sum for their services. I do not wish to fix the amount at an exorbitant figure, but I honestly believe that ten dollars a day would not be too much. A member coming here from Lander County, for instance, or any other distant part of the State, is obliged to quit all his business for the whole session. If the office was one which was to last for a year, or for such length of time as would justify a man in fitting up a home at the capital, so that he might live here at a reasonable expense, it would be a different matter, and I would not object to fixing a lower rate of compensation. But the position of members of the Legislature does not permit of any such thing. I believe in allowing our law-makers to live here in a respectable way, enjoying respectable accommodations; and although the difference of ten or twelve thousand dollars for the session may seem to gentlemen a big bill, yet, in my opinion, there is scarcely a man in the State but would be willing to pay twenty-five cents out of his own pocket, if necessary, for the sake of having our State Legislature, for example, a tolerably well dressed body.

The question was taken upon the amendment to strike out the entire clause, and on a division the vote was—ayes, 6; noes, 11. So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CROSMAN. I move to amend by striking out the word "six," and inserting "eight;" so as to fix the per diem of the first Legislature at eight dollars.

It has been urged upon this floor, in reference to the salaries of Supreme Court Judges, that they may not be paid in cash; and, on the other hand, as I am aware, it has also been stated that provision will be made for paying all these expenditures in money, as they become due. That, however, in my opinion, is a matter of very great doubt. And again, as has been remarked by my friend from Ormsby, (Mr. Lockwood.) the pay of members should not be less than that of mechanics; at least it has always been the custom in all States of which I have any knowledge, to pay members of the Legislature as much compensation as is obtained by good mechanics. I contend, therefore, that eight dollars a day is not too large a sum. At the same time, I wish to be understood as favoring an economical form of government. I consider that a per diem of eight dollars would be in harmony with an economical scale of expenditure, and I therefore hope that the sense of the committee will be to allow that moderate sum.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, sir, in regard to this amendment, and the arguments adduced in its favor, I have to say this, that if you want to pay your State officers and your members of the

WARWICK—JOHNSON.

[July 22.]

Legislature in cash, the way to accomplish that object is not by providing for extravagant salaries, and over-liberal compensation, but by making your government an economical one throughout.

This morning I opposed amendments which I thought were of an extreme character, reducing the salaries of officers in the executive department to so low a rate that, in my judgment, they would not be able to support themselves upon such salaries, in a manner befitting their positions. But in this case, the compensation is to be paid for merely temporary services—ninety days for the first session of the Legislature, and thereafter sixty days, and for any called session, only twenty days. For such limited service we propose to give the members of the Legislature a per diem of six dollars, as compensation for expenses whilst they are at the capital, and to allow them, besides, their mileage of forty cents per mile, to pay their expenses in coming to and going from the capital. I conceive that amount to be sufficient to pay the expenses of any gentleman who is fitted for the duties of a legislator, because those who run into extravagancies that enhance the bills they are called upon to meet, those who incur the amount and character of indebtedness which members of the Legislature sometimes contract at the seat of government, are not likely to be the more valuable class of legislators, and I do not think that such extravagant habits mark them as being preëminently fitted for legislative position. We propose to give them an amount, in cash, sufficient to pay all their necessary expenses, and the way to secure the payment of such amount in cash, instead of scrip, is to economize in all respects, and in every case where it can properly be done, whilst at the same time taking care to avoid the other extreme, in the matter of reducing the salaries of those officers who occupy the more responsible positions. By this means we shall be able to give better security to those who may be candidates for official positions, that if elected they will receive the pay for their services in cash. The extra expenditure of ten thousand dollars here, ten thousand there, and ten thousand in another place, will augment to that extent the aggregate expense of our State Government.

Some questions will arise involving expenditures, which I regard as being of much more vital moment than this of the pay of the Legislature, and in the consideration of which I probably will be found differing with some members of the Convention—I hope not with a majority—in reference not only to the pay of State officers, but also the number of them to be provided for. Those matters, however, are not now before us. When the proper time arrives, I trust I shall have an opportunity afforded to give my opinions upon such matters. The proposition under consideration is, whether or not we shall fix upon six dollars as being, in our judgment, a sufficient amount to defray the necessary daily expenses of a member of the Legislature. And when we do that, I contend that we have made sufficient provision, and that an advance from six to eight dollars would not make any possible difference as to who shall be members of the Legislature. The gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick) is well aware that the Legislature will be made up of the same class of men in either case, and that gentleman may himself very likely, have legislative aspirations, as I know he has had heretofore.

Mr. WARWICK. The gentleman has been radically cured, I will remark.

Mr. JOHNSON. Possibly he may want to try it again. And let me add, without intending it merely as a compliment, that I know no man better able to represent his county efficiently and creditably. But be that as it may, if the gentleman shall be desirous of making some friend of his United States Senator, six dollars a day would secure his services in the Legislature just as readily as any other sum. So it would be with my honorable friend the Chairman, (Mr. Banks); I am confident it would make no difference with him; nor would it with my friend and colleague from Ormsby, (Mr. Lockwood), who has been a most faithful representative of our county in this Convention. It will make no possible difference with him, nor I venture to say with any other member of the Convention. And, to take a more extensive view, throughout the entire State it would be found that the same individuals would be here as representatives, be the per diem six dollars or eight dollars. Therefore, inasmuch as the smaller sum will save a very considerable aggregate amount to the State, I am opposed to the increase suggested.

Mr. WARWICK. I wish to call attention to one fallacy in the argument of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), who has just taken his seat, and that is in relation to his assertion that it will make no difference in the individuals composing the Legislature, whether the per diem shall be six dollars or eight dollars. If that will make no difference, then of course, by the same reasoning, it makes no difference whether it be four dollars a day or six dollars, and carrying it still further we might cut the per diem down to two dollars, or one dollar, and still it makes no difference. There was another argument which I am sure the gentleman would not have advanced if he had reflected upon it a moment, namely, that the job is a short one, and therefore the compensation may be small. Sir, we all know that short jobs are invariably better paid for than long ones.

Now, sir, the gentleman from Ormsby must be well aware that there is a very wide difference of situation between the man who comes here as a member from Lander County, and the man who lives right at the capital, representing a constituency in this immediate vicinity. The former must leave his business entirely, for the whole session, whilst the latter, supposing him to be a member of the legal profession, may at any moment step out of the chamber in which he holds his seat, and return, inside of an hour, perhaps, with a consultation fee of forty or fifty dollars in his pocket. Some gentlemen have done that, during the session of this Convention, but it is a thing which could not possibly occur with us poor wretches who come from a distance. [Merriment.] From our great desire to serve the State we have been obliged to neglect our own affairs, and consequently we have turned off all our clients, and left our business entirely uncared for, for a period of two months.

In addition to that, gentlemen will recollect the price of wages in our county. A good competent miner often gets paid there six or seven dollars a day, and a respectable blacksmith or carpenter receives eight dollars a day. Now I contend that the labor of a law-maker is equal in value, at least, to that of a mechanic, and therefore he should receive as much pay for his labor. We meet here at an early hour in the morning, and remain in session until nine or ten o'clock at night, either in the Convention or in some of the various committees. I certainly hope we shall fix the compensation of members of the Legislature, who will have to perform similar labors, at a sum at which men can live, though I have no legislative aspirations myself.

Mr. CROSMAN. A good deal has been said here about the Legislature getting paid in cash, but how is that to be accomplished? The first Legislature will have to provide the means for obtaining the cash, and when that money comes, members will get it, but that will be a long time to wait, I apprehend.

Mr. JOHNSON. Such is my opinion also.

Mr. CROSMAN. I cannot see any good reason for putting the per diem down to six dollars. The gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), urged the importance of paying the State officers, each, a salary of three thousand six hundred dollars a year, which amounts to a good deal more than eight dollars a day, and I maintain that a gentleman who is properly qualified to be a member of the Legislature possesses all the qualifications necessary for a State Controller, or for almost any other State officer.

Mr. JOHNSON. I very much question your proposition.

Mr. CROSMAN. Hence, I cannot see the propriety of reducing the pay of members of the Legislature to a figure that will no more than cover their expenses. If we expect to get men to serve for no more reward than the honor of it, then why not adopt the same policy in regard to the State officers? I was of opinion at first that six dollars would be enough to pay expenses, but gentlemen from the remote districts will require more, even for that. The honor may be well enough, but it will not pay traveling expenses nor board bills. Those whose homes are near the capital can go out and come in whenever they please, but members from the remote districts cannot have that privilege except at greater expense.

Mr. STURTEVANT. My calculation is, that we ought to give each member enough to pay his expenses—and his board bill alone will amount to about forty dollars a week, if he brings his wife with him—and then leave him a little something over for contingencies. I want the members to be paid enough, so that they can come out even at the end, if they are prudent, and that will require as much as eight dollars a day.

Mr. WETHERILL. Members' wives do not constitute necessary appendages to legislation, and consequently it is not requisite that a member should bring his wife with him, if he has one.

Mr. NOURSE. It is cheaper. [Laughter.]

Mr. WETHERILL. I hope we shall not raise the per diem above six dollars. The benefit to accrue would not be equal to the increased amount of expense, which the State would have to pay. If we want to go on with our State Government under an economical system, for heaven's sake do not let us begin by increasing the legislative per diem to eight dollars.

Mr. FRIZELL. If I thought the compensation of Senators and Representatives would be paid in cash I should vote for six dollars, but inasmuch as there are doubts and shadows resting upon that question I think I will vote for eight dollars. The increase of expense would be, going upon the supposition that there are to be fifty-two members of the Legislature, one hundred and four dollars multiplied by sixty, which makes six thousand two hundred and forty dollars. That is not a very alarming amount.

Mr. WETHERILL. But the session is to continue ninety days.

Mr. FRIZELL. That is only the first session. As to the argument of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), in most cases, there is no man whose leadership I would be more willing to follow.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am fearful that the gentleman would not regard me as being sound on some important questions.

Mr. FRIZELL. I say there is no man I would generally prefer to follow, but I must say, judging of his views from private conversations, that I really do not think I should be doing right to follow him in this instance, because I understand he is rather down on legislators. I shall vote for eight dollars. ["Question, question."]]

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire that this amendment shall be made to harmonize with some of the election stories we have heard, in past years, and therefore I move that we make it read "eight dollars a day and roast beef." [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. I see that the Committee is getting impatient, but I will not speak five minutes on this subject. I was one of the Committee that recommended the filling of the blank with six dollars a day, and I agreed to that, like my friend from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson), with reluctance.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the Committee I was in favor of making it five dollars a day.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is correct; but as a compromise we agreed to take six dollars. I was also opposed to paying six dollars a day, but perhaps for somewhat different reasons. I know very well that situated as we are in the far off counties, we have no lawyers thirsting for honors, whom we could send to the Legislature cheap, and be glad, may be, to get them out of the way—[merriment]—and so we shall have to take the best men we have got, and they will be mechanics who are worth eight dollars a day. Now since we must select those men whom we think to be worthy, having no lawyers to send for the honor of it, I believe we should pay them such wages as they themselves think they are worthy of, and are able to earn every day at home. Consequently I shall vote for eight dollars.

The question was taken on the amendment to strike out the word "six" and insert "eight," and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 14; noes, 6. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did the Chair rule roast beef out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not hear it or I would surely have appealed. [Merriment.]

Mr. PROCTOR. Now I move the adoption of the section as it stands.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the question before the Committee.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have an amendment to offer to the clause relating to mileage. It is to insert after the word "going" the word "to," and after the word "returning" to insert "from the place of holding the session." Then the clause will read:

"And forty cents per mile, for mileage, going to and returning from the place of holding the session."

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it is imperfect in this, that it does not provide specifically for paying the members elected at the first session. The general frame work of our Constitution contemplates, as provided in the article on the Legislative Department, that the compensation of members of the Legislature shall be established by law, and this is intended, therefore, to apply only to the first Legislature.

Mr. BROSNAN. That is provided for in the previous part of the section. I will modify my amendment, however, so that the clause will read:

"And forty cents per mile for mileage, going to and returning from the place of meeting."

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

FEES AND PERQUISITES.

The SECRETARY read the next, and concluding clause of the section, as follows:

"No officer mentioned in this section shall receive any fees or perquisites to his own use for the performance of any duty connected with his office, or for the performance of any additional duty imposed upon him by law."

Mr. HOVEY. I think that will cut off the allowance of sixty dollars to each member for stationery, and so forth, provided for in the article on Legislative Department.

The question was taken on the adoption of the clause as read, and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the entire section as amended, and it was adopted.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move that the committee rise, and report Article XI back to the Convention, and recommend its passage as amended by the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION—SALARIES.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the Chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XI, entitled Salaries and Appropriations, had made some amendments thereto, in which he was instructed to ask the concurrence of the Convention, and recommended the passage of the article with such amendments.

The report was accepted, and the Committee of the Whole discharged from the further consideration of the article.

Mr. WARWICK. I move the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the several amendments reported by the committee.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. CHAPIN. I would like to inquire whether the last clause of the section really does cut off the sixty dollars allowed to each member of the Legislature for certain contingent expenses? It occurs to me that it will have that effect, and yet I am sure that cannot be the intention.

The PRESIDENT. I heard the same inquiry made, I believe, in the Committee of the Whole. I do not think that would be the effect.

Mr. GIBSON. They are to receive two dollars a day extra, if we adopt the amendment raising the per diem from six to eight dollars. That will give them one hundred and eighty dollars for the session, instead of the sixty.

Mr. BROSNAN. I so understand it. I am disposed to think that section 33 of Article IV, as already passed, is so worded as to provide for the allowance of sixty dollars to each member.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be on agreeing to the several amendments reported, and whenever that portion of the report is reached, it will be competent for gentlemen to offer such amendments as they may deem necessary.

PAY OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The question was stated on the amendment proposed by the Committee of the Whole, to strike out, in the clause relative to the per diem of members of the Legislature, the word "six," and insert "eight," so that the clause would read as follows:

"The pay of State Senators and members of the Assembly shall be eight dollars per day for each day of actual service," etc.

Mr. BANKS. I call for the yeas and nays on that proposition.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and the vote was—yeas, 17; nays, 7—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, Dunne, Frizell, Hawley, Hovey, Lockwood, Mason, Murdock, Nourse, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, and Warwick—17.

Nays—Messrs. Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Gibson, Kennedy, Wetherill, and Mr. President—7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the word "to," and add the words "from the place of meeting," to the clause relating to mileage, so as to read:

"And forty cents per mile for mileage, going to and returning from the place of meeting."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

THE TREASURY FUNDS.

Mr. GIBSON. There is still another amendment, to insert the words "out of the State Treasury."

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to propose an amendment to the effect that the payments of the salaries of the officers mentioned shall be made out of the general fund of the State Treasury. Everybody knows, who is familiar with the history of California, that great abuses have been practiced there by borrowing money from different funds. The idea has occurred to my mind at this moment, and I hope the matter will be put into practical shape by some member who is more familiar with the requirements of the various funds than I am.

The PRESIDENT. It is competent for the Legislature to regulate the several funds. The Legislature can indicate what shall be the general fund, and although such a fund may be created, yet there may be no money in it.

Mr. HAWLEY. My experience in those matters is not as extensive as that of our President. It occurred to me that it would be prudent to make some restriction on the subject, but I will not offer an amendment.

The amendment to insert the words "out of the State Treasury," was agreed to.

Mr. HOVEY. There is another amendment, which appears to have been overlooked, which is to strike out the words "not exceed" wherever they occur in the section, and insert the word "be."

The question was taken on the amendment referred to by Mr. Hovey, and it was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. If there are no further amendments, I move that the section as amended be adopted.

The question was taken, and the section as amended was adopted.

The article was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of Article XVI, entitled Miscellaneous Provisions.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will move as an amendment that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole on the general file.

Mr. CHAPIN. I accept that.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. KENNEDY in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration first, of Article XVI, entitled Miscellaneous Provisions.

SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

The SECRETARY read Section I, of Article XVI, as follows:

SECTION 1. The seat of government shall be at Carson City, but no appropriation for the erection or purchase of capitol buildings shall be made during the next three years.

Mr. WARWICK. I move to amend the section by striking out the words "at Carson City," and inserting instead the words "wherever the Legislature may prescribe." I offer the amendment for this reason: It is well known that at the present time the capital is situated on the extreme western border of the Territory, and that the business and population is steadily going over on the other side. That condition of things may be more marked in the future, and therefore we ought, in my opinion, to leave the location of the capital in the hands of the Legislature.

Mr. JOHNSON. I feel some delicacy in speaking on this question, but if there is any impropriety in my doing so, it was no less improper for the gentleman from Lander to offer this exceedingly modest amendment. Therefore, we may consider his action a fair off-set.

Now, sir, it has been mentioned to me, by gentlemen who are here as the representatives of counties other than Orms-by, that they do not want this matter left in such a condition as to place the State Capital upon wheels, and let it go traveling around from one place to another. Why, sir, according to the programme the gentleman marks out, the Legislature may, the very next year, remove the capital from this city, and establish it at the extreme eastern portion of the State.

Mr. WARWICK. Yes; if that should be a proper place for it.

Mr. JOHNSON. No doubt it would be, according to the gentleman's extreme opinions of

Friday.]

BANKS—WARWICK—BROSNAN.

[July 22.

the future grandeur and prosperity of his section. If we concede the correctness of his calculations and vaticinations in regard to the future population, wealth and business of that remote part of the Territory, no doubt it is the proper place for the capital. But it is enough to know that under such a system there would be no stability or permanence. The capital is now located here, and conceded to be properly situated, for the present, at least, and we may judge from the experience of other States, as to the propriety or wisdom of permanently fixing the State Capital.

What has been the history of California in this respect? I had occasion in committee, when, I believe, the gentleman from Lander was present, to recount some of the incidents of the various removals of the capital of that State. Year after year the seat of government was changed, greatly to the perplexity and bewilderment of the people. First it was at San José, then it went to Vallejo, then to Benicia, from Benicia to Sacramento, from Sacramento to Benicia, and then back again—once in the intervening time, however, finding its way back to San José; and thus, for a series of years, the Legislature and the people of that State were agitated with the all-important question, not alone of where the capital should be, but where it really was. Committees were appointed on the subject, and the matter was discussed year after year, in and out of the halls of the Legislature, and courts of justice, before the question was finally determined, not only of where the capital ought to be, but where it was, according to law. And we can anticipate nothing different to result in our State, if we adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Lander. I think he came to California at a later date than the time when the events I mention transpired, but I assure him that if we should arrange this matter in the way he proposes, the same state of things in our State would be the inevitable effect.

Sir, if gentlemen do not believe that the capital belongs here, if they do not think this is the proper place for it, then I say locate it somewhere else; but wherever you do place it, fix it there immovably. Let the capital be located and established permanently somewhere. If you submit this question to the Legislature, you set that body, at each and every session, to the work of receiving bids for the removal of the capital to one locality or another, and I do not want such an infliction imposed upon it, or upon the State. Your cheap-priced legislators would then require to be boarded throughout the session, and you would give them an opportunity to enforce their demands by holding out threats of voting for the removal of the capital. I repeat, if you do not think this is the proper place for the capital, fix it somewhere else; but whatever place you determine upon, establish it there permanently. This State is not situated, however, like New York or Massachusetts, yet in neither of those States has it been deemed necessary to locate the capital geographically in the centre of the State.

Mr. BANKS. As they say in mining phraseology, we have here strong "indications" of a capital fight—"clear and well defined." In view of all those "indications," I should like to ask leave of absence for about one week. But seriously, I hope we may be allowed to take a vote on this question, and put an end to a discussion, which surely can accomplish no good purpose.

Mr. WARWICK. I only wish to say, in reply to the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson), that it is universally conceded that the capital of a State ought to be located not on its borders, but as near the centre as is practicable. In regard to the State of New York, to which he has referred, the capital is at Albany, which, although not the centre, is as near to it as it can conveniently be located. It is not at New York City, by a long ways. Now I only ask to leave this matter to the Legislature, so that, if at some future time there shall be good reason for locating the capital elsewhere, it may be done. It might be many years before any change would be desirable.

I will modify my amendment so that the Section will read:

"The seat of government shall be determined by the Legislature, but no appropriation," etc.

The question was taken on the amendment as modified, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section as read, and it was adopted.

OATH OF OFFICE—DUELING.

Section 2 was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. Members of the Legislature, and all officers, Executive, Judicial, and Ministerial, shall, before they enter upon the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe to the following oath or affirmation:

"I —, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance, and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution, or law of any State, Convention or Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever. And I do further solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not fought a duel, nor sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, nor been a second to either party, nor in any manner aided or assisted in such duel, nor been knowingly the bearer of such challenge, or acceptance, since the adoption of the Constitution of the State of Nevada, and that I will not be so engaged or concerned, directly or indirectly, in or about any such duel, during my continuance in office. And further, that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office of — on which I am about to enter, so help me God."

Mr. BROSNAN. I call for a division of the question on this section. I want a separate vote upon that portion of the section which reads as follows:

"And I do further solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not fought a duel, nor sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, nor been a second to either party, nor in any manner aided or assisted in such duel, nor been knowingly the bearer of such challenge, or acceptance, since the adoption of the Constitution of the State of Nevada, and that I will not be so engaged or concerned, directly or indirectly, in or about any such duel, during my continuance in office."

The question was stated on the adoption of the first portion of the section, preceding the above clause, relative to dueling.

Mr. NOURSE. I believe this form of language is in the oath prescribed by Congress, but I confess that I have never been able to understand it. Where it says—"And further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose," and so on, what does it mean?

Mr. STURTEVANT. That he is going to do his duty.

Mr. NOURSE. Why not say so, then?

Mr. COLLINS. This has rather taken me by surprise. I certainly object to striking out this portion of the oath in reference to dueling.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not the question. There is no motion to strike out, but a division of the question having been called for, and a separate vote on the clause in regard to dueling, the question is, according to my understanding, on the adoption of the residue of the section.

Mr. COLLINS. I hope that part of the section will not be stricken out, nor omitted, upon any consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the gentleman should vote "aye" on both propositions.

The question was taken upon the adoption of all the section except the clause designated by Mr. Brosnan, and it was adopted.

The question was then taken upon the excepted clause, and it was also adopted.

The question was next taken upon the adoption of the section as a whole, and it was adopted.

INELIGIBILITY TO OFFICE.

Section 3 was read, as follows :

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to any office who is not a qualified elector, or who has fought or been in any manner concerned in a duel since the adoption of this Constitution.

No amendment being proposed, the section was adopted as read.

TIME OF GENERAL ELECTION.

Section 4 was read, as follows :

SEC. 4. The general election shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November.

No amendment was offered, and the section was adopted as read.

LIMITATION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Section 5 was read, as follows :

SEC. 5. The aggregate number of members of both branches of the Legislature shall never exceed seventy-five.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted as read.

TERM OF STATE OFFICERS.

Section 6 was read, as follows :

SEC. 6. The term of State officers elected at the first election under this Constitution, shall continue until the Tuesday after the first Monday of January, A. D. 1867, and until the election and qualification of their successors.

Mr. BROSNAN. I propose an amendment in that section. I move to insert after the word "Constitution," the words "and all officers whose offices may hereafter be created."

Mr. PROCTOR. I think there is a conflict here; I do not know but I may be mistaken. I understand that it is proposed to retain the Territorial officers in the several counties.

Mr. JOHNSON. This simply relates to the term of State officers. But I will inquire of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Brosnan,) whether the proposed amendment will not include as well the judges of the Supreme Court? If so, I think it would be in conflict with the programme of the Judiciary Committee. If we say "the term of the State officers, and all other officers hereafter provided for," shall continue until the time specified, it seems to me that the judges of the Supreme Court would be included.

Mr. BROSNAN. My object is to provide that in case the Legislature shall create new offices, the incumbents shall take office at the same time as those provided for by the Constitution. I am not particular about the language, however, and the section may need some further amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. My impression is, that the use of the words "all officers" would most certainly include judicial officers, and I will suggest that it would be better to say "all State officers, judicial officers excepted." Because in the judicial feature, we propose whether we shall have three Supreme Court Judges, or five, to make provision for their classification by lot, so that they may hold office respectively, for two, four and six years, or if we shall decide to have the larger number of five, they may be so classified as to hold for two, three, four, five and six years respectively, one only vacating office each succeeding year.

Mr. BROSNAN. I think it will be well to make such an amendment as the gentleman from Ormsby suggests. I will not press the amendment which I have proposed, but instead, will offer an amendment to insert after "State officers," the words "except judicial."

The question was taken on the amendment last proposed by Mr. Brosnan, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. The section now seems to conflict with another which we have heretofore amended and adopted, fixing the term of office of the Governor at four years. This section would limit it to two years.

Mr. JOHNSON. The general framework of the Constitution provides for a term of four years; but the term of two years for the officers first elected is an exception to that general rule, and properly should be placed in the Schedule or Miscellaneous Provisions.

Mr. NOURSE. It seems to me that this whole section should go into the Schedule. Miscellaneous subjects, which do not properly come within the scope of the other articles, should be inserted in this article, but merely temporary matters, which have reference to the change from the Territorial condition to that of a State, and are not intended to be permanent features of the instrument, should have their place in the Schedule. That, it appears to me, ought to be the distinction between this article and the Schedule. I move to strike this section out, with a view of having it inserted in the Schedule.

Mr. COLLINS. I suggest that the motion should be to refer it to the Committee on Schedule.

Mr. NOURSE. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think that is necessary. We can pass upon it, and, if desirable, can transfer it to the Schedule Department afterwards.

The question was taken on Mr. Nourse's motion as modified, and it was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not understand that the vote just taken operates as a transfer of the section. If so, there is no need of having another vote.

Mr. CHAPIN. It answers our purpose; we have not yet considered the Schedule, and we can adopt the section in that.

Mr. NOURSE. What possible objection is there to striking the section out of this article now? The Schedule has not yet come before us.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will explain to the gentleman how a question may arise, under the rules of parliamentary proceedings. Possibly, this vote, not being the action of the Convention, is a nullity; but supposing the action of the Convention, as understood, is merely striking out the section? This day is Friday, and the afternoon, and to-morrow night we may finally adjourn. In the meantime, under parliamentary rules, we could not reach the section by reconsideration before the adjournment of the Convention, and if it is called up to-morrow, objections may be urged that it cannot be reconsidered on the same day, the Convention having once rejected it. Thus, if you strike out the section, the objection of an individual member might, if so disposed, defeat its re-incorporation.

Mr. NOURSE. What motion, then, does the gentleman want?

Mr. JOHNSON. Only this: that our action should not be to reject, or absolutely strike it out, but rather to place it in such condition as to be under the control of the Convention for future action, whether that be to adopt or reject it.

Mr. CHAPIN. The Committee on Schedule has not yet made its report to the Convention. The members of that committee are all here, and doubtless understand the intention of this body in regard to the section; and I have no doubt that they will see the propriety of incorporating it in the Schedule, when they make their report.

Mr. NOURSE. Very well; I will make the motion that we recommend the Convention to refer the section to the Committee on Schedule.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. NOURSE. Now does not that leave the section in the position of not having been acted upon, but merely referred? It seems to me that it need not embarrass us about the adoption of the article.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not sufficiently acquainted with parliamentary rules to be enabled to inform the gentleman.

OFFICES OF COUNTY OFFICERS.

Section 7 was read, as follows:

SEC. 7. All county officers shall hold their offices at the county seats of their respective counties.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move that we adopt the section.

Mr. BANKS. I would like to hear the reasons for the change made by the Committee on Schedule.

Mr. DUNNE. The amendment which the Convention has made changes entirely the language of that section. The original section, as it stands in our printed basis, reads as follows:

SEC. 7. The Sheriffs, County Clerks, County Treasurers, County Judges, and County Recorders, shall hold their offices at the county seats of their respective counties.

The committee have amended that by striking out the officers named, and inserting instead the words "all county officers." I dissent from that action of the committee, and therefore I move as an amendment to strike out the words "all county officers," and insert instead the words contained in the printed section, so as to leave the section as it stood originally.

The question was taken on the amendment, and, it appearing to be lost, a division was called for.

Mr. DUNNE. I supposed that amendment would be adopted without any trouble, for I think the section includes enough of the county officers, as it is in the original; enough, at all events, to be included in a constitutional provision. It will often occur, in a great many counties, that it will be found almost impossible to get a good County Surveyor to consent to leave his place of residence and go to the county seat—and there is really no necessity for it. If anybody has business with him, he can go to his office and find him; and the man who gets the office of County Surveyor will not be apt to be one who has his office located away off in some remote cañon, but rather one whose place of business is in a populous town. It will probably very often happen that the county seat is not the most populous town in the county—it is not in my own county—and the man who would perhaps be the best County Surveyor, would not accept the office upon such a condition. There is nothing connected with the office which makes it at all necessary that it should be located at the county seat, and it is not going to make it any easier for the majority of those who have business with the Surveyor, and have to go to his office. It will be quite as convenient for them, if he resides at some other town, perhaps the largest in the county. If parties have a survey made, they must file the map, not in the Surveyor's, but in the County Recorder's office. It seems to me that we might, with equal propriety, adopt a provision that every lawyer shall reside at the county seat.

Mr. WARWICK. We do require a lawyer to reside there, if he is County Judge.

Mr. DUNNE. I see no necessity for requiring such an officer to reside at the county seat, and I think we might better leave it to the Legislature, even in regard to these other officers. Certainly those not specified in the original section should not be required to live at the county seat, and the power might be lodged with the Legislature to prescribe such residence hereafter, at any time when it may be deemed necessary. For the present—at least in the new counties and those which are about to be created—there is no necessity for it, and I would leave it to the Legislature to make such provision after a time, if it shall be found requisite.

Mr. WARWICK. It is very evident to my mind, that of all the officers which the gentleman has enumerated, there is no one whose residence at the county seat is more absolutely necessary than that of the County Surveyor. And why? New locations of lands are being made all the time, and we will suppose a case where two individuals, claiming to have located the same piece of land, want to get it surveyed. The rule is, that whoever reaches the County Surveyor first, will have his survey made first. One of them may happen to know that Mr. Green, the County Surveyor, lives in Cow Cañon, but the other is not so fortunate as to be aware of that important fact, and so loses his chance. But if the Surveyor is required to keep his office at the county seat, they both know exactly where to find him, and no unfair advantage can be taken. It is the proper place for him, and consequently, I think it is absolutely necessary that he should be required to reside there.

Mr. PROCTOR. It seems to me that the section, as reported, would include County Commissioners, too.

Mr. DUNNE. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. If it requires them to reside at the county seat, I certainly object. The Public Administrator and Coroner would also be included.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. It simply says that they shall hold their offices there; not that they shall reside there. And as to the County Surveyor in Humboldt County, he certainly does not attend to his business, and do his duty properly, if he does not keep his office at the county seat, for the law of the last session of the Legislature requires county officers to keep their offices at the county seats.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Dunne, and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 9; noes, 11. So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. I will suggest an amendment to except County Commissioners.

Mr. WARWICK. They must hold their offices there.

Mr. CHAPIN. Well; all right.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I do insist that the Coroner should not be compelled to reside at the county seat. I am very sure there is not pay enough connected with that position, in some counties, to justify a Coroner in going to the expense of opening an office.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend by excepting County Surveyors. Now, see how it would work. You compel a man to put out his sign—"County Surveyor"—at the county seat, and then he may reside at a different place.

Mr. BANKS. I hope this amendment will be adopted. I do not think there are many counties in this Territory in which a great number of competent surveyors are to be found, and it is exceedingly desirable that the most competent men should be selected for that office. But with the section in its present form, we shall have but a very slim chance of securing the best talent for the position. When a County Surveyor is elected, it becomes known at once, all over the county, where his place of business is, and how it is reached, and the difficulty alleged by the gentleman from Lander (Mr. Warwick,) in the case supposed by him a few moments ago, is one which it is not at all probable will ever exist. The place of residence and office of the County Surveyor are likely to be as well known under this amendment as if he held his office at the county seat; and I do not think there would be any greater difficulty in regard to the races the gentleman refers to, in cases of rival locations of land, if we adopt the amendment, than there will be if we leave the section to stand as it is. I know that in our own county the requirement would operate very badly indeed.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Dunne, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section as read, and it was adopted.

PUBLICATION OF LAWS AND DECISIONS.

Section 8 was read, as follows:

SEC. 8. The Legislature shall provide for the speedy publication of all statute laws of a general nature, and for such judicial decisions as it may deem expedient; and all laws and judicial decisions shall be free for publication by any person; provided, that no judgment of the Supreme Court shall take effect and be operative until the opinion of the Court in such case shall be filed with the Clerk of said Court.

Mr. NOURSE. In looking over this section I find one thing about it to which I desire to call attention. It is customary, I believe, that the Reporter of the Supreme Court shall be allowed to have the copyright of the judicial decisions which he reports, and that constitutes the main portion of his compensation. It would seem that under this section he can enjoy no such privilege.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think this is one of the most commendable features of the section, and the gentleman from Washoe will no doubt excuse me if I have to refer to California for an illustration, and trench somewhat on the Supreme Court of that State. [Merriment.] In California, as the gentleman is advised almost daily, in the columns of the Sacramento Union, the decisions of the Supreme Court are published. Within a day or two after a decision is rendered, it appears in that journal, and very often there is an entire page or more, containing the Supreme Court decisions. This section is designed to protect and guard the right of publishing the Supreme Court decisions of our State, in the same manner; for the privilege may be enjoyed by any enterprising newspaper, that may be inclined to publish these decisions. One object should be to diffuse among our people, as speedily as possible, an understanding of the decisions of our courts, and this section is intended to accomplish that end in our State. Why, sir, we have now but the twenty-second volume of the California Reports. It is published in very good time, it is true, yet we have had all the decisions it contains six or eight months ago in the columns of the Sacramento Union, without which we would have been entirely ignorant of what those decisions were, for months after they were pronounced by that court.

Mr. NOURSE. I guess the section is all right in that respect.

Mr. BROSNAN. I move to amend by striking out the words "judicial decisions," in the third line, and inserting instead the words "decisions of the Supreme Court;" so that the section will read:

"The Legislature shall provide for the speedy publication of all statute laws of a general nature, and for such decisions of the Supreme Court as it may deem expedient," etc.

I offer this amendment because a judicial decision may be merely a decision of a Justice of the Peace, and it would hardly be worth while to provide for the publication of the decisions of those officers.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was adopted.

CHANGE OF SALARIES.

Section 9 was read, as follows:

SEC. 9. The Legislature may at any time provide by law for increasing or diminishing the salaries or compensation of any of the officers whose salaries or compensation is fixed in this Constitution; provided, no such change of salary or compensation shall apply to any officer during the term for which he may have been elected.

No amendment being offered, the section as read was adopted.

OFFICERS NOT SPECIFIED.

Section 10 was read, as follows:

SEC. 10. All officers whose election or appointment is not otherwise provided for, shall be chosen or appointed as may be prescribed by law.

No amendment was offered, and the section was adopted as read.

TENURE OF OFFICE.

Section 11 was read, as follows:

SEC. 11. The tenure of any office not herein provided for may be declared by law, or when not so declared, such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment; but the Legislature shall not create any office, the tenure of which shall be longer than four years.

Mr. WARWICK. I desire to ask if that will conflict with the terms of the Supreme Court Judges, according to the Judicial article?

Mr. NOURSE. No, sir. That office is not created by the Legislature.

No amendment being proposed, the section as read was adopted.

OFFICES OF STATE OFFICERS.

Section 12 was read, as follows:

SEC. 12. The Governor, Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Controller, and Clerk of the Supreme Court, shall keep their respective offices at the seat of Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. I propose to offer an amendment to this section, striking out the words "State Controller," and inserting instead "Auditor of State," so as to change the official designation of that officer. And in offering this amendment I am only foreshadowing the report of the Schedule Committee, wherein we have determined to provide for making this officer the Auditor, for reasons which I submitted to the committee last evening, and which I will now briefly recapitulate. In the first place, this officer is intended to succeed to and supersede the Auditor of the Territory, and we have numerous laws within our statutes which define and prescribe the duties of the Auditor of the Territory. Again, by the provisions of some sections of the Schedule—I do not know that they have as yet been reported, but they have been agreed upon by the committee—it is proposed that these State officers shall enter upon the discharge of their duties on the first Monday in December. It is also proposed that the Legislature shall not convene until after that day, and consequently considerable further time must elapse before any change can be made in the laws on this or any other matter. In order, therefore, to conform to the laws as we now find them, I desire a change made in the name of the officer. Unless this is done, he can not be governed by the laws now in force, nor in fact by any laws, until the Legislature shall have had an opportunity to change the name by which this officer is to be known.

It is quite immaterial what the official designation may be. In California we have been familiar with that of Controller, but in other

Friday,]

States the officer charged with similar duties is called the Auditor, and the only difference it makes here is, that the laws we already have, designate the officer as Auditor. In most of the older States, I believe, we find the same officer designated as Auditor, or Auditor of Public Accounts. In Michigan he is called the Auditor-General, while in New York he is styled the Controller, and the same possibly in other States.

Mr. WARWICK. In Massachusetts, also.

Mr. JOHNSON. It may be; I do not recollect the facts. But in a majority of the States he is designated as the Auditor. I say it makes no difference what we shall designate this officer, except so far as it may be desirable to conform to the Territorial laws, at least until such time as the State Legislature may change them. As I have stated, it is proposed that all the State officers named shall enter upon their duties on the first Monday in December, whilst the Legislature does not convene till the second Monday in December, and no changes in the law could be effected until some time after the day last named. But the change I have proposed in the name might supersede the necessity of corresponding changes in the laws of the Territory. For these reasons I hope that the amendment will be adopted, so that the officer may be designated as "Auditor of State," instead of "State Controller."

Mr. BROSNAN. I believe the word "Controller" has been used in several sections already passed and enrolled; and if we make the change here, we shall also have to reconsider and amend those sections.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no doubt of that. But the question is whether it will be less difficult for us to make the corresponding changes, admitting that we have in this respect to undo our former work and make changes wherever the word occurs in the Constitution, than it would be for the Legislature to alter the laws. The objections mentioned by the gentleman from Storey occur on the one hand, whilst on the other, it seems to me, there are greater difficulties to be surmounted. There is no single law defining the duties of the Auditor, else the case might be different, but there are references to an officer, by such name, pervading the entire body of our statutory law.

Mr. HOVEY. Cannot we provide in the Schedule that all the Territorial laws relating to the Auditor shall apply to the State Controller, so far as practicable?

Mr. JOHNSON. Possibly the gentleman from Storey might be able to frame a section which would meet the case.

Mr. BROSNAN. We ought to avoid erasures if possible, and it seems to me hardly worth while to make all these amendments merely for the sake of changing the name of the office. It is said a rose would smell as sweet by any other name.

Mr. JOHNSON. Especially if you spell rose—R-o-ss. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROSNAN. No, sir; I spell it r-o-s-e. We can obviate all difficulty by saying in the Schedule that the duties of the Controller shall be as prescribed by law for the Territorial Auditor, until other laws shall be passed by the State Legislature.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Johnson, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section, as read, and it was adopted.

STATE CENSUS.

Section 13 was read, as follows:

SEC. 13. The enumeration of the inhabitants of this State shall be taken under the direction of the Legislature in the year 1865, and 1867, and 1875, and every ten years thereafter; and these enumerations, together with the census that may be taken under the direction of the Congress of the United States in the year 1870, and every subsequent ten years, shall serve as the basis of representation in both Houses of the Legislature.

Mr. DUNNE. As it is generally believed that Congress intends providing that the United States census shall be taken every five years, I move to amend this section, first by striking out the word "shall," in the second line, and inserting "may;" and secondly, by adding after the word "Legislature," in the third line, the words "if deemed necessary." Unless this amendment is adopted, the State will be obliged to incur the expense of taking the census, when there may be no necessity for it.

Mr. NOURSE. We do not need to strike out the word "shall." Let it read, "Shall be taken under the direction of the Legislature if deemed necessary." That is all that is required.

Mr. DUNNE. Very well. There is no question, however, but that the Legislature will do it, if it is necessary, because every county will be anxious to secure the amount of representation to which it may be entitled.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Dunne, and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was adopted.

ELECTION BY PLURALITY.

Section 14 was read, as follows:

SEC. 14. A plurality of votes given at an election by the people, shall constitute a choice, where not otherwise provided by this Constitution.

No amendment being offered, the section as read was adopted.

Mr. WARWICK. Now I move that the Committee rise, report the article back with the amendments, and recommend its passage.

COMPENSATION.

Mr. BANKS. I would inquire of some gentleman more familiar with the subject than I am, whether Section 9, as adopted, does not conflict with some of the provisions of the article on the Judiciary?

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman will observe by the reading that it does not. It has been changed somewhat from the printed form, and one of the amendments is striking out the words "except judicial."

Section 9 was read, as adopted, for information.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Warwick, that the Committee rise and report the article, with the amendments, and it was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article XVI., entitled "Miscellaneous Provisions," had made some amendments thereto, in which he was instructed to ask the concurrence of the Convention, and recommended the passage of the article with such amendments.

The report was accepted, and the Committee of the Whole discharged from the further consideration of the article.

Mr. DUNNE. Now I move the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDENT. No motion is necessary; the recommendations of the Committee are now before the Convention.

The question was taken upon the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole, to refer to the Committee on Schedule, Section 6, relating to the term of office of State officers first elected, etc., and it was referred accordingly.

The PRESIDENT. Unless a division is called for, the question will be upon the several amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNNE. I want a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT. Very well; then the vote will be taken separately on each amendment.

PUBLICATION OF LAWS AND DECISIONS.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment to Section 8, striking out the words "judicial decisions," and inserting instead the words "decisions of the Supreme Court," and it was agreed to.

Mr. WARWICK. If I am not mistaken, there was an amendment in reference to the payment of salaries quarterly, which it occurs to me would include members of the Legislature. Will the Secretary state where that occurs?

The PRESIDENT. That does not occur in this article.

THE STATE CENSUS.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment to Section 13, inserting after the word "Legislature," in the third line, as printed, the words "if deemed necessary," and it was agreed to.

OFFICES OF COUNTY OFFICERS.

Mr. DUNNE. Now I move to amend Section 7 by inserting after "all county officers," the words "County Surveyors and Public Administrators excepted."

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

SALARIES AND COMPENSATION.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend Section 9 by adding thereto the following:

"And provided further, That such salaries or compensation shall not exceed the amounts fixed in Article XI of this Constitution."

The PRESIDENT. I suggest that the gentleman can accomplish the same purpose by striking out the word "increasing," in the former part of the section.

Mr. DUNNE. Then if at some time a salary should be diminished, perhaps improperly, the Legislature would be debarred from increasing it again to the original amount. A salary might be diminished, and then the Legislature might want to raise it again.

Mr. BANKS. I do not know of any country where, at any time, the salaries ought to be higher than we have fixed them here, for the first two years of our State Government. I think we have got them about at the maximum—"the top of the heap"—and I would like to prevent any future increase. I believe we ought to have fixed the salaries definitely—that it was well to fix them, at all events, for the first two years—but at the same time I think it is necessary to say, when we have fixed the salaries for the first two years, that the Legislature cannot raise them afterwards above the rate so established. Hence, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. I am not in favor of so restricting this matter of salaries, because I do not know what prices will be in the future. To be sure, as the salaries are now fixed, they are, as the gentleman from Humboldt says, at the top of the heap. There are other States where the salaries are lower, but where, I am sure, at the same time, that one dime will buy more than five will here. And in those States the salaries are deemed ridiculously small, compared with the amount of compensation which professional men can earn in the practice of their professions, or mechanics at their trades, or ranchmen upon their farms. It seems to me that the salaries we have fixed upon, so far from being high, are really, compared with other States, quite low. If two thousand dollars in one of the States on the Mississippi River, or any one of the Western States, where everything a man requires to live upon is so cheap, is a just and reasonable salary, then, taking into consideration the increased cost of living in this country, ten thousand dollars would be no more than a reasonable salary here. And inasmuch as I never knew of a case where a Legislature was extravagant in the matter of the increase of salaries, I prefer, and I think it is entirely safe, to leave this matter just as it now stands.

Mr. BANKS. As an offset to what the gentleman from Washoe says he has never known, I will say that I have seen a Legislature raise salaries extravagantly high, and I am afraid

Friday,]

CHAPIN—DUNNE—PRESIDENT—CROSMAN—HOVEY.

[July 22.

the same thing might be done in this State. I have already assigned some reasons why I think this restriction should be made, and I will say further, that if it is not adopted, we will most certainly have to meet this objection before the people—an objection which I should consider to be valid—that the Constitutional Convention has limited the salaries for two years, but, at the same time, it has taken very good care to provide the means by which the salaries may be increased at the end of that time. People will say there is no assurance of having a cheap government for over two years. Believing that there is no necessity of encountering any such objection, and believing that it is desirable to adopt such a restriction, on account of other reasons which have been presented, I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted; and I think the people will be gratified if we allow the matter to remain as it is, so that they, through their representatives, may use their own good sense and judgment in respect to salaries in the future. We do not know what the currency will be worth hereafter. It may be so depreciated—although we hope and believe it will not be—that at the end of three or four years, we shall find it absolutely necessary to increase the salaries. At all events, let us leave the matter open for a few years. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Banks, and it was not agreed to.

The article, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE SCHEDULE.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move that the Convention now go into Committee of the Whole on the Schedule. We can take up the ordinance, which we have printed in the newspapers, and dispose of that, and I trust that the report of the Judiciary Committee will also be published by tomorrow morning, so that we may have that before us in printed form.

Mr. DUNNE. The Committee on Schedule has not yet reported the ordinance.

The PRESIDENT. It will not be in order to go into Committee of the Whole on a subject which is not before the Convention.

Mr. DUNNE. I am going to ask for an adjournment now, and I desire to state the reason. The Committee on the Schedule is not ready to report yet, and will require two hours more, at least, to get ready. If we adjourn now the committee can have a meeting of an hour and a half, at all events, during the recess, and that will enable it to get through with a part of its work.

Mr. CHAPIN. I supposed the Schedule Committee had reported the ordinance; that was my impression.

The PRESIDENT. I will state that the Committee on the Schedule found a stumbling block in the way, to-wit: the matter of apportionment. But for that, probably it would have been able to report before this time, on all matters referred to it.

Mr. DUNNE. The committee has had three sessions, and also an extra session this afternoon, and I have been at work what time I could get writing the report. I move that the Convention now take a recess until seven o'clock.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, at four o'clock, P. M., the Convention took a recess until seven o'clock, P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met at 7 o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

The Secretary reported that there was not a quorum in attendance.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DUNNE moved a call of the House, which motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following members responded to their names: Messrs. Banks, Beldeu, Brady, Crosman, Dunne, Frizell, Gibson, Hawley, Hovey, Kennedy, Mason, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, and Mr. President—15.

The Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to arrest and bring in the absentees.

Messrs. Collins, Wetherill, Murdock, Chapin, and Crawford, severally appeared, stated their excuses, and were allowed to take their seats.

Mr. CROSMAN. As there is now a quorum present, I move that further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. DUNNE. I move that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole on whatever further business we have.

The SECRETARY. The only business on the General File is the article on Judicial Department.

Mr. DUNNE. Well, I move that we go into Committee of the Whole on that article.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BANKS in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of Article VI, entitled Judicial Department.

ENUMERATION OF COURTS.

The SECRETARY read Section 1, as follows:

SEC. 1. The Judicial power of this State shall be vested in a Supreme Court, District Courts, in County Courts, and in Justices of the Peace. The Legislature may also establish Courts for municipal purposes only, in incorporated cities and towns.

Mr. HOVEY. I would like to inquire of the Committee on the Judiciary, if in their report they have provided for any County Courts?

Mr. JOHNSON. The Chairman is not here at present, but I will state that in the programme adopted in this judicial article, it is contemplated that there shall be a County Court in one county, and that power shall be given the Legislature to create others, in such counties, and at such times, as may be deemed necessary. The exception made is in regard to Storey County.

Mr. HOVEY. If that is the object of the Committee, it is all very well, but I had intended when we came to the exception in reference to Storey County, to move to strike it out. If the intention is, however, as the gentleman has explained, I will not make the motion now.

No amendment being offered—

THE SUPREME COURT.

Section 2 was read, as follows :

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and two Associate Justices, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum; provided, that the Legislature, by a majority of the members elected to each branch thereof, may, at its second session, or any time thereafter, provide for the election of two additional Associate Justices, and if so increased, three shall constitute a quorum. The majority of the whole Court shall be necessary to render a decision.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Chairman of the Judiciary Committee is still absent, and I feel disinclined, whilst he is not present, to make a motion that would affect materially the provisions of the article. If the section can be read and passed over informally, I have no objection, but will reserve the right to offer hereafter a very material amendment. It was understood when the report was made, that, so far as I was concerned, I should oppose one important feature of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a very important article, and as it has not been printed I will suggest that, if desirable, it can be read through consecutively, for information.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well; let it be read through, and after that it can be taken up by sections. By that time the Chairman may have come in.

The SECRETARY read the entire article, as reported.

COURTS IN STOREY COUNTY.

Mr. HOVEY. There is one amendment which I would like to make, but I suppose it will be out of order at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that the Secretary be allowed to proceed with the reading of the several sections in their order, and they will be open to amendment as they are read.

Mr. HOVEY. The proposition I refer to involves several sections; that is, if we adopt it there are several sections the necessity of which will be obviated. What I propose is, to strike out that part which makes Storey County an exception in regard to the Courts, leaving it in the same condition as the other counties.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment may be moved whenever we come to any section referring to the subject.

Mr. HOVEY. But it is involved in the first section, which we have already passed.

The CHAIRMAN. We can go back and consider that section, if it shall be necessary.

Mr. CROSMAN. I suggest that the best and quickest way to arrive at a conclusion, will be for the gentleman to make his motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. Allow me to suggest, that the better way is for the Secretary to proceed in the regular order with the reading, and when the section is reached it will be in order to move any amendment the gentleman desires.

Mr. CROSMAN. It strikes me that it would be better to make a motion which would settle the matter. The gentleman himself says that one motion would reach it all.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not in order, unless it is a specific amendment; and I raise that objection because we have not the printed article before us.

POSTPONEMENT.

Mr. CHAPIN. I am informed by one of the Reporters, that since the adjournment this afternoon he has telegraphed to Virginia, and his belief is that the article will be published in the morning papers. If that is so, I would inquire whether there is not some other business with which we can proceed, and allow this article to lie over. The printed copies would be of great service to us in the consideration of the article.

Mr. MASON. Oh, let us act upon it to-night. We want to get through, some time.

The SECRETARY. There is nothing else before the Convention now. There is one thing, however, which might perhaps be reported to-night, and that is the Ordinance introduced by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins.)

Mr. JOHNSON. I can fully appreciate the importance of this article. Without doubt it is of very great moment; perhaps more so than any other one article in the entire Constitution, and hence we ought to have it laid before us in printed shape. And for the purpose of enabling us to consider other business, I now move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. The Chairman of the Committee on Schedule will then have sufficient time to report the Ordinance. So much time and labor will necessarily be required to consider the Ordinance, whether now or in the future, and since it is already printed we can to-night more profitably employ ourselves in its consideration, than in that of any other matter.

Mr. HOVEY. I suggest that there are two members from Storey County here now, who probably will not be present to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is one member from Storey who is not here to-night, and probably will be to-morrow. I allude to the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary; and with me that consideration is quite as important as the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. KENNEDY. I hope we shall not delay this matter unnecessarily. I would prefer to decide at once upon the adoption of one of the two opinions which were advocated in the committee. We can very soon determine the question whether we will provide for a County Court in Storey County, or not; and also the question whether we shall have three or five Supreme Court Judges. Those, I understand, are the only bones of contention. I want those matters settled, so that the article may go to the Engrossing Committee to-night. Then they can report some time to-morrow, and we can order it to enrollment, and there will be some prospect of our getting through this week. For one, I am not willing to stay here after Saturday. I will consent to stay till 12 o'clock Saturday night, but if the final adjournment is not to take place till some time next week, I am not willing to wait for it. For that reason I hope we shall go on with the judicial article to-night, if it can possibly be done. The Ordinance, I understand, is made a part of the Schedule, or a part of the report of the Committee on Schedule, and I do not think it will take half an hour to give it all the consideration required, because the committee will make but very few changes in it.

Mr. PROCTOR. I hope we will proceed this evening with the consideration of the article reported by the Judiciary Committee, and for several reasons—

Mr. DUNNE. Is the motion before the Committee debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. In the form in which it was made, the Chair thinks it is debatable.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand that the Judiciary Committee differed on only one or two points, and it seems to me that we can dispose of those questions just as well to-night as to-morrow. Besides, the prospect of our having a fuller attendance to-morrow is exceedingly slim. I am satisfied, from what one gentleman from Storey told me, on leaving, that he will not be here to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman to whom I referred is the chairman of the committee, Mr. Brosnan. He is unwell, this evening, and therefore not able to be here, but will probably be in attendance to-morrow.

Mr. PROCTOR. He may possibly be here, but the gentleman I referred to was Mr. DeLong.

Mr. JOHNSON. This is not a matter which involves simply well defined points of difference, as to whether there shall or not be a County Court in Storey County, or whether we shall have only three Judges of the Supreme Court, or a greater number; but there are other questions to be considered, and doubtless many amendments to be proposed. From a cursory reading of the article, I discovered at least two instances where, what I should regard as very essential provisions, have been omitted, and I am not certain but there may be other omissions. When we come to examine the printed article, it may possibly disclose the fact that there are many material and important amendments necessary to be made in the several sections. Now, sir, I unwilling, without having the article before me in a printed shape, either to propose or to pass upon amendments that may be really necessary.

Why, sir, the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy,) has already suggested to me one seeming discrepancy, in a matter which had not before come to my notice. Here it is provided that the District Courts shall have jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons, and in a subsequent section the County Court of Storey County is invested with jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons, and the persons and estates of minors and insane persons. I cannot discover that jurisdiction in the cases last mentioned is provided for elsewhere, and I think it is not. If I am correct in this assumption, then in all probability material alterations will be found necessary in that as well as in other respects.

Mr. KENNEDY. That very objection was brought up in the committee, and a majority of the committee held that the language of the section relating to District Courts gave jurisdiction over minors, or at all events that the courts would have that jurisdiction. Whether that conclusion was correct or not, I do not undertake to say.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, then, I only regret that so capable a committee should have made a report based on such a fallacy as that the conferring of jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons would give jurisdiction also over the persons and estates of minors. I do not understand it so, and hence the occasion for discussion, and possibly for amendment, arises. Why, then, did not the committee leave the provision so as to read similarly for the County Court of Storey County? Why do they leave out the special provision for jurisdiction in these cases, in one court, and not in another. I am sorry to be compelled to criticise the report of such eminent gentlemen, and especially in the absence of the chairman of the committee, although I feel confident that he would not concur in the view of this matter which seems to be presented by the report of the committee.

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not think the chairman did concur in it. I am quite certain he did not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then it is all the more desirable that he should be present when it is considered, and that we should all have the report before us in such a shape that we can understand it. I now warn those gentlemen who are the earnest advocates of a State Government, not to take hasty action on this matter. Let them not in the last hours of our session, thus hastily pass over the most important parts of the instrument they are preparing—that portion, upon the proper construction of which, depends the future security of our fortunes, our liberties, and our lives. I regard this article as being quite as material, and transcending in importance, any which we have considered, or can be called to deliberate upon. Let us, therefore, give it that consideration which its importance requires and merits. I hope it will be postponed until we can have an opportunity of ascertaining from the printed sections, the defects which may exist in this, or other particulars.

Mr. MURDOCK. I hope that the article will be postponed, for the reason that I look upon it as one of the most important questions before the Convention; and now that we have spent so much time upon other portions of the Constitution, I do not feel like hurrying this through, and spoiling it, either to-night or to-morrow night. I would rather stay here another week, if necessary. I think I understood, from the hasty reading of the article, enough to know that there are certain things in it to which I should object, and want to see amended; and for this reason, and because I want the Convention to act understandingly on this all-important business—the most important which we have had before us—I hope the article will be postponed until we can have printed copies of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am well aware that it is the very sincere desire and earnest wish of a large number of gentlemen who are members of the Convention, to be able to conclude their labors by to-morrow night, but I think I am arrogating nothing to myself in warning them that the utmost diligence will not enable them to do so. I believe that, with due diligence, by Monday evening we can close our labors, in such a way as will give them a respectable conclusion; but I think if it is determined to finally adjourn to-morrow night, the result will be that the instrument on which we have spent so much time and labor, will pass from our hands in an imperfect, unfinished condition, which would reflect discredit on this body. Therefore, I hope that the motion to postpone will prevail.

Mr. CHAPIN. Since it has been remarked that my colleague (Mr. Brosnan) will not be present this evening on account of illness, I am sure that gentlemen will not insist on proceeding with this article, the most important one before us; for that gentleman has devoted days and weeks to its consideration and preparation. He may have erred in some particulars, but I know that his mind has been most intently fixed upon the subject, and for one, I am not willing to go on with the consideration of the article until he can be present to give us the benefit of his views upon its various features. No gentleman is more ready than he to acknowledge a fault or an error, when it is pointed out, and he will be prompt to correct any error as soon as it is made known. His mind is so fully stored with this subject that I want him here to help us with his knowledge and his judgment, and I am not willing to go forward in the consideration of the article without him.

Mr. PROCTOR. He is here. [Laughter.]

[Here Mr. BROSNAN entered the chamber and took his seat.]

Mr. CHAPIN. I am sincerely anxious to get through as early as possible, but I think we can find business enough for the evening, and leave this matter until to-morrow, when we can have it before us in a printed form.

Mr. HOVEY. I am not willing to go on with the consideration of this article when four or five members from Storey County are absent on account of sickness.

Mr. FRIZELL. Have we any assurance that if we postpone this article, we shall have it in print to-morrow?

Mr. CHAPIN. I can only say that one of the gentlemen who sits at the reporters' table, tells me that he has telegraphed to his paper, and that the presumption is it will be published in the morning. I cannot vouch for it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Was it not sent to one of the papers several days ago?

Mr. CHAPIN. I am not aware; I believe it was sent to the Union. I am informed that it was sent to the Enterprise yesterday, as soon as the report was made.

Mr. DUNNE. I would like to make a remark which probably may have some influence on the decision of this motion. I think the Committee on Schedule is now prepared to furnish as much work as the Convention can comfortably get through in one or two hours.

Mr. CHAPIN. Then let us rise.

The question was taken on Mr. Johnson's motion that the committee rise and report progress, and it was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article VI, entitled Judicial Department, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

QUESTION OF POSTPONEMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am about to make a motion; I do not know whether it will be received with favor or not, but in order to test the sense of the Convention, I move that Article VI, entitled Judicial Department, be made the special order for Monday morning at eleven o'clock.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to amend by making it Monday week. You will have as many here then as you will next Monday.

Mr. COLLINS. Is that latter motion before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman make the motion seriously?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir; if the gentleman insists on his motion, I do on mine.

Friday.] COLLINS—KENNEDY—CHAPIN—HOVEY—HAWLEY—BANKS—WETHERILL. [July 22.

Mr. COLLINS. I certainly hope that the amendment will not prevail. It occurs to me that gentlemen should not, just at the close of our session, insist upon throwing this whole matter into confusion by exacting from the Convention what is really an impossibility. I am as anxious to get home to my business as any man; but when I accepted this position, I accepted it in the best of faith, and with a determination to discharge its duties to the best of my ability.

The PRESIDENT. In other words, you enlisted for the war.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, sir; for the war. I would have been glad to get through in three or four days, if it could have been done; but with the work before us, it was impossible. It seems to me that this Convention has devoted its time and labor attentively and faithfully to its work, and done all it could do thus far, and it appears to me unjust, not only to those members who are willing to remain to the end, but to every member of the Convention, to urge this matter through in such haste that we shall be likely to leave the instrument we frame in a condition to reflect discredit upon ourselves, and possibly to bring disaster upon the State, if it shall be adopted. I think every member owes it not only to his constituency, but to himself also, to remain here until the work of the Convention is done. Let us faithfully and conscientiously discharge the duties which we have assumed.

Mr. KENNEDY. I hope my motion will not prevail, unless that of the gentleman from Douglas (Mr. Hawley's) does; and if that shall be carried, I trust that mine will be also. Then some of us, at least, who live at a distance from the capital, will have an opportunity to go home and come back again, whereas, by the motion of the gentleman from Douglas, we shall not have time for that. I think this Convention has been in session long enough. I believe we have discussed the matters before us sufficiently, and now let members present their amendments and vote upon them. I think the time for talking has gone by, and the time for voting come. I do not see the necessity or the justice of keeping members here, away from their homes and their business, for so long a time. Now, sir, I believe that if this subject is made the special order for Monday morning, or Monday afternoon at two o'clock, if that is the motion, there will not be a quorum in the city at that time, while if we go to work in earnest now, we can finish our labors by to-morrow night. We must do that, or we shall have no quorum, and will be unable to finish at all.

Mr. CHAPIN. I really hope that the gentleman from Douglas will withdraw his motion. I feel on this subject, I presume, pretty much as the gentleman from Lyon (Mr. Kennedy) does. If we can do it, let us finish to-morrow night. I do not want to leave, however, till our work is done—and I will sit here till the last section is adopted—but I want to keep at work. Let us make no motions for postponement, and do nothing else, but stop all unnecessary debate, and take up article by article, and section by section, and vote upon them till we get through. If we can reach the end to-morrow night, all right; if not, let us stay over till Monday, and keep at our work till it is finished. I do not want to go home till we have reached the end of our labors.

Mr. HOVEY. Does the gentleman think we can finish to-morrow night?

Mr. CHAPIN. No, sir.

Mr. HOVEY. Then does he desire to work on Sunday?

Mr. CHAPIN. No, sir; I would not work on Sunday, but stay till Monday, and then keep at it till we get it all done.

Mr. HAWLEY. Towards the close of the session of last year, I was employed as Assistant Enrolling Clerk, and I saw enough then of the confusion and disorder resulting from attempts to hurry things through, to convince me that the most suicidal course this Convention could adopt would be to attempt to hurry its work to a close to-morrow night. I will modify my motion, however, so as to postpone the article until to-morrow at two o'clock, in order to obviate the objections which have been raised against postponing anything beyond Saturday night.

I will state, for the information of gentlemen, that the Enrolling Clerk has promised, and I believe he will fulfil his promise, that to-morrow morning the Enrolling Committee shall be able to report back, correctly enrolled, every line which has passed into the hands of that committee up to the present time; but I wish to say further, that there are other matters of great length to be enrolled, and I believe it is an utter impossibility to have the whole instrument enrolled and presented in proper shape by to-morrow night at twelve o'clock. Therefore, I say that any plan of proceeding, based upon the hypothesis that it is possible to get through to-morrow night, can only result in confusion and disaster to the cause which gentlemen have at heart.

Mr. BANKS. I do not like the idea of making the article a special order. I would prefer to leave it so that when we get through with one thing we can go to work upon another. I will therefore move to lay the article on the table, and then we can take it up whenever we shall be in a position to give it proper consideration.

Mr. WETHERILL. I desire to say only two or three words, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. BANKS. I will withdraw the motion, then.

Mr. WETHERILL. A great many members are talking of going home before the work is completed, unless it can be completed within the bounds of a certain time which they specify. Now there is no one more anxious to be enabled to attend to his private business than I am, and I think my business is suffering in consequence of my absence as much as that of any member. But, sir, having accepted the position of a delegate to this Convention, (which I did with great reluctance,) having consented to come here and help to frame a State Constitution, I regard it as being my imperative duty to remain here until that work is completed to the very end. If I were to shirk that duty, or turn aside from it to give my attention to my private business, to the detriment of this important work, for one I should ever after blush to meet those who sent me here.

PRESIDENT—MASON.

[July 22.

The PRESIDENT. I beg the indulgence of the Convention, whilst I submit a few words on this subject. I do not believe any reproaches can justly be cast upon the members of the Convention, for want of assiduousness and diligence in their labors. Gentlemen well understand that we have met here daily at nine o'clock in the morning, and with the exception of a recess from twelve until two o'clock, and another from five till seven, have remained in session very often as late as ten or eleven o'clock at night; and I believe on one occasion, when there was said to be some rumors of seceding from the Convention, until near midnight. And aside from our labors in the body of the Convention, we have had laborious duties to perform in attendance upon the several committees, and prolonged sessions of those bodies have been incidents of repeated occurrence.

We have not yet been in session half the length of time occupied by the Convention of last year, although our labors have been quite as arduous as theirs. So far as I am concerned, it has been a great sacrifice to attend to my duties in this body; nevertheless, with the exception of a very few hours, I have been in attendance at all the sittings of the Convention, and of the several committees of which I have been named a member. I am desirous of closing our work as quickly as possible; but at the same time I know it is necessary, though we may judge we are at the close of our labors, that we should scan with a critical eye the various provisions of this important article, and know that we do not incorporate anything into this Constitution that will make it an instrument to which we should be unwilling to affix our names.

Mr. MASON. The judiciary, sir, constitutes one of the coördinate branches of our proposed State Government, and therefore in the investigation of that article which establishes, defines, and limits the powers and duties of that coördinate branch, I think we should take care that nothing is passed over lightly, or with only slight consideration. I do not desire that members should be encouraged in occupying much of the time in talking, but let them spend some portion of the time in thinking these matters over, and let them then judiciously exercise the prerogative which belongs to them as members of the Convention, in casting their votes on the various questions as they arise for consideration.

I came to this Convention against my will, having been nominated while I was absent in another county, and elected during such absence; yet I felt that I was under an obligation to the people who had elected me to come here and represent them, and perform the duties required of me. My colleague (Mr. Wetherill) has expressed his anxiety to get through speedily and go home on account of his own business, and I share in that feeling. My business is suffering in my absence as much as his. But, sir, I enlisted for the war, and I am for fighting it through. I want to present a Constitution that will meet, and deserve to meet, the approbation of the people of Nevada Territory, so that it may become the State of Nevada. That is the end I want to accomplish. I have been opposed to adopting a State Government on a previous occasion, upon principle, because of our poverty, and because of our isolated position; but, sir, it is at this time a Federal call. [Good!] It has come to us from Washington—an appeal to our patriotism, an appeal to the loyalty of our hearts, and I respond to that appeal. And, sir, in this Constitution shall be such as to meet with my approbation, I will go back to Esmeralda, and to other counties in this Territory, as I may have opportunity, and will advocate it with all the zeal and energy in my power, and labor to induce the people to sustain and support the Constitution, in response to the call of the government; but, sir, unless the Constitution be such as I can conscientiously approve, I cannot give it that support, however much I might desire to do so; because, if I did, I should be derelict to my duty, and basely unfaithful to the people who have placed me in this position. It is for this important reason, sir, that I am willing to stay here until Tuesday, Wednesday, or even Thursday night, if necessary, in order to consummate and perfect our labors, and prepare this Constitution in such shape that it can be presented, with argument and reason, to the favorable consideration of the people of Nevada Territory.

I want to see to it carefully, sir, in the consideration of this judicial article, that there is no encroachment of one of the coördinate branches upon the other—that the legislative, executive, and judicial departments are kept entirely distinct and separate. For I wish to say—and I have not heretofore occupied much of the time of the Convention, nor do I propose to now—that I hold to the doctrine advanced by John Jay, one of the most eminent statesmen that ever breathed in the United States of America, that whenever there is an encroachment of one of the coördinate branches of the government upon another, liberty is in danger. I want no such encroachment, but I want to keep each department separate and distinct from the other, and consequently I want to exercise care and circumspection in the investigation of this judicial article, wherein our rights of person and property are involved.

BANKS—FRIZELL—DUNNE—COLLINS—JOHNSON.

[July 22.

But I perceive that my time is up, and I will not further trespass upon the patience of the Convention.

Mr. BANKS. I renew my motion to lay this matter on the table.

Mr. FRIZELL. I wish to say one word on this subject. ["Leave, leave!"]

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman from Humboldt withdraw his motion?

Mr. BANKS. I cannot withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT. Then the Chair is reluctantly compelled to rule the gentleman from Storey not in order.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Banks to lay the article on the table, and the motion was agreed to.

THE ELECTION ORDINANCE.

Mr. DUNNE, from the Committee on Schedule, submitted the following report :

MR. PRESIDENT :—Your Committee on Schedule, to whom was referred an ordinance concerning elections, report the same back, and recommend the following amendments :

1st. In Section 1, strike out the words "member of," in the last line but one, and insert instead the words "Representative in."

2d. Strike out Section 15.

And they respectfully recommend its passage with such amendments.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

E. F. DUNNE, Chairman, pro tem.

The report was adopted, and the ordinance having been read, as amended, was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—ORDINANCE.

On motion of Mr. CHAPIN, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. CHAPIN in the Chair,) for the consideration of the ordinance just reported from the Committee on Schedule.

The SECRETARY read the preamble, as follows :

WHEREAS, The Enabling Act passed by the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and approved March 21st, A. D. 1864, requires that the Convention charged with the duty of framing a Constitution for a State Government "shall provide by ordinance for submitting said Constitution to the people of the Territory of Nevada for their ratification or rejection," on a certain day prescribed therein : therefore, this Convention, organized in pursuance of said Enabling Act, do establish the following

ORDINANCE.

No amendment being offered, the preamble as read, was adopted.

Section 1 was read, as follows :

SECTION 1. On the first Wednesday of September, A. D. 1864, this Constitution shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said Territory in the several counties thereof, for their approval or rejection ; and further, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1864, there shall be a general election in the several counties of said Territory, for the election of State officers, Supreme, District, and County Judges, members of the Legislature, Representatives in Congress, and three Presidential electors.

No amendment was offered, and the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 2 was read, as follows :

SEC. 2. All persons qualified by the laws of said Territory to vote for Representatives to the General Assembly on the said twenty-first day of March, including those in the army of the United States, both within and beyond the boundaries of said Territory, and also all persons who may by the aforesaid laws be qualified to vote on the first Wednesday of September, A. D. 1864, including those in the aforesaid army of the United States, within and without the boundaries of said Territory, may vote for the adoption or rejection of said Constitution on the day last above named. In voting upon this Constitution, each elector shall deposit in the ballot-box a ticket, wherein shall be clearly written or printed "Constitution, Yes," or "Constitution, No," or such other words that shall clearly indicate the intention of the elector.

No amendment being offered, the section was adopted as read.

Section 3 was read, as follows :

SEC. 3. All persons qualified by the laws of said Territory to vote on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1864, including those in the army of the United States within and beyond the boundaries of said Territory, may vote on the day last above named for State officers, Supreme, District, and County Judges, Members of the Legislature, Member of Congress, and three Presidential electors to the Electoral College.

Mr. COLLINS. I move to make the same amendment in this section as was made by the Committee in Section 1 ; that is, to strike out the words "member of," in the last line but one, and insert instead the words "Representative in."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 4 was read, as follows :

SEC. 4. The elections provided in this ordinance shall be held at such places as shall be designated by the Boards of Commissioners of the several counties in said Territory. The Judges and Inspectors of said elections shall be appointed by said Commissioners, and the said elections shall be conducted in conformity with the existing laws of said Territory in relation to holding the general election.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 5 was read, as follows :

SEC. 5. The Judges and Inspectors of Elections shall carefully count each ballot immediately after said elections, and forthwith make duplicate returns thereof to the Clerks of the said County Commissioners of their respective counties, and said Clerks shall immediately transmit an abstract of the same, inclosed in an envelope, by the most safe and expeditious conveyance, to the Governor of said Territory, marked "Election Returns."

Mr. JOHNSON. I would ask the chairman of the committee whether there is a provision in this Ordinance to the effect that these votes shall be cast with the use of separate ballots? We have at the same time to vote for a Territorial Legislature, and I desire to learn whether there is anything in the Ordinance to prevent that vote being placed upon the same ballot with the vote of "Constitution—Yes," or "Constitution—No?"

Mr. COLLINS. No, sir ; because I thought that, being a Territorial election, the vote might all be taken together, on one ballot. And in the subsequent section, in relation to the soldiers' vote, I have made provision for but one ballot, as gentlemen will see when that is reached.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 6 was read, as follows :

SEC. 6. Upon the receipt of said returns, and the returns of the soldiers' vote, as hereinafter provided, or within twenty days after the elections, if said returns be not sooner received, it shall be the duty of the Board of Canvassers—to consist of the Governor, United States District Attorney, and Chief Justice of said Territory—to canvass the returns of said elections, both Civil and Military, in the presence of all who may wish to be present, and immediately publish an abstract of the same in some newspaper of said Territory, and shall forward them by mail or otherwise—copies of said newspaper to the clerks of each county of said Territory, for the use of the county and township officers thereof. The said Board shall, after the said November election and canvassing of its votes, issue certificates of election to such persons as were elected on the said first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, A. D. 1864. The Governor of said Territory, immediately after ascertaining that this Constitution has been ratified by the people, shall make proclamation of the fact in some newspaper as aforesaid, and thenceforth this Constitution shall be ordained and established as the Constitution of the State of Nevada.

Mr. COLLINS. It will be seen that this section contemplates the sending of a blank number of the newspaper, containing abstracts of the returns, to each county, for the use of the county officers, instead of incurring the expense of having them published in extenso. I would like to see that blank filled up.

Mr. MASON. I will move to fill the blank with the word "ten."

Mr. BANKS. I think that is not enough. Certainly ten is a very small number. I understand the proposition to be, that instead of publishing any great number of these election returns, an abstract may be published in one newspaper—in a supplement, I suppose—and that is to be sent to the county clerks for distribution in the several counties. If I am correct in that, then I think there ought to be sent to each county a number equal, at least, to the number of voters in such county. I will move to amend so as to provide for sending a number to each county corresponding with the number of voters therein.

Mr. COLLINS. I would inquire, what is the necessity for that? The law requires that election returns shall be made to reach certain parties, and hence official advertisement is made; but in this case it is presumed that the whole Territory will understand what has been the result of the election. Every local paper will publish it as a matter of news. Now suppose, for instance, that twenty papers are sent to each County Clerk; they can be distributed through the county, sent to different persons and offices, and posted up in public places, and the necessary information will be disseminated, without any doubt. Last year the returns were published in every county, and a long bill of expense was run up, without securing any material advantage in return. I think if a certain number of the abstract of returns, as published officially in one newspaper, is provided to be sent to each county, that is all that is required.

Mr. JOHNSON. If we can have the returns published as advantageously as last year, it might be well to publish them.

Mr. BANKS. As it relates only to the returns of the election, I will withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to fill the blank with the word "ten."

Mr. WARWICK. I move to amend by making the number fifty. We have only nine counties in the State, and it will be a very small additional expense. I think fifty is a small enough number.

Mr. CROSMAN. What is the necessity for sending out any number of copies of the official result? As the gentleman from Storey has stated, every newspaper will publish the result, and every voter in the Territory will know it long before the official returns are published.

Mr. COLLINS. There may be some counties where no newspapers are printed, and I think it would be well to furnish leading men in the several towns with the official returns, so that they may post them up for public information. In those counties where newspapers are published, I have no doubt the information will be furnished through such newspapers.

Mr. CROSMAN. I move to amend by striking out all that part relating to newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not now in order; there is already an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Last year, I know, it was considered quite a desirable thing to accommodate those counties where there were no newspapers, but I am of the opinion that pretty much every enlightened man in the Territory takes at least one good newspaper, and certainly every good newspaper will publish the vote on the Constitution.

Mr. COLLINS. This provision refers also to the returns of the election of State officers.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Very well; that makes no difference. The common charge of the newspapers for such a publication is about nine hundred dollars, I believe. I hope the whole thing will be voted down.

Mr. WARWICK. I will modify my amendment by making it "one hundred," instead of "fifty." When the form is once set up, the additional copies printed will cost only about a cent apiece, and I do not believe the whole thing will cost the State more than one hundred dollars.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope we shall decide not to furnish any copies at all, because I believe the bill would probably be extravagantly high. I think the gentleman from Lander is guided by mere opinion on the subject of the expense, rather than by any positive knowledge, and in my opinion, there is no newspaper office in the Territory that would set up a form containing the entire vote of the Territory of Nevada, at such election, for any such sum as one or two hundred dollars, when the price of composition is one dollar per thousand ems. We should find that the bill would be enormous, and I really cannot see the necessity for it, or any advantage to be gained, so long as every newspaper will publish the result as a matter of news. And what use the county officials can make of the copies sent them, is entirely beyond my comprehension. I trust that we shall not provide for incurring any such expense.

Friday.]

HAWLEY—CROSMAN—COLLINS.

[July 22.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Warwick, to fill the blank with the words "one hundred," and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Mason, to fill the blank with the word "ten," and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CROSMAN. Now my motion will be in order. I move to strike out all that part of the section which proposes to have the result of the election published, and copies sent to county clerks.

Mr. COLLINS. I hope the Convention will not strike out the provision for publication. If it is done, how are they to get it into the newspapers?

Mr. CROSMAN. Any paper would publish it as news.

Mr. COLLINS. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It should be the duty of the Board of Canvassers, after getting the complete returns, to publish them. The provision for sending copies was put in merely with a view to avoiding the great expense involved in publishing the returns from the whole State in each county. I think it may be wise to strike out that provision, but certainly the official abstract of returns ought to be published, under the signatures of the members of the Board of Canvassers. Such a publication would be authoritative, and then the newspapers could scatter the information therein contained to the four winds.

The SECRETARY. What is the portion proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. CROSMAN. I will modify my amendment so as to strike out these words only:

"And shall forward them by mail or otherwise, — copies of said newspaper, to the clerks of each county of said Territory, for the use of the county and township officers thereof."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 7 was read, as follows:

SEC. 7. For the purpose of taking the vote of the electors of said Territory who may be in the army of the United States, the Adjutant-General of said Territory shall, on or before the fifth day of August next following, make out a list in alphabetical order, and deliver the same to the Governor, of the names of all the electors, residents of said Territory, who shall be in the army of the United States, stating the number of the regiment, battalion, squadron of cavalry, or battery of artillery, and the letter of the company to which such elector belongs, and also the county and township of his residence in said Territory.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 8 was read, as follows:

SEC. 8. The Governor shall classify and arrange the aforesaid returned list, and shall make therefrom separate lists of the electors belonging to each regiment, battalion, squadron, and battery from said Territory in the service of the United States, and shall, on or before the fifteenth day of August following, transmit, by mail or otherwise, to the commanding officer of each regiment, battalion, squadron, and battery a list of electors belonging thereto, which said list shall specify the name, residence, and rank of each elector and company to which he belongs, if to any, and also the county and township to which he belongs and in which he is entitled to vote.

No amendment was offered, and the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 9, was read, as follows:

SEC. 9. Between the hours of nine o'clock, A. M., and three o'clock, P. M., on each of the election days hereinafter named, a ballot box or suitable receptacle for votes shall be opened under the immediate charge and direction of three of the highest officers in command, for the reception of votes from the electors whose names are upon said list, at each place where a regiment, battalion, squadron, or battery of soldiers from said Territory in the army of the United States may be on that day; at which time and place said electors shall be entitled to vote for all officers for which by reason of their residence in the several counties in said Territory they are authorized to vote, as fully as they would be entitled to vote in the several counties and townships in which they reside, and the votes so given by such electors, at such time and place, shall be considered, taken, and held to have been given by them in the respective counties and townships in which they are resident.

No amendment being proposed, the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 10 was read, as follows:

SEC. 10. Each ballot deposited for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution, in the army of the United States, shall have distinctly written or printed thereon, "Constitution, Yes," or "Constitution, No;" and further, for the election of State officers, Supreme, District, and County Judges, members of the Legislature, member of Congress, and three Presidential Electors, the name and office of the person voted for shall be plainly written or printed on one piece of paper. The name of each elector voting as aforesaid shall be checked upon the said list at the time of voting by one of the said officers having charge of the ballot-box. The said officers having charge of the election shall count the votes and compare them with the checked list immediately after the closing of the ballot-box.

Mr. COLLINS. I move to amend this section also, by striking out the words "member of," in the seventh line, and inserting instead the words "Representative in."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment was proposed, and the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 11 was read, as follows:

SEC. 11. All the ballots cast, together with the said voting list checked as aforesaid, shall be immediately sealed up and sent forthwith to the Governor of said Territory, at Carson City, by mail or otherwise, by the commanding officer, who shall also make out and certify duplicate returns of votes given according to the forms hereinafter prescribed, seal up and immediately transmit the same to the said Governor, at Carson City, by mail or otherwise, the day following the transmission of the ballots, and the voting list herein named.

[July 22.

No amendment being offered, the section as read, was adopted.

Section 12 was read, as follows :

SEC. 12. The form of returns of votes to be made by the commanding officers to the said Governor shall be as follows, viz :

Returns of soldiers' votes in the (here insert the regiment, detachment, battalion, squadron, or battery.)

(For first election—On the Constitution.)

I—, hereby certify, that on the first Wednesday of September, A. D. 1864, the electors belonging to the (here insert the name of the regiment, detachment, battalion, squadron, or battery) cast the following number of votes for and against the Constitution for the State of Nevada, viz :

For "Constitution—Yes."—(Number of votes written in full and in figures.)

Against "Constitution—No."—(Number of votes written in full and in figures.)

(Second election—For State and other officers.)

I—, hereby certify, that on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, A. D. 1864, the electors belonging to the (here insert as above) cast the following number of votes for the several officers and persons hereinafter named, viz :

For Governor.—(Names of persons voted for, number of votes for each person voted for written in full, and also in figures, against the name of each person.)

For Lieutenant-Governor.—(Names of candidates, number of votes cast for each, written out and in figures, as above.)

Continue as above till the list is completed.

Attest, A. B.

Commanding officer of the (here insert regiment, detachment, battalion, squadron, or battery, as the case may be.)

Mr. HOVEY. The language used, as the Secretary read it, was "against the Constitution, no." It seems to me that cannot be correct.

Mr. FRIZELL. That is the correct form.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest that in the third line, after the words "shall be," we should insert the words, "in substance," so as to read, "shall be, in substance, as follows"—so that the returns may not be invalidated for non-compliance with the literal form, as prescribed, whilst there is a substantial compliance. It is important only to preserve the substance, without regard to the form of expression.

Mr. COLLINS. If the gentleman will offer that as an amendment, I see no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend by inserting the words suggested.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

Section 13 was read, as follows :

SEC. 13. The Governor of said Territory is requested to furnish each commanding officer within and beyond the boundaries of said Territory, proper and sufficient blanks for said returns.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

Section 14 was read, as follows :

SEC. 14. The provisions of this ordinance in regard to the soldiers' votes, shall apply to future elections under this Constitution, and be in full force until the Legislature shall provide by law for taking the votes of citizens of said Territory in the army of the United States.

Mr. COLLINS. I desire to offer an amendment in Section 6, in regard to the vote on the Constitution, if the Secretary will read the section again.

The SECRETARY read Section 6.

Mr. COLLINS. I desire to move to insert this language :

"And if the majority of all the votes cast for and against this Constitution shall be in its favor, then the Governor shall immediately make proclamation."

Mr. PROCTOR. I would like to offer an amendment there, to strike out "United States District Attorney," as one of the Board of Canvassers, and insert instead "the President of this Convention."

Mr. JOHNSON. No, no. Such an amendment would conflict with the Enabling Act.

Mr. COLLINS. The language in the Enabling Act does not permit it. It provides that "the returns of said election shall be made to the acting Governor of said Territory, who, with the United States District Attorney and Chief Justice of said Territory, or any two of them, shall canvass the same," etc.

Mr. PROCTOR. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. My amendment is to amend the section by inserting the words which I have read, so that the section will read :

"Upon the receipt of said returns and the returns of the soldiers' vote, as hereinafter provided, or within twenty days after the elections, if said returns be not sooner received, it shall be the duty of the Board of Canvassers, to consist of the Governor, United States District Attorney, and Chief Justice of said Territory, to canvass the returns of said elections, both civil and military, in the presence of all who may wish to be present, and if the majority of all the votes cast for and against this Constitution shall be in its favor, then the Governor shall immediately publish an abstract of the same in some newspaper of said Territory, and shall make proclamation of the fact," etc.

Mr. JOHNSON. Allow me to suggest that a further amendment is required in the same connection, which might be made at the same time, so as to render this section conformable to the Enabling Act. It is to add after the names of the officers constituting the Board of Canvassers, the words "or any two of them." Such is the reading of the Enabling Act.

Mr. COLLINS. I am very positive that those words were contained in my original draft of the ordinance.

Mr. HAWLEY. It seems to me that the phraseology is not as accurate as it should be. I think the language ought to be "adoption or rejection," instead of "for and against."

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman point out the difference between the two forms of expression?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not particular about the language, but I must confess that I would prefer the other form.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Collins, and it was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. Now I move, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) to insert after the word "Territory," where it first occurs, the words "or any two of them."

Friday,] JOHNSON—COLLINS—CHAPIN—BANKS—PROCTOR—HOVEY—MASON—DUNNE. [July 22.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to call attention to the latter part of this section, which reads as follows :

"The Governor of said Territory, immediately after ascertaining that this Constitution has been ratified by the people, shall make proclamation of the fact in some newspaper as aforesaid, and thenceforth this Constitution shall be ordained and established as the Constitution of the State of Nevada."

I suggest whether this is not unnecessary, since the amendment just adopted in the former part of the section, and also whether it is not really in conflict with the Enabling Act, which makes it the province of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation? The language of the Enabling Act is :

"Whereupon it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation, declaring the State admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, without any further action on the part of Congress."

It appears to me that the Enabling Act is conclusive on that point.

Mr. COLLINS. I think we have a right to consider that when this Constitution is ratified by the people of this Territory, it is adopted by the Congress of the United States. Congress has simply provided in the Enabling Act that upon the receipt of official information of such action by the people, the President shall perform the ministerial act of issuing his proclamation.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit that under the Enabling Act, the act of admission is not complete until the President of the United States shall have issued his proclamation. That is the act of completion named in the Enabling Act, and not the proclamation of the Governor, or of any other person in authority.

Mr. COLLINS. I am not sure but the suggestion is a good one.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit it merely as a suggestion. I do not think there is any necessity for such a provision. Neither the President of the United States nor the Governor of this Territory can add to or subtract from the terms and conditions of the Enabling Act. It is an authorized Act of the people of the United States, providing for our admission into the Union upon certain contingencies, but the fact is not completed until the President shall have issued his proclamation, based upon the action of the people of Nevada adopting the Constitution and form of State Government which their Convention shall have framed. That consummates the work, and to provide that anybody else shall proclaim the fact appears to me to be superfluous in the extreme. Therefore, I propose that we should strike out all that portion of the section.

Mr. CHAPIN. If the President should for any reason withhold his proclamation, a provision of this nature would place us in rather an embarrassing position.

Mr. COLLINS. I would ask the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) whether this will not suit his idea? Amend that latter portion of the section so as to read as follows :

"The Governor of said Territory, immediately after ascertaining that this Constitution has been ratified by the people, shall make proclamation of the fact in some newspaper as aforesaid, and when the President of the United States shall have issued his proclamation, declaring the State admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, thenceforth this Constitution shall be ordained and established as the Constitution of the State of Nevada."

Mr. JOHNSON. The main objection is, that the entire matter is superfluous. The act is fully performed when the President of the United States issues his proclamation, and no act of the Governor or anybody else can impart additional strength to it. The very instant the President of the United States issues his proclamation, the work is completed, and the State of Nevada at once becomes one of the States of the Union.

Mr. BANKS. I see very clearly the necessity for an amendment of the character suggested, and I hope time will be given to prepare one in proper shape.

Mr. PROCTOR. It seems to me it would be proper to strike out all after that portion requiring the Governor to issue his proclamation.

Mr. JOHNSON. It may be well enough to provide that the Governor shall declare the fact, if the Constitution shall be adopted, that a majority has voted in its favor. We might adopt so much of the section as reads thus :

"The Governor of said Territory, immediately after ascertaining that this Constitution has been ratified by the people, shall make proclamation of the fact in some newspaper as aforesaid."

If we stop here it is quite sufficient; and I will move, as an amendment, to strike out all which follows the language I have just quoted, in the last three lines of the section as printed.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOVEY. My attention has been called by one of the reporters to the language of Section 12, where it provides for the mode of voting for and against the Constitution. It says, "Against Constitution—No," and there appear to be two negatives. I am not sure about the correctness of the language.

Mr. MASON. Two negatives become equivalent to an affirmative, because one destroys, or reverses the sense of the other.

Mr. DUNNE. That is all right as it reads. It says, "For Constitution—Yes," and "Against Constitution—No." All it wants is a comma, or some proper punctuation mark, after the words "for" and "against." The vote "for," is understood to be the vote "Constitution—Yes," and the vote "against," is the vote "Constitution—No."

Mr. COLLINS. There is simply a word understood there—the word "Constitution." If that were supplied the reading would be, "For Constitution—Constitution, Yes," and "Against Constitution—Constitution, No."

Friday,]

TAGLIABUE—BANKS—COLLINS—FRIZELL—HAWLEY.

[July 22.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. If there is no further amendment, I move the adoption of the Ordinance as amended.

Mr. BANKS. Is there any provision for making returns to the county clerks?—or is it presumed that the Governor will transmit them? It occurs to me that official information should be furnished in some way to the several counties, of the number of votes cast for the various candidates for county officers. It will be observed that by the terms of the Ordinance, the rules therein prescribed are to govern in the election of all officers under this Constitution, and the provisions in regard to the soldiers' vote are to apply to future elections, until the Legislature shall make other provisions on the subject. I may be in error, but nevertheless I make the inquiry.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not know that I get the idea exactly.

Mr. BANKS. In this Ordinance, in addition to prescribing rules for voting for and against the Constitution, is it not also provided that the same rules shall also apply in voting at any elections, previous to the enactment of any law on the subject by the Legislature?

Mr. COLLINS. It is.

Mr. BANKS. Well, my inquiry is—does it provide in any manner for the making of returns of such elections to the various counties?

Mr. COLLINS. It requires the judges and inspectors of elections to make returns of the votes to the respective County Commissioners, and the clerks will forward the returns to the Board of Canvassers.

Mr. BANKS. How about the soldiers' vote?

Mr. COLLINS. The returns are to be made by their commanding officers, wherever they may be. The commanding officer is required, immediately upon the counting of the votes by the three highest officers in command, to seal up the returns and send them forthwith to the Governor, who, after the canvass, taking the military and civil returns together, is required to publish an abstract of the same in some newspaper, — copies of which are to be sent to the county clerks. No—that latter provision, I believe, was stricken out.

Mr. BANKS. Then I understand—this provision last referred to having been stricken out—that there is really no provision for any official mode by which the county officers of the various counties are to be notified as to the votes cast for the local officers. That being the case, it will be necessary to adopt some such provision; and I think our action in striking that out was hasty and ill advised. The result is, that there is now no provision made for notifying the various county officers of the number of votes cast by the soldiers for local officers, and it is evidently a defect. It occurs to me that the best thing we can do, is to reinstate the portion of Section 6 which was stricken out, and fill the blank with some number, however insignificant. One, two, or five, may be sufficient, but some number of copies should be sent.

Mr. FRIZELL. I did not listen attentively to the reading of the entire ordinance, but I would call the attention of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) to the fact that there is a provision somewhere—it may be in the Miscellaneous Provisions, or in the Schedule—to the effect that the county officers, elected at the Territorial election, shall hold over under the State organization.

Mr. COLLINS. I would say, in regard to the objection that has been raised, that, for instance, in voting on the Constitution, the soldiers will vote for Storey County, or Ormsby County, or other counties, according to their citizenship; but there is now no means of getting information to the counties, except through the newspapers which will publish the result, and the President's proclamation.

Mr. BANKS. I see the point, and we will have to put in something in the place of that which we have stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. That seems to be the only method provided for notifying the county clerks.

Mr. BANKS. I ask for the reading of that which was stricken out.

The SECRETARY read as follows:

“And shall forward them by mail or otherwise — copies of said newspaper to the clerks of each county of said Territory, for the use of the county and township officers thereof.”

Mr. BANKS. That provides for just this thing. It covers the point exactly. The Governor receives from the commanding officers of the soldiers statements of the number of votes cast by them, and of course those statements include the counties to which they belong, and then there is a publication made in due form, of this matter which has thus been sent to the Governor, and he sends copies of that publication, or will, if this provision be reinstated, to the county clerks, for the information of the officers and the people of each county. That seems to have been the object of the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) in framing this section; that is, thus to notify the people of the various counties, through the Governor, as to how many votes the soldiers may have cast for the several candidates for offices in each county.

Mr. HAWLEY. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman, that by referring to the language of Section 6, I think he will ascertain that it is applicable only to the votes cast for and against the Constitution, and not to the November election, when the candidates for county offices are to be voted for. The counties, it seems to me, cannot be so much interested as to the number of votes cast by the soldiers, one way or the other, on that question, as to render it necessary to incur this expense.

Mr. BANKS. That brings up another thing, which has evidently been lost sight of.

The CHAIRMAN. I will suggest that there is no question before the committee.

Mr. BANKS. I trust the Chair will indulge

COLLINS—JOHNSON—BANKS.

[July 22.]

me a moment, previous to the introduction of any amendment, for the purpose of explanation, in order to see if we can all understand this matter. There is one point, I say, which I think has been very generally lost sight of. I do not claim to be familiar with the subject, but I see that others are in the dark as well as myself, and I am a good deal surprised to learn that the members of the Committee on Schedule have not made themselves as familiar with it as I supposed they had, for I was willing to act on the matter merely upon their report. Now, sir, this ordinance prescribes the manner in which the votes shall be cast for and against the Constitution, and it also provides that the mode of holding the election therein prescribed shall obtain, so far as other elections are concerned, until such time as the Legislature shall pass laws to supersede it. Hence, so far as elections of State and county officers are concerned, before the Legislature shall have passed laws regulating such elections, the rules herein prescribed must prevail, to the exclusion of all other rules. For that reason, I hold that it is necessary to reinstate the language which we have stricken out of this section, and therefore I move that it be reinstated.

Mr. COLLINS. This section makes provision not only for the vote on the Constitution, but also for the vote on the State officers. It says, upon the receipt of "said returns"—that is, the returns of both elections—it shall be the duty of the Board of Canvassers to do certain things—having both elections in view all the time.

"And shall forward them, by mail or otherwise, — copies of said newspaper to the clerks of each county of said Territory, for the use of the county and township officers thereof."

That has reference to both elections, and covers the entire ground.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not the canvass of the votes for State officers embrace as well the canvassing of the votes for members of the Legislature?

Mr. COLLINS. Precisely.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit whether it is usual or customary for a State Board to canvass the votes and ascertain who may have been elected to the Legislature? And especially in view of the time, which is a matter of infinitely more importance, it seems to me that the canvass of the votes for members of the Legislature should be made by the officers of the county.

Mr. COLLINS. The ordinance requires that in each county the inspectors and judges of elections shall count the votes, and send the returns in duplicate to the clerk of the County Commissioners, and the clerk then prepares an abstract of the same, which is sent to the Board of Canvassers at Carson. That is in compliance with the Enabling Act, and I have followed the language of the Enabling Act as nearly as possible. But the returns are still in the hands of the County Commissioners, who can proceed to canvass the votes on county officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it reads exactly in that way. Here is Section 5 of the Ordinance, which, I take it, refers, as well as Section 6, to the vote on the Constitution, and it only provides that the returns shall be made to the clerks of the County Commissioners of the respective counties, an abstract of the same to be immediately transmitted to the Governor. Then follows Section 6, providing that upon the receipt of said returns, and the returns of the soldiers' vote, they shall be canvassed by the Board of Canvassers, consisting of the Governor, the United States District Attorney, and the Chief Justice. They are to canvass "the returns of said elections, both civil and military," and then they are required immediately to publish an abstract of the same, and forward copies to the county clerks, by mail or otherwise. I submit that there is no provision for a canvass of the votes for county officers or members of the Legislature in the respective counties. If there is, I certainly am not able to see it.

Mr. COLLINS. I think the gentleman can find it. Section 5 provides that—

"The judges and inspectors of elections shall carefully count each ballot immediately after the election, and forthwith make duplicate returns thereof to the clerks of the said County Commissioners of their respective counties."

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, what is to be done then?

The CHAIRMAN. I think the Committee is without a quorum. The Secretary will count the members present.

The SECRETARY reported a quorum present.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman from Ormsby is correct. I do not find the provision.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought so. Now I submit that it is necessary. Take the case, for example, of the District Judges—

Mr. COLLINS. I think it must have been correct in the original ordinance. I think I could not have thus overlooked so important a matter.

Mr. JOHNSON. There may be a close election in Humboldt County, for instance, but the provision in Section 6 is, that the returns shall be canvassed by the State Board of Canvassers, upon the receipt of the returns, "or within twenty days after the election." That would bring it up to about the 27th of November, and it is proposed that the Legislature shall convene on the first Monday in December. These returns could not be returned from the seat of Government in season for the members to reach there at the appointed time for the assembling of the Legislature. And it is a matter of yet greater importance in reference to our District Judges.

Mr. COLLINS. I am confident that there is some mistake in the printing. It must be so.

Mr. BANKS. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson.) He refers to the importance of having the local returns made to the Board of Commissioners, and canvassed by them, I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. Now, sir, the gentleman will observe this, that there can be no official determination of the result, until the soldiers' vote is obtained. And the framer of this ordinance evidently had in his mind this prominent fact, of the necessity of ascertaining what has been the soldiers' vote, before the election can be officially decided. Therefore, if the section is left to stand just as it is in the original, I think no very great hardship or evil can result. It simply provides that only upon the return of the soldiers' vote, which can most conveniently be made through the Governor, can the result of the election be officially decided. I think perhaps it would be well enough to provide, however, for the making of the returns directly to the county officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have advocated no proposition which would be inimical to that. My proposition is merely that the votes should be canvassed in the county.

Mr. BANKS. That is, so far as the home vote, for local officers, is concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is nothing contrary to that view in what I have proposed. The return is made to the County Commissioners, and they should make the canvass.

Mr. BANKS. Of course the canvass of the home vote is easily made in the way proposed, and I think it is desirable; but then it seems to me that the returns of the soldiers' vote can best be made by sending them, in the first place, from the place where the soldiers are stationed to the Governor, and then allowing him to send them to the various counties.

Mr. JOHNSON. If that is required to be done, there is another obstacle which presents itself. The time becomes so short that we shall be compelled to change our programme in regard to the period of the meeting of the Legislature, and also when the District Judges shall enter upon the discharge of the duties of their office. Twenty days after the election, allowed the Board of Canvassers to wait for returns of the soldiers' vote, brings it to the 27th of November, and then there is only from three to seven days intervening between the declaring of the result of the election, and the time when we propose that the District Judges shall enter upon the discharge of their duties; and not only that, but when they shall actually open their Courts. I submit that the time mentioned is too short to make returns from the remote counties and receive them back in season for the judges to enter upon their duties.

Mr. BANKS. How, then, would the gentleman from Ormsby propose to get the soldiers' vote?

Mr. JOHNSON. I only say this, that if we carry out our original programme we must devise some plan of ascertaining the result of the election more speedily.

Mr. COLLINS. I wish, in justification of myself, to read this section as it is in the original, because we have been considering a printed copy. In the original, it reads as follows:

"The judges and inspectors of elections shall carefully count each ballot immediately after the election, and forthwith make duplicate returns thereof to the clerks of the said County Commissioners of their respective counties, and said clerks shall immediately transmit an abstract of the same, inclosed in an envelope, by the most safe and expeditious conveyance, to the Governor of said Territory, marked 'Election Returns.'"

I felt confident that I could not have made such a blunder.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not see but that it reads the same in the printed copy.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not observe any change as it was read.

Mr. MASON. I move a reconsideration of the vote adopting Section 6.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to a point of order. I believe the motion to reconsider has already been made in this committee, and carried.

The CHAIRMAN. It was reconsidered, I think, and then again adopted.

Mr. WETHERILL. I would like to ask if the Secretary understands that the section has been reconsidered after its final adoption.

Mr. BANKS. I made a motion to reconsider the vote by which a certain portion of the section was stricken out, and I make the point of order that the question now before the committee is on that motion. I ask for a ruling upon that point.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me ask the gentleman from Humboldt a question. Did not he vote with the minority on that amendment?

Mr. DUNNE. I would like to ask a question of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman will endeavor to answer it.

Mr. DUNNE. I would ask whether he considers that it is in order to reconsider an amendment to a section, before a reconsideration of the adoption of the section?

Mr. BANKS. Allow me to make a suggestion in regard to that. A great many rather unparliamentary practices have been indulged here, simply because the body is small, and the members not disposed to be captious in respect to the mode of proceeding. I do not suppose that it is now the intention of this body to fall back upon the strict requirements of parliamentary law.

The CHAIRMAN. I find I was mistaken. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) has not been adopted; neither was the question put on reconsideration. The question will now be upon the motion of the gentleman from Humboldt, to reinstate the language which was stricken out of Section 6.

Mr. DUNNE. May I be allowed to say a word or two in the way of explanation, as something has been said in regard to the diligence of the Committee on Schedule in its consideration of this ordinance. I will say that this Convention has heaped duty after duty upon that committee, until the burden has become almost unupportable. First, the Schedule was referred to that committee, which was eminently proper; then the whole Article on Salaries, with all the different blanks to be filled after careful consideration; and then, on the top of all that, the committee was asked to consider this long and intricate ordinance. The committee has held five or six sessions, and two nights continued in session till twelve o'clock. When the ordinance was brought up I believe it was the unanimous sense of the committee that no one understood better about its various provisions than the able member who drafted and presented it to the Convention, and therefore it was the unanimous voice of the committee to report it back with only those slight amendments which were very obviously necessary, and allow its author to explain and defend it in the Convention.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that the question now is upon reinstating the language which has been stricken out of Section 6. I wish to amend the amendment by inserting other words to come in after the words "all who may wish to be present."

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman will withdraw the amendment for a moment, I will state a motion which I desire to make, and which I think will meet with general concurrence. It is for the purpose of facilitating our labors, and I believe it will result in rendering them more efficient. I am satisfied of the fact that this ordinance has not been printed as it was drafted. From some cause or other, errors have occurred, not through any fault of those who have procured its printing, or any want of appreciation of the questions involved, but from the unavoidable haste with which it has been printed, and the want of opportunity to read the proof, and make such corrections as are usual in such cases. There certainly are errors, from whatever cause they have arisen, and those errors can best be corrected by the chairman of the committee, by conferring with the author. The motion I will make, if gentlemen will withdraw their amendments, will be that the committee rise and recommend that the article be recommitted.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DUNNE. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the committee; it did not originate with the committee.

Mr. COLLINS. It will make no difference to me to whom it is referred, or what amendments are adopted. I drafted the ordinance merely to facilitate our business.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will move at the proper time that it be referred to a special committee of one, if you please, to consist of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) with authority to make all necessary corrections. I think that will only be doing an act of justice toward the gentleman who prepared and presented the ordinance.

Mr. BANKS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. The motion now being in order, I move that the committee rise and report the ordinance back to the Convention, with a recommendation that it be referred to a special committee of one, for correction or amendment, as he shall deem necessary.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the ordinance concerning elections, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to report the same to the Convention with a recommendation that it be referred to a special committee to consist of Mr Collins. Also, that the Committee of the Whole ask leave to sit again for the further consideration of said ordinance.

The report was accepted, leave to sit again was granted accordingly, and the ordinance was referred to a special committee, consisting of Mr. Collins, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARWICK moved (at twenty minutes past nine o'clock) that the Convention adjourn.

The PRESIDENT. I am informed that the Committee on Schedule is prepared to report a portion of the Schedule.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was not agreed to.

THE SCHEDULE.

Mr. DUNNE, from the Committee on Schedule, presented the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT:—Your committee, to whom was referred Article XVIII, entitled Schedule, for amendment and perfection, respectfully report a portion of the same back to the Convention for adoption, amended, as follows:

ARTICLE XVIII.

SCHEDULE.

SECTION 1. That no inconvenience may arise by reason of a change from a Territorial to a permanent State Government, it is declared that all rights, actions, prosecutions, judgments, claims, and contracts, as well of individuals as of bodies corporate, including counties, townships, and cities, shall continue as if no change had taken place; and all process which may issue under the authority of the Territory of Nevada, previous to its admission into the Union as one of the United States, shall be as valid as if issued in the name of the State of Nevada.

SEC. 2. All laws of the Territory of Nevada, in force at the time of the admission of this State, not repugnant to this Constitution, shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitations, or be altered or repealed by the Legislature.

SEC. 3. All fines, penalties, or forfeitures accruing to the Territory of Nevada, or to the people of the United States in the Territory of Nevada, shall inure to the State of Nevada.

SEC. 4. All recognizances heretofore taken, or which may be taken before the change from a Territorial to a permanent State Government, shall remain valid, and shall pass to, and may be prosecuted in the name of the State; and all bonds executed to the Governor of the Territory, or to any other officer or court in his or their official capacity, or to the people of the United States in the Territory of Nevada, shall pass to the Governor, or other officer or court, and his or their successors in office, for the uses therein respectively expressed, and may be sued on, and recovery had accordingly; and all property, real, personal, or mixed, and all judgments, bonds, specialties, choses in action, claims and debts of whatsoever description, and all records and public archives of the Territory of Nevada, shall issue to and vest in the State of Nevada, and may be sued for and recovered in the same manner and to the same extent by the State of Nevada, as the same could have been by the Territory of Nevada. All criminal prosecutions and penal actions which may have arisen, or which may arise before the change from a Territorial to a State Government, and which shall then be pending, shall be prosecuted to judgment and execution in the name of the State. All offenses committed against the laws of the Territory of Nevada before the change from a Territorial to a State Government, and which shall not be prosecuted before such change, may be prosecuted in the name and by the authority of the State of Nevada with like effect as though such change had not taken place, and all penalties incurred shall remain the same as if this Constitution had not been adopted. All actions at law and suits in equity, and other legal proceedings, which may be pending in any of the courts of the Territory of Nevada at the time of the change from a Territorial to a State Government, may be continued and transferred to and determined by any court of the State which shall have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof. All actions at law, and suits in equity, and all other legal proceedings, which may be pending in any of the courts of the Territory of Nevada at the time of the change from a Territorial to a State Government, shall be continued and transferred to, and may be prosecuted to judgment and execution in any court of the State which shall have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof; and all books, papers, and records, relating to the same, shall be transferred in like manner to such court.

SEC. 5. Until otherwise provided by the Legislature, the apportionment of Senators and Assemblymen in the different counties shall be as follows: Storey County, four Senators and twelve Assemblymen; Douglas County, one Senator and two Assemblymen; Esmeralda County, two Senators and three Assemblymen; Humboldt County, one Senator and three Assemblymen; Lander County, two Senators and four Assemblymen; Lyon County, one Senator and three Assemblymen; Lyon and Churchill Counties, one Senator; Churchill County, one Assemblyman; Nye County, one Senator and one Assemblyman; Ormsby County, two Senators and three Assemblymen; Washoe and Reno Counties, two Senators and three Assemblymen.

SEC. 6. All debts and liabilities of the Territory of Nevada, lawfully incurred, and which remain unpaid at the time of the admission of this State into the Union, shall be assumed by, and become a debt of the State of Nevada.

Your committee further report that they have stricken out Sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, and the proviso in Section 12, of the article, as contained and presented in the old Constitution, and recommend the adoption of the preceding portion of their report. Your committee retain the remainder of the article for further consideration.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DUNNE, Chairman pro tem.

Mr. DUNNE also submitted the following as a minority report from the same committee:

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Schedule, dissents from, and is opposed to, the adoption of Section 5, relative to the apportionment of representation.

E. F. DUNNE.

The report was accepted, and the article referred to the Committee of the Whole.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—SCHEDULE.

On motion of Mr. CHAPIN, the Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. CHAPIN in the Chair,) and took up for consideration that portion of Article XVIII, entitled "Schedule," which had just been reported.

CONTINUANCE OF RIGHTS, ACTIONS, ETC.

The SECRETARY read Section 1, as follows:

SECTION 1. That no inconvenience may arise by reason of a change from a Territorial to a permanent State Government, it is declared that all rights, actions, prosecutions, judgments, claims, and contracts, as well of individuals as of bodies corporate, including counties, towns, and cities, shall continue as if no change had taken place; and all process which may issue under the authority of the Territory of Nevada, previous to its admission into the Union as one of the United States, shall be as valid as if issued in the name of the State of Nevada.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

CONTINUANCE OF TERRITORIAL LAWS.

Section 2 was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. All laws of the Territory of Nevada, in force at the time of the admission of this State, not repugnant to this Constitution, shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitations, or be altered or repealed by the Legislature.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

TRANSFER OF FINES, ETC.

Section 3 was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. All fines, penalties, or forfeitures, accruing to the Territory of Nevada, or to the people of the United States in the Territory of Nevada, shall inure to the State of Nevada.

No amendment was offered, and the section, as read, was adopted:

TRANSFER OF RECORDS, ACTIONS, LEGAL PROCEEDINGS, ETC.

Section 4 was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. All recognizances heretofore taken, or which may be taken before the change from a Territorial to a permanent State Government, shall remain valid, and shall pass to, and may be prosecuted in the name of the State; and all bonds executed to the Governor of the Territory, or to any other officer or court in his or their official capacity, or to the people of the United States in the Territory of Nevada, shall pass to the Governor, or other officer or court, and his or their successors in office, for the uses therein respectively expressed, and may be sued on, and recovery had accordingly; and all property, real, personal, or mixed, and all judgments, bonds, specialties, choses in action, claims and debts of whatsoever description, and all records and public archives of the Territory of Nevada, shall issue to and vest in the State of Nevada, and may be sued for, and recovered in the same manner and to the same extent by the State of Nevada, as the same could have been by the Territory of Nevada. All criminal prosecutions and penal actions which may have arisen, or which may arise before the change from a Territorial to a State Government, and which shall then be pending, shall be prosecuted to judgment and execution in the name of the State. All offenses committed against the laws of the Territory of Nevada before the change from a Territorial to a State Government, and which shall not be prosecuted before such change, may be prosecuted in the name and by the authority of the State of Nevada, with like effect as though such change had not taken place, and all penalties incurred shall remain the same as if this Constitution had not been adopted. All actions at law and suits in equity, and other legal proceedings, which may be pending in any of the courts of the Territory of Nevada at the time of the change from a Territorial to a State Government, may be continued and transferred to and determined by any court of the State which shall have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof. All actions at law and suits in equity, and all other legal proceedings which may be pending in any of the courts of the Territory of Nevada, at the time of the change from a Territorial to a State Government, shall be continued and transferred to, and may be prosecuted to judgment and execution in any court of the State which shall have jurisdiction of the subject matter thereof; and all books, papers, and records, relating to the same, shall be transferred in like manner to such court.

Mr. KENNEDY. I call attention to the word "and," in the clause relating to criminal prosecutions. It says:

"All criminal prosecutions and penal actions which may have arisen, or which may arise before the change from a Territorial to a State Government, and which shall then be pending, shall be prosecuted," etc.

I think the word should be "or."

Mr. COLLINS. No; I think "and" is the proper word to use there.

Mr. WARWICK. If the gentleman attentively reads the whole sentence, I think he will find that the word "and" is perfectly proper in that place.

Mr. KENNEDY. It seems to me that a criminal case might "arise," but not be "pending."

Mr. WARWICK. The words, "or which may arise before the change from a Territorial to a State Government," are parenthetical. Strike out the parentheses, and then try it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Then you ought to embrace them within parentheses.

Mr. WARWICK. Not at all; it would read just the same, with or without, so far as "and" is concerned—

"All criminal prosecutions and penal actions which may have arisen, and which shall then be pending"—

I do not see that it makes any difference which way you read it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Very well; if others are satisfied with the reading, I am.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

APPORTIONMENT.

Section 5 was read, as follows:

Sec. 5. Until otherwise provided by the Legislature, the apportionment of Senators and Assemblymen in the different counties shall be as follows: Storey County, four Senators and twelve Assemblymen; Douglas County, one Senator and two Assemblymen; Esmeralda County, two Senators and three Assemblymen; Humboldt County, one Senator and three Assemblymen; Lander County, two Senators and four Assemblymen; Lyon County, one Senator and three Assemblymen; Lyon and Churchill Counties, one Senator; Churchill County, one Assemblyman; Nye County, one Senator and one Assemblyman; Ormsby County, two Senators and three Assemblymen; Washoe and Roop Counties, two Senators and three Assemblymen.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend the apportionment so far as regards Humboldt County, by striking out "one Senator," and inserting "two Senators" instead.

Mr. KENNEDY. Where would you take the other Senator from?

Mr. DUNNE. This apportionment has been made, Mr. Chairman, upon the basis of the one adopted by the last Constitutional Convention. There have been no changes made from that. I believe, in any except two instances, and those were made solely for the purpose of giving representation to a new county, which has been organized since that Convention was held. In order to do that, without increasing the number of Senators and Assemblymen above the number we had before, which increase the committee desired to avoid, if possible, it has been found necessary that some of the counties should be made to suffer, and it appears from the report of the committee that Humboldt is one of those counties.

Mr. COLLINS. I think Storey County has been reduced in its representation by the report.

Mr. DUNNE. No, sir; Storey has the same as before.

Mr. COLLINS. Then she had not enough before.

Mr. DUNNE. Storey, and every other county, has been allowed the same, with the two exceptions to which I have alluded, and which I will now specify. It seemed proper, in the opinion of the majority of the committee, to give the new County of Nye one Senator and one Assemblyman, and in order to do that without making any increase, it was necessary to take one Senator away from one county, and one Assemblyman away from another. The committee finally determined to do this by depriving Humboldt County of one of its Senators, while Esmeralda was called upon to give up one Assemblyman.

Now if the basis of representation is to be population—and that, I believe, is required by the Enabling Act—I cannot see the justice of making that distinction against Humboldt—a county which, at the last Territorial election, polled twelve hundred and twenty-four votes. I am aware, of course, that the votes are not the basis of representation—that the only basis is population—and that therefore the county which may poll only five hundred votes, if it has a population of three thousand, is entitled to as many representatives as the county which contains three thousand voters but has no other population. I know there are some counties whose vote is small, but whose representation is perhaps justifiable by their having an amount of population sufficient to put them on a par with counties which cast a far greater number of votes. But by making a comparison between the different counties—comparing not only their votes, but also their population, as it may be deduced from the reports of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, in the absence of other official sources of information—we may be led to form some conclusions which will be more definite and reliable than mere assertions, as to what is the population of certain counties, as compared with others.

Friday.]

KENNEDY—DUNNE—TAGLIABUE—COLLINS.

[July 22.

My own opinion is, that the population of Humboldt is considerably larger than that of Lyon; and I form that opinion, not alone from the fact that Humboldt polled twelve hundred and twenty-four votes last fall, but also from what I know of the number of families there are living in the different towns, and settled in the numerous rich valleys of that county. For there are many fertile valleys in Humboldt, some of which may be unknown to many members of the Convention. There is one especially, called Paradise Valley, which is estimated to contain nearly fifty thousand acres of good farming lands, fit for settlement and cultivation. And the report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction shows that there are one hundred and seventy-seven children in that county, of the ages at which, as prescribed by law, they may attend the public schools. The same report shows that in Lyon County there are two hundred and forty children within the ages required to attend school, or about that number—some odd figure, I believe, in addition. Now that difference is not very great, and the vote of Lyon County, I believe, is not as large as that of Humboldt. If I am incorrect in that, I shall be most happy to be set right.

Mr. KENNEDY. What is the gentleman's statement?

Mr. DUNNE. I said I believed the vote of Lyon County was not as large as that of Humboldt.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will state that at the election, last fall, it was larger. And that is the vote upon which the calculation was made. I examined that matter particularly, and our vote was next to that of Storey, being ahead even of Washoe.

Mr. DUNNE. In reply to that I will say, that a member of the Convention, who was also a member of the last Constitutional Convention, appeared before the Committee on Schedule, and laid before that Committee an abstract of the votes cast in the several counties at the last election; and according to that abstract, which was before the committee during its deliberations, the vote of Humboldt at the last election was twelve hundred and twenty-four, and that of Lyon was twelve hundred and twenty-one. If there be any mistake in the matter, it is in the abstract, and in the representation that was made to me on the subject, while sitting in that committee, by a gentleman who was a member of the last Constitutional Convention, and who is now in the chair. I take that abstract as the basis, and I still believe it to be correct; and it shows that the vote of Humboldt County was twelve hundred and twenty-four, and that of Lyon was twelve hundred and twenty-one, the difference, although very small, being in favor of Humboldt. I supposed that the vote of Humboldt was about twelve hundred, but I did not know the precise figures until that abstract was presented. I would also suggest to the members of the Convention, who are so anxious for the adoption of the Constitution, that so unjust a distinction against Humboldt would be but a poor recommendation for it in that county.

Mr. TAGLIABUE. I regret to call the gentleman to order, but it is getting late, and he has exhausted his time.

Mr. COLLINS. I hope that amendment will not prevail, because, while I want to see Humboldt County fairly and fully represented, I really feel that instead of increasing the representation of Humboldt, we ought to diminish that of the other counties. And, sir, I confess my very great astonishment that at this time, when retrenchment and reform are so loudly demanded, we should have a proposition brought before us to impose upon this new State a Legislature equal in number almost to that of any of the great States of the Union. I confess my astonishment that gentlemen should be willing, in this hour of financial and pecuniary distress, to saddle upon our young State the expense of maintaining a Legislature of fifty-one or fifty-two members, when thirty members, or thirty-nine at the most, would answer every practical purpose. Why should gentlemen contemplate such a thing now, when it would hardly be justifiable at any time in the future, when our material wealth may be quadrupled, and our population possibly five, or even ten times as great as at the present time? I cannot understand what should prompt such a course of policy under existing circumstances.

Mr. DUNNE. Will the gentleman allow me a word of explanation?

Mr. COLLINS. Si, señor.

Mr. DUNNE. Usted habla propiamente, en español, señor. [Laughter.] It is not from a desire of making a large body of the Legislature that I have offered my amendment, but simply because I desire that my county shall be represented equally with the others.

Mr. COLLINS. I understand the object of the gentleman as he states it. But I contend, while I do not wish to see any injustice done to any county, or any portion of the Territory, that Storey County, for example, would be as well represented with half the number here designated, as she would be with double that number. I contend that Ormsby County would be as well represented by some one of the gentlemen now representing that county on this floor, as she would be by a more numerous delegation. It is not the number of representatives that gives force and power to a delegation, or that constitutes the justice of an apportionment, but the correct idea is, that all sections shall be fully and fairly represented. I do really hope that this Convention will look this matter of the expense to be incurred fairly in the face. When we had under consideration the question whether we should pay our legislators six dollars or eight dollars a day, I voted very cheerfully for the larger sum, because I think we had better pay them more money and cut down the number, rather than increase the number, and cut down the pay. I trust that the Convention, after looking the difficulty fairly in the face, will decide to have a less number of members of the Legislature, and at the same time will make such an apportionment as shall be equal and just.

Mr. BANKS. The views expressed by the gentleman from Storey correspond with my own on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Humboldt is out of order, and so was the gentleman who preceded him. The amendment is merely to strike out the word "one," and insert "two," and that is the only question now before the committee.

Mr. BANKS. I am happy to be corrected at any time upon a point of order, but I cannot help observing that such points are almost always suggested when I have the floor. Now my colleague from Humboldt has presented, in support of his amendment, certain statements concerning the population of our county. Those statements are strictly true; but they depend upon causes which, perhaps, some members of the committee do not understand, and therefore I wish to explain those causes.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be in order.

Mr. BANKS. The statement of my colleague is substantially that our population is larger than that of some of the counties adjoining us, in proportion to our vote. This arises from the fact that a great many families coming across the Plains stop in Humboldt County, to make that their permanent home. I suppose there is no other county in the Territory that attracts and retains so large a proportion of the overland immigration, and hence it is, that, as my colleague has said, our population is much larger in proportion to our vote, than that of some of the counties which are considerably nearer to the California line. Not only in the mining portion of the county, but also in our beautiful valleys and fertile grazing districts, those persons have found it desirable to settle, to establish their household gods, to build up permanent homes; and the prospect is that the population of the county will continue to increase in that manner, so that in all probability by the time the next apportionment is made, the excess of our population over our vote, as compared with other counties, will be even larger than now.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not precisely understand what the point of order was upon which the Chair decided the gentleman from Humboldt to be out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It was this: The gentleman from Storey (Mr. Collins) had been discussing the propriety of cutting down the number of the Legislature, establishing a new basis of apportionment; and the Chair understood the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) to take up the discussion of the same question, which, upon the consideration of this amendment, really was not in order, being foreign to the question.

Mr. BANKS. Not at all. I did not propose to discuss that question at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair begs the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment presented involves the question of an increase of the number of members beyond that reported by the Committee on Schedule. I submit, therefore, that the question before the committee involves the propriety of either increasing or diminishing the number, and hence the discussion of that question, especially when we are in Committee of the Whole, I judge to be entirely in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) to what I am about to say. Assuming that it is legitimate to discuss at this time the subject of the number of the members of our State Legislature, and I so regard it, I propose only to reiterate what I have said in the committee, that I thought it advisable to have the larger, rather than the smaller number of representatives, which some gentleman had suggested. I have nothing to say further at this time, however, in regard to the proportion of the representation to be allowed to Humboldt County, except this: that if we add one Senator for that county, we shall have a Senate of eighteen members, and an Assembly of only thirty-five; whereas, the generally received idea is, that the number of Assemblymen should be just double that of the Senators—and I believe furthermore that there is a clause in another article of our Constitution which establishes that as the proportion.

Mr. DUNNE. I suggest, then, that instead of robbing Peter to pay Paul, we should give back not only the Senator to Humboldt, but also the Assemblyman to Esmeralda, thus making the relative numbers exactly right—eighteen and thirty-six.

Mr. JOHNSON. As to this matter of reducing the number of members, I wish to add that I was somewhat surprised at the course of my friend from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) for, if I mistake not, he was in favor of paying the members of the Legislature liberally, and aided by his vote in increasing the per diem from the rate which was first reported, although now he wishes to diminish the number on account of the expense to the State of supporting large legislative bodies. The gentleman bows assent, from which I infer that I have not misstated his position. But I observe that the reduction in number which he advocates, with the increased pay, would not have the effect of reducing the expense below what it would be with the larger number and the smaller per diem.

Mr. COLLINS. I have all the figures.

Mr. JOHNSON. So have I. When the question of per diem was under consideration, a motion was made to strike out six dollars and insert eight, and the majority deemed it proper to make that amendment against my protestations. I have nothing to offer in regard to that action of the Convention, only this: that I do not wish to hear so much talking about economy, unless gentlemen are willing to practice it—and I hope no one will understand this remark as being made in any unkind spirit.

Now, sir, I have made a hasty calculation in regard to how much additional burden has been placed upon this wo-begone State Treasury, by that one amendment. Taking the number of members reported by the Committee on Schedule, in the section under consideration, as the basis, I estimate that the increased expense will be, for the first session of the Legislature, $9,180, and for the next session $6,120. And on the supposition that we are to have annual sessions for three years, the additional expenditure in that time will be $21,420—an average of over seven thousand dollars a year. That amount of annual expenditure might very well have been saved to the State, if the gentleman from Storey, and other members, had concurred with the counsels of myself and others in that respect.

And for one, sir, I would prefer to have the larger representation, and pay the members less, rather than the smaller representation, and pay them more. I conceive that one of the material safeguards of the people, is a numerous representation in the Legislature. There is then less danger of passing what has been so frequently and justly characterized as "thieving bills." It will be infinitely more difficult, with a numerous representation in the Legislature, to enact bills of that character, than it would be with a small representation. For that, if for no other reason, I am in favor of the larger representation; and I would very much prefer to cut down the pay, even considerably lower than was at first proposed, rather than to decrease the number. I think the people would be benefited by adopting that course far more than by reducing the number of members, and increasing their pay.

So far as this amendment involves the giving of another Senator to Humboldt County, I have no means of ascertaining exactly the population of that county. I thought in the committee, however, as I do now, that the apportionment, as agreed upon then, was approximately correct. There are other gentlemen, however, who have more accurate knowledge and intimate acquaintance with that subject, and I hope they will enlighten those of us who have not the same means of information.

Mr. KENNEDY. I desire to propose an amendment, which is rather of the nature, however, of a verbal correction. It is simply to add the word "jointly," after the words "Lyon and Churchill Counties." It is hardly in order, I suppose, but I will offer it, as I think there can be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It should be a separate amendment, and there is another subject now before the committee.

Mr. MASON. I move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, by adding another Assemblyman to Esmeralda County, so as to read, "Esmeralda County, two Senators and four Assemblymen."

Mr. DUNNE. I accept the amendment.

Mr. MASON. I consider that in this apportionment, Esmeralda County is unjustly treated. Sir, we, who come here from that county, represent one of the largest and most important counties in the Territory; a county vast in extent, and embracing wealth—well, I do not know exactly how much. [Merriment.] Besides our rich mining region, we have a magnificent farming country. Our population is increasing, and our resources are being developed. I will not occupy the time, but will only say, that to strike out one of our Assemblymen, as the original section proposes to do, it seems to me, would be an act of the grossest injustice to the county of Esmeralda.

Mr. DUNNE. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Esmeralda, and which I have accepted, obviates the objection which was suggested by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) that by adding one Senator to Humboldt we should be making the two houses of the Legislature disproportionate in number, and thereby infringing a constitutional provision. The amendment, as now modified, will make the Senate consist of eighteen members, and the Assembly of exactly double that number, to wit, thirty-six; so that the numbers of the two branches will be relatively correct. At the same time it restores what has been taken away from both Humboldt and Esmeralda Counties. If the apportionment on the old basis is just, it ought to remain, and I do not think we can adopt a better one.

Mr. FRIZELL. I have an amendment which I would like to read for information. It is based upon the idea that the Senators should represent more especially the counties—the localities from which they are chosen—and not the people only. My amendment, therefore, proposes to give to each county one Senator, with the exception of Storey County.

Mr. DUNNE. Oh, I think Storey should have a Senator, too. [Merriment.]

Mr. FRIZELL. I said one Senator for each county except Storey, but my modesty forbade me to mention the number which I think Storey County ought to have. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARWICK. Do not let modesty stand in the way.

Mr. FRIZELL. As to the number of Senators, I think that would be the proper principle to adopt, and then it would be easy to settle the question of apportionment so far as relates to that branch. Take, for example, the United States Senate. There each Senator represents a locality, namely the State, rather than the people of the State; and in like manner our Senators might represent their respective counties. The largest State in the Union sends but two Senators to the United States Senate, and every small State is entitled to be represented there by the same number. My reason for suggesting this amendment is, that under the present plan it appears to be impossible to do exact justice to every county. To some counties it is proposed to give two Senators, whilst to others, with about the same population—and probably in some instances the difference will not exceed forty or fifty—but one Senator is allowed. That is manifest injustice, and if my proposition shall meet with favor, it will remove that injustice by serving all the counties alike.

COLLINS—MASON—WARWICK.

[July 22.]

Mr. COLLINS. I see no difficulty in the way of making an equitable apportionment, but at the same time it occurs to me, as I have already stated, that the representation should be cut down very materially, throughout. We can fix upon a number as the Senatorial basis, and then in the case of any county which has not sufficient population to be entitled to send one Senator, let us create a Senatorial District, by uniting that with some adjoining county. Let us agree upon the number of Senators we will have—say thirteen, for example—then divide them among the counties as far as practicable; and when two counties come together, neither of which is entitled by population to a Senator, let us unite them into one Senatorial District. It is a matter which may be easily adjusted.

But what I wish more strenuously to insist upon, is the importance of reducing the number. Not only will that effect a diminution of the expense, but it will increase the rapidity of transacting the legislative business of the State. Here it is proposed, for instance, that Storey County shall have the enormous representation of sixteen members, including both houses; but I will ask what complication of difficulties exists that is going to prevent eight men from representing that county, and as clearly and forcibly maintaining, advocating, and defending all its interests, as the larger number of sixteen? I ask if the same principle will not hold good in regard to any other county? Some of them are represented in this Convention by but one individual; and judging from the talent they have sent here, I am of opinion that any one of them might be represented by one man, or two men, as the case may be, as well as by three or four. For it is not alone the number of any delegation that gives it influence and power, but also, and to a greater degree, the intelligence and ability of the members composing that delegation. Therefore, I contend that the smaller the number of representatives the better, so long as we do not leave large sections of country wholly unrepresented.

Why, sir, the representation which we have here, would give New York, upon the same basis, a Legislature of several hundred members, but in that State I know that a very large extent of territory often has to be included, in order to obtain population enough for a single representative, and two or three, or even as many as four counties, are sometimes united in a single Senatorial District. Nevertheless, I hold that New York is a pretty good State to copy from.

Take Massachusetts as an example, also. It is notorious that when the Massachusetts House of Representatives was an exceedingly numerous body—containing upwards of three hundred members, I believe, in some years—there was great embarrassment and delay of business, in consequence of the unwieldy size of the body. And if gentlemen will look at the State Constitutions which have been recently framed, they will find that small delegations have been the order of the day, almost invariably. Let us follow those examples. Give us a chance to grow and expand, and when our population and resources will warrant it, we can increase our Legislature to the maximum number of seventy-five, which has already been fixed upon. But in the mean time, in the days of our infancy, let us establish a much smaller number. Thirty, thirty-six, or thirty-nine at most, is as large a number as we ought to afford, with our present population.

Mr. MASON. I would not perhaps object so much to reducing the number throughout, but under the present circumstances—and I wish to cure one disease at a time—according to the apportionment which we now have under consideration, I think if we give Esmeralda one more Assemblyman, and Humboldt one more Senator, it will be about a fair and equal apportionment.

But, sir, I know something about the ability and talent of the Legislature of New York, to which the gentleman from Storey has referred as an example, and while I concede that there have been able men in that body, yet at the same time I have known of representatives of that State, of the Rip Van Winkle stamp—men who seemed actually to have slept for as long a period as Washington Irving relates of that celebrated New Yorker. No doubt New York has produced some great men, but it has had its proportion of fools also.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman's head is clear on that subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARWICK. I will state that under the present basis of representation in California, Sacramento, which has a population fully as large as that of Storey County, is represented in the Legislature by only seven members, and I think that number is quite sufficient. It seems to me that it would be full as well to cut down the number, as suggested by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins.) I am not in favor of making an increase, so long as the ratio is equal, and if the same reduction could be made throughout the State, I would have no objection to Lander County being represented by one Senator and two Assemblymen, instead of two Senators and four Assemblymen. While retrenchment is the order of the day, I am rather inclined to favor that proposition.

Mr. COLLINS. I will move now, if it is in order, that the Committee of the Whole recommend that this whole question of apportionment be referred to a special committee of three, with instructions to report such an apportionment that the number of the Legislature in both branches shall not exceed thirty-nine members.

Mr. WETHERILL. I suggest that it should be a committee of one from each county.

Mr. COLLINS. Very well; I like that better.

Mr. BANKS. I have no special objection to a reference, if it is deemed necessary, but the committee which has already had the subject under consideration, is familiar with all the figures, and that, it appears to me, is the best committee, and besides, it is a standing committee. I will move its reference to the Committee on Schedule.

Mr. COLLINS. I will accept that; by all means, let it go to that committee. I made the motion for a special committee only because I thought the Committee on Schedule already had so much labor on hand that it would be almost an imposition to send the matter back to that committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I trust the proposed reference will not be made. We have devoted many hours to the consideration of this subject already, and if we re-open it, the same labor will have to be gone over again. We shall not only be compelled to consider the matter again in committee, but when it is reported back we shall encounter the same objections in the Convention that we have already heard. The labors of that committee have been extremely arduous. Various propositions have been suggested and compromises offered, and new calculations have had to be made almost daily. For one, I am weary of it, and I think we can understand the matter just as well now, as we should after recommitting it and having another report.

The only question which we are called upon now to decide, is whether we shall have a Legislature consisting of fifty-four members, or of some smaller number. As I have already stated, I am an advocate of the larger number, as I believe that thereby the interests of the people will be more effectually subserved, and their rights more securely guarded. By this apportionment, ten votes in the Senate, and nineteen in the lower House, will be needed to pass any bill; but if we adopt the smaller number suggested, the votes of seven Senators and fourteen Assemblymen will suffice. Such is the difference between the two propositions. If there shall be any thieving going on—and we may expect that there will be, although we put all the checks we can conceive of or imagine, into the Constitution—the people will be safer with a large representation than with a small one. Do what we may, there will undoubtedly be thieving bills before the Legislature of our new State, and a great abundance of them.

I hope we shall adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) and then pass the section. It is true that his amendment reduces relatively the representation of the other counties somewhat, but that is a matter of such slight moment that I care nothing about it. I am in favor of the larger representation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the proposition to recommit the section, with instructions to reduce the number to thirty-nine.

Mr. DUNNE. I hope that will not be done, for the reason that the committee has already worked and wrangled over this matter sufficiently, and I believe this is the only conclusion to which it can come, that would give anything like general satisfaction. After all the labor that has been performed by that committee, and the thorough consideration it has given to this subject, I think that any gentleman who wishes to modify or remodel the whole report ought to be required to submit his proposition to the Convention, complete, together with a scale of apportionment, as it would stand with such reduction or change, in order that we may all see how it would work. That course is open to any member, at any time before the final vote, and if any one can devise a more satisfactory apportionment than the committee has presented, it will no doubt meet with such consideration as it deserves. Let the amendment, which applies to the apportionment now presented, be determined upon, one way or the other, here and now; but before the whole subject is reopened, before any one is permitted to overturn the whole apportionment, let him present some basis upon which his proposition can rest, so that we can all understand its operation; and let him not ask, without offering anything more than mere generalities, to reopen the subject so that we will have the whole matter to go over again.

Mr. MASON. I heartily concur in the views which have been presented, and so ably advocated, by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson.) I agree with him, that if ever we are going to need a large legislative body it will be at the commencement of the organization of our State. We have a complication of interests to be represented, and by providing for large delegations we shall enable the people of the various counties to select men who will represent all their diverse and varied interests, much better than if the people were compelled to concentrate their choice upon fewer individuals. And I consider that it will be no disadvantage to make the small enlargement contemplated by this amendment, in order to do justice to those remote counties; for, remote as they are, in a very short time they will make their mark in our new State. I hope that the aggregate number of the Legislature will be increased to fifty-four, as proposed by this amendment, in order that justice may be done.

Mr. COLLINS. I will withdraw my motion, if there is no disposition to recommit the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that if the question is allowed to be put, the gentleman can see the disposition of the committee.

Mr. COLLINS. I will withdraw it with the permission of the committee. ["Leave, leave."]

No objection being made, the motion was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) as subsequently modified, amending the apportionment for Humboldt and Esmeralda, so as to read: "Esmeralda County, two Senators and four Assemblymen; Humboldt County, two Senators and three Assemblymen."

The question was taken, and the amendment was adopted.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section as amended, and it was adopted.

TERRITORIAL DEBTS AND LIABILITIES.

Section 6 was read, as follows:

SEC. 6. All debts and liabilities of the Territory of Nevada, lawfully incurred, and which remain unpaid at the time of the admission of this State into the Union, shall be assumed by, and become the debt of the State of Nevada.

No amendment being offered, the section, as read, was adopted.

Mr. DUNNE. That is as far as the report of the Committee on Schedule extends. Now I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think we had better report the article back, as far we have gone, and order it to engrossment, so as to get along as fast as we can.

Mr. DUNNE. Very well; I will make that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to, and the committee accordingly rose.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair, The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the first six sections of Article XVIII, entitled Schedule, had made some amendments thereto, in which he was instructed to ask the concurrence of the Convention, and recommended that the sections be passed with such amendments.

The report was accepted, the several amendments made in Committee of the Whole were agreed to, and the sections reported were ordered engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. WARWICK, at twenty minutes past ten o'clock, P. M., the Convention adjourned.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

CARSON, July 23, 1864.

The Convention met at nine o'clock, and was called to order by the President.

The roll was called, and all the members responded, except the following: Messrs. Ball, Earl, Fitch, Haines, Hovey, Hudson, Jones, Kinkead, Lockwood, McClinton, Morse, Parker, Sturtevant, Tozer, Wellington, and Williams, Present, 23; absent, 16.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. VEEDER. The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask leave of absence for to-day for Mr. Hudson.

No objection being made, leave of absence for one day was granted to Mr. Hudson.

Mr. BROSNAN. I ask leave of absence also for Mr. Hovey, who has been constrained to go home this morning. I ask that he be granted leave of absence until Monday.

Mr. COLLINS. I also ask leave of absence for Mr. Earl.

The PRESIDENT. Before we grant leave of absence to these gentlemen, we had better ascertain how many members we can have in attendance.

Mr. WARWICK. If we grant them leave of absence, we cannot send the Sergeant-at-Arms after them, in case we find the Convention without a quorum. The body will then fall by its own weight, like any other heavy body.

Mr. BROSNAN. We can spare Mr. Hovey, as my colleague, Mr. DeLong, is present.

Mr. MASON. I wish to ask leave of absence for the gentleman whom the Union calls my distinguished colleague, Mr. McClinton.

Mr. DUNNE. I shall have to object to granting leave of absence to Mr. Earl.

Mr. COLLINS. Then I move that he be granted leave of absence for one day.

Mr. DUNNE. I hope the Convention will not grant leave of absence to any more members, particularly those who live close around the Capital. I notice that several gentlemen have not been in attendance very regularly since certain interesting questions have been disposed of, and I think we ought not in this manner to deprive ourselves of the power of compelling the attendance of a quorum in case we should find it necessary to do so.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Collins, and, on a division, the vote was—ayes, 11; noes 4. So leave of absence for one day was granted to Mr. Earl.

[Mr. CRAWFORD in the chair.]

The question was stated on granting leave of absence for this day to Mr. McClinton.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thought he had indefinite leave.

Mr. CHAPIN. But that was annulled by his being present afterwards.

Mr. DELONG. Oh, no! That does not annul it.

Mr. MASON. I think the granting of indefinite leave of absence once may be sufficient.

Mr. WARWICK. No, sir. I think he had leave only for one day.

Saturday,] STURTEVANT—JOHNSON—BRADY—DELONG—DUNNE—CHAPIN—BANKS, ETC. [July 23.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I remember distinctly that he was granted leave of absence yesterday.

Mr. JOHNSON. But he only claimed it for yesterday. If the Secretary will refer to the journal, I believe he will find it so stated.

The SECRETARY read as follows :

“Mr. MASON asked leave of absence for Mr. McClinton for one day. Granted.”

The question was taken, and leave of absence for one day was granted to Mr. McClinton.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. BRADY. I move that this Convention adjourn to-day at twelve o'clock, M., to meet on Monday, at two o'clock, P. M. My reason is, that we cannot possibly finish our labors this week, as we had expected, and I would like an opportunity to go home, as many others would. If I must come here on Monday, I had about as lief sit all the week. If the motion does not prevail, I shall ask leave of absence for myself till Monday afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is not a quorum, only nineteen members being present.

Mr. DELONG. I move a call of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Another member has come in, making a quorum.

The question was taken on the motion for a call of the House, and it was not agreed to.

The question was stated on the motion of Mr. Brady, that when the Convention adjourn at twelve o'clock to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday at two o'clock, P. M.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CHAPIN. I hope that will be done, for I want the Convention to work to-day.

Mr. DUNNE. That is the object of my motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE—AGAIN.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the indefinite leave of absence heretofore granted to Mr. DeLong be revoked.

Mr. DELONG. I object. [Laughter.] I rise to a point of order, namely: that the Convention having once granted indefinite leave, it cannot be revoked without the consent of the member to whom it was granted. [“Question! Question!”] Question on the point of order. [Merriment.]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Not being thoroughly familiar with Jefferson's Manual, I will ask the President to take the chair.

[The PRESIDENT in the chair.]

The PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the motion is out of order. The only way to reach the matter is by a reconsideration.

Mr. BANKS. Then I move that the vote by which indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. DeLong be reconsidered.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on granting indefinite leave of absence to Mr. DeLong, and the Convention refused.

Mr. BRADY. Now I ask leave of absence until two o'clock, P. M., on Monday.

The question was taken, and on a division the vote was—ayes, 11; noes, 9. So the Convention granted leave of absence to Mr. Brady until Monday, at two o'clock, P. M.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CHAPIN. I learn that the article on the Judicial Department is published in the Virginia Union of this morning. I therefore move that the Sergeant-at-Arms go to Mr. Fox, and procure a number of copies.

Mr. STURTEVANT. Has he any funds? I suggest that each member contribute a quarter, and there will be less difficulty in getting it.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I am a subscriber, as several others are. I hope the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring up my paper, as I have not time to go after it.

The PRESIDENT. The order of business at present, is “Reports of Committees.” The gentleman's motion is therefore not now in order.

Mr. CROSMAN. The Committee on Engrossment have several bills in their possession, which they will be prepared to report in the afternoon.

The PRESIDENT. Motions and resolutions are next in order.

COUNTY COURTS.

Mr. CROSMAN. For the purpose of ascertaining the sense of the Convention, believing that to be the quickest and easiest way to arrive at a conclusion, I offer the following resolution :

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention that the County Courts be abolished in all the counties, except Storey.

My reason for offering this resolution is, that there are several sections in the article on Judicial Department, as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, that will need changing, if it shall not be the sense of the Convention to sustain the report of the committee, as proposed by this resolution.

The PRESIDENT. I think the gentleman is mistaken in regard to the report of the Committee on the Judiciary. That report only contemplates the establishment of a County Court in Storey County, but with power in the Legislature to create such courts in other counties, whenever it may be deemed expedient.

Mr. CROSMAN. I so understand it, and the object of the resolution is to declare that to be the sense of the Convention. I wish to ascertain whether the determination of the Convention is to sustain the report in that particular, or not.

The PRESIDENT. My recollection is, that there is nothing contained in the report which would be inimical to the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. CROSMAN. I am aware of it, but I think this is the simplest and shortest way to arrive at a definite conclusion. It may supersede the necessity of protracted discussions upon amendments.

Mr. BANKS. Is it the design of the resolution to declare that we will have no County Courts?

Mr. CROSMAN. It is not. It is simply to arrive at the sense of the Convention, in order that we may act harmoniously, and save time. I am ready myself to indorse the report of the committee, and all I am seeking for is to get an expression of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that perhaps it would be more proper to wait until the report comes up. It may be reached presently, and then the gentleman can obtain the sense of the Convention, equally as well.

Mr. CROSMAN. I will withdraw the resolution, but I thought it might save time. That was my only object.

Mr. DE LONG. I disagreed with my colleague (Mr. Brosnan) on this subject, but was overruled in the committee. I thought it would be better to make the system harmonious throughout.

IMPEACHMENT AND REMOVAL.

The Convention proceeded to the consideration of business on the general file, and took up, as the first business in order, Article VII, entitled Impachment and Removal from Office.

The article was read a third time, as engrossed, as follows:

ARTICLE VII.

IMPEACHMENT AND REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

SECTION 1. The Assembly shall have the sole power of impeaching, but a majority of all the members elected must concur in an impeachment. All impeachments shall be tried by the Senate, and when sitting for that purpose, the Senators shall be upon oath or affirmation, to do justice according to law and evidence. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall preside over the Senate while sitting to try the Governor upon impeachment. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators elected.

SEC. 2. The Governor and other State and judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, under this State Government, shall be liable to impeachment for misdemeanor or malfeasance in office; but judgment in such case shall not extend further than removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust under this State. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

SEC. 3. For any reasonable cause, to be entered on the journals of each House, which may or may not be sufficient grounds for impeachment, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the District and County Courts shall be removed from office on the vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, and the Justice or Judge complained of shall be served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have an opportunity of being heard in person, or by counsel, in his defense; provided, that no member of either branch of the Legislature shall be eligible to fill the vacancy occasioned by such removal.

SEC. 4. Provision shall be made by law for the removal from office of any civil officer, other than those in this article previously specified, for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his duties.

The question was stated on the final passage of the article as read.

Mr. BROSAN. I observe that in Section 1 it is stated that "a majority of all the members must concur in an impeachment." That, it occurs to me, is a more positive term than should be employed in that connection.

Mr. DUNNE. They are sworn to support the Constitution, and of course, according to that, they are bound to concur.

The PRESIDENT. The article can be amended at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROSAN. I would propose, then, to amend that clause so that it will read:

"The concurrence of a majority of all the members elected shall be necessary to an impeachment."

By unanimous consent of the Convention, the amendment suggested was adopted.

The question being on the final passage of the article, as amended, the yeas and nays were taken, and the vote was—yeas, 23; nays, none—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brady, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosman, Dunne, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Kennedy, Lockwood, Mason, Murdock, Proctor, Sturtevant, Tagliabue, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—23.

Nays—None.

So the article was passed.

SALARIES.

The Convention next took up in its order Article XI, entitled Salaries and Appropriations.

The article was read a third time, as follows:

ARTICLE XI.

SALARIES AND APPROPRIATIONS.

SECTION 1. For the first term of office succeeding the formation of a State Government, the salary of the Governor shall be four thousand dollars per annum; the salary of the Secretary of State shall be three thousand six hundred dollars per annum; the salary of the State Controller shall be three thousand six hundred dollars per annum; the salary of the State Treasurer shall be three thousand six hundred dollars per annum; the salary of the Surveyor-General shall be one thousand dollars per annum; the salary of the Attorney-General shall be two thousand five hundred dollars per annum; the salary of the Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be two thousand dollars per annum; the salary of each Judge of the Supreme Court shall be seven thousand dollars per annum. The salaries of the foregoing officers shall be paid quarterly, out of the State Treasury. The pay of State Senators and members of the Assembly shall be eight dollars for each day of actual service, and forty cents per mile for mileage, going to and returning from the place of meeting. No officer mentioned in this section shall receive any fees or perquisites to his own use for the performance of any duty connected with his office, or for the performance of any additional duty imposed upon him by law.

Mr. BROSAN. I think this article on Salaries ought not to be embodied in the Constitution proper, because it is, so to speak, ephemeral in its nature. It is to have no effect after the expiration of two years, and yet it is here made a distinct and separate article of the Constitution. I suggest that it would be more proper to refer it to the Committee on Arrangement, with a recommendation that it be given a place in the Miscellaneous Article, or the Schedule. Perhaps the latter would be more appropriate.

The PRESIDENT. A motion would be in order to strike out and refer the article, with instructions to incorporate it as a separate section in the Schedule. Such action may be had by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will move that the Committee on Arrangement be instructed to transfer it, as a section simply, to the Schedule. There is only one section, and as it is to operate only for two years, it ought not to be embodied among the permanent features of the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will please reduce his motion to writing, for the convenience of the Secretary.

Mr. BROSNAN submitted the following :

Resolved, That Article XI, entitled Salaries and Appropriations, be transformed to a simple section, and that the same be transferred to and incorporated in the article entitled Schedule, by the Committee on Phraseology and Arrangement.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CROSMAN. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the consideration of Article VI, entitled Judicial Department.

Mr. BROSNAN. I think it would be well, perhaps, first to ascertain the sense of the Convention upon certain features of the article. I see, however, that as it is printed in the Virginia Union here, it is a little different from the report as it was handed in by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the matter might as well be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROSNAN. Very well.

The question was taken on Mr. Crosman's motion, and it was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. CROSMAN in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of Article VI, entitled Judicial Department.

NUMBER OF SUPREME COURT JUDGES.

Mr. BROSNAN. As I was about to state, possibly we can expedite business, if we come to an understanding in the first place, by taking a direct vote on one or two questions. This report, however, as it is printed in the newspaper, provides in one place for a Supreme Court to consist of five judges, whereas the report, as actually made by the Judiciary Committee, only provides for three Supreme Court Judges. But there seems to be a pretty strong sentiment in favor of having five judges, at least for the first few years, and I would submit to the consideration of the Committee whether it would not be best to take a vote on that subject at once. That will determine the question, and perhaps obviate the necessity of much discussion hereafter, as we progress, and also the trouble of modifying the various sections so as to suit the number of three judges, or five judges, as the case may be.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a motion?

Mr. BROSNAN. I move that the Supreme Court shall consist of five judges, instead of three.

Mr. COLLINS. Before the vote is taken on that, I would like to be informed if any provision has been made by this report for a court fee, or docket fee, by which the salaries of the Supreme Court Judges are to be paid, or at least in part.

Mr. BROSNAN. I believe there is such a provision.

Mr. COLLINS. Then I am in favor of five judges.

Mr. JOHNSON. In part, I agree with the report of the committee, as to the provision for a court fee. That is, I am willing that the Legislature shall have the power to prescribe such a fee, but I do not consent to the adoption of a compulsory provision, absolutely requiring the Legislature to do this. Circumstances may be such, in the earlier portion of our history as a State, as to justify the Legislature in requiring it, but at a later period it may not be necessary or justifiable. I look upon the imposition of a court fee as wrong in principle, and a measure that should only be resorted to in extreme cases. Hence, I am willing to concur so far as this, to leave the matter in such form that the Legislature may have power to prescribe a court fee. But, in any event, whether that is done or not, I think the advantage of having five judges, instead of three, is so much greater as to outweigh the consideration of increased expenditure, and I shall support the proposition.

Mr. BANKS. I am opposed to this motion. I have heard no sufficient reason urged in favor of having five judges, instead of three, or, at least, no very substantial reason, except that it would be easier to influence improperly a bench composed of three men than a bench composed of five. That is the most tangible argument that I have yet heard offered in favor of that proposition. I have also heard it suggested that the labor of the Supreme bench will be very considerable, and that it can be performed more easily and promptly by five than by three judges.

In regard to the first proposition, that it is more easy to corrupt, or improperly influence three men than five men, I have this to say, that so far as my observation extends, small bodies are generally most pure. In legislative bodies it is generally less easy to influence improperly the Senate, which is the smaller body, than it is the Assembly, which is the larger body. I know that in the California Legislature, it became a very common expression among those who were supposed to be endeavoring to influence legislation improperly, that if such or such a thing could once be got through the Senate, it would "go through the House, kiting." So far as legislative bodies are concerned, then, I have never seen this proposition verified, but on the contrary, I have found that small bodies of men have been less inclined to be influenced improperly than large ones. The responsibility is more divided in large than in small bodies, and the public eye is less definitely fixed upon individuals. The consequence is, that men in large bodies enjoy a greater degree of immunity from public censure than in small bodies.

JOHNSON—BANKS.

[July 23.]

But I do not place very much reliance upon arguments based on the corruptibility, or the extreme corruptibility, at all events, of judicial officers. And as I have not forgotten that the five minutes rule is impending over me, I will now leave that matter, in order to refer briefly to the other argument, namely, the propriety of having the larger number of judges on account of the amount of labor to be performed. Now if we provide for three judges, they will be selected from the best quality of talent we have; and it is well understood that in judicial matters work is performed rapidly or otherwise, according to the capacity and legal learning of the men who are engaged in it; and in my judgment, if we provide for five judges, it will be very difficult for us to find, in our community, that number of judges who are properly fitted and willing to perform the duties devolving upon judges of the Supreme Court. We shall find more practical knowledge and legal learning on a bench composed of three men than we should on one composed of five; for if we have five, in all probability there will be one or two blockheads among them, while if the selection is confined to three, there will be a greater probability of our securing not only a pure but an able Supreme judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would have preferred to entrust the advocacy of this proposition to others. But on a previous occasion, when, as I recollect, the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) was present, I took occasion to refer to this subject, and to present, very briefly, reasons why in my opinion we ought to provide for five rather than three judges, to constitute our Supreme Court. And what I shall now say, will be but a repetition of the reasons then presented.

I desire to discard as much as possible the idea of the corruptibility of judges, for I would be indisposed to make a suggestion of such character in this Convention, lest it might seem to betoken an acquiescence in, or endorsement on my part of certain charges which have lately appeared in the newspapers, more especially within the last few days. On that subject I do not propose to speak. I do not propose myself as the defender of the Supreme Court, nor of any judicial officer; neither do I propose to become a participant in any charges of the character of those which have been made public. But the important matter is this—and I hope I may secure the attention of the gentleman from Humboldt—

Mr. BANKS. I beg pardon. My attention was withdrawn but for a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON. The important point is this—not a question whether two judges or three judges can be the more easily purchased, but that a character of stability and fixedness should be given to the decisions of our Supreme Court. And that end, I believe, can more certainly be attained by placing five judges on the bench than by limiting the number to three. With five judges, we have in our decisions the aggregated experience, wisdom, and judicial learning of five men, as against that of three, contemplated by the committee's report; and the people generally, and the bar particularly, would certainly be more disposed to acquiesce in the final judgment of a Court composed of five members than in that of a Court constituted of but three.

I submit that the judicial history of California affords an illustration which is in point here. It is understood that until within a few months past, the Supreme Court of that State was constituted of but three judges, but it has been found necessary to increase the number. I think if there had been five judges on that bench from the commencement, instead of three, the people of California would have been spared the spectacle of so great a number of reversed decisions and conflicting opinions of the Supreme Court. They have had in California numerous cases like this: A decision is rendered, with one judge dissenting; then in a short time one of the judges in the majority goes out, the dissenter remains, and a new judge comes in and takes his place; then, upon a rehearing, or the same questions being raised in a new case, the judge who was at first in the minority finds himself in the majority; and thus important questions have been decided, and the decisions within a few months thereafter overruled and reversed.

Under such a state of things, men may invest their money in some enterprise, risking their all upon the decisions of the Courts, as enunciated by the highest tribunal of the State, and after the lapse of a few months, or perhaps a year at the utmost, they may find themselves occupying a position of direct antagonism to that which they held by the previous decision, and the result may be their ruin. And our own experience shows that fortunes have been lost in consequence of litigants depending on the stability of decisions of a Court so constituted. If we provide for five judges on the Supreme bench, those opportunities for reversal of decisions are not so readily presented.

This evil is of comparatively little consequence, so far as it refers to and affects only individual litigants; but even then it is better for the public at large that the decisions of the Courts should be permanent, and there are perhaps but very few cases decided where the public generally have not, directly or remotely, some degree of interest in the question. Therefore I insist that the public interest is better subserved, in all cases, by making such provisions that the decisions of the Courts cannot be readily reversed. If we provide for five judges, frequent changes in the judgments and opinions of the court are not so liable to occur, and the community and the bar will have more confidence in the final adjudications of our court of last resort.

DELONG—BROSNAN—JOHNSON.

[July 23.

Some objection has been made on the ground of cost. It is true, but the additional sum of fourteen thousand dollars a year, I think, will be well expended. And it may be that at some future time the number of judges can consistently with the public interests be reduced. Now is the time, however, in my judgment, at the very inception of our State Government, when the great questions of the day are to be litigated in our Courts, and when, if ever, we require a Supreme Court of five judges. Then, when litigation shall be less, when the great principles involved shall have been settled by final adjudication, we can fall back upon the smaller number, three judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. DELONG. What is the exact question?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion that we shall have five instead of three Supreme Court judges.

Mr. BROSNAN. Permit me a moment to explain, inasmuch as my colleague was not in when I made the motion. I found that there was an opinion prevailing to some extent in the Convention, or among some of the members of it, to the effect that it would be desirable to provide for five judges of the Supreme Court, in place of three, as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary; and in order that we may facilitate business as we go along, making the sections to conform to the number, whether it shall be three or five, I proposed, not by any means as my own choice, but in order to test the sense of the Convention upon that subject, before the Committee of the Whole shall enter upon the consideration of the report in detail, that we shall decide to have five judges in the first instance. The report provides for power in the Legislature to increase the number, as the public good may require, commencing with three. I have made the motion solely with the view of ascertaining the sense of the Convention.

Mr. DELONG. In much that has been said by the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) I concur, but I have this to say to this Convention, that if we are wise—

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman proceeds, I will call his attention to the fact, which he may not be aware of, that a rule has been adopted limiting speeches to five minutes, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DELONG. I shall not exceed the limit. I say if the members of this Convention are wise, if they wish to act in a practical manner, or at least if they are desirous of having this Constitution adopted by the people, they must have especial regard to those provisions which met with disfavor last year. They must endeavor to avoid, so far as may be in their power, at all events, those errors which then met with the disapproval of the people. There were several objections urged against the Constitution presented last year, and prominent amongst them was that of the expense involved. And at this time, too, almost the only question is, "can we afford it?" Let us convince business men, and the community generally, that we can afford it, that the cost will not be much more than that of the present territorial form of government, and the people will adopt our Constitution. But can we do that if we increase rather than decrease the number of officers to be provided for under this instrument, and consequently increase the amount to be paid for salaries? I think not. Let us start, then, with but three judges, in the name of economy, giving the people the right, in their first Legislature, if they desire it, to increase the number to five. There will be but very little business done by the Court before the people will have an opportunity to be heard through the Legislature, and to increase the number of judges if they shall so determine. We then go before the people with an instrument which promises them a cheaper government, if they desire it, and at the same time if they wish to increase the number of Supreme Court judges, they are at liberty to do so. On the other hand, if you fix upon five as the number of judges in the first instance, leaving the Legislature power to reduce the number, people will say, "Oh, yes; they have the power, but they never will decrease the number. There will be five men on the bench, all of whom will have friends, and you never will get any of them off." I know in the committee that was urged, and regarded as a serious objection, and we agreed to change the plan, although many of us preferred the larger number of judges. The gentleman from Ormsby, I think, was not present.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was present at one time, when five judges were agreed upon. Subsequently that was reconsidered.

Mr. DELONG. At the subsequent meeting I was present, when we agreed to change the number to three; and we concluded to make that change on the grounds which I have stated. If we provide for five judges in the first place, with power in the Legislature to reduce the number, people will say that the salaries of five judges, at so much each, will amount to such a sum per annum for Supreme Court judges, and they will put the argument altogether on that basis. Now let us place the argument the other basis, by fixing upon three judges in the first place. There can be but little business before the Legislature will have an opportunity to increase the number, if necessary; and, as to an increase, I would say that California has gone on happily for many years with only three judges on her Supreme Bench, and to-day many members of the bar of that State think it would be better off with three than with five judges, because with five there are more dissenting opinions.

Mr. WARWICK. I was the one who proposed, in order to test the sense of the Judiciary Committee, to increase the number of judges to five. I made the proposition judging from the experience of California, and having the sanction of several prominent members of the bar, and even the indorsement, I believe, of the able gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) who has just spoken. I thought that, having the approval of so distinguished a lawyer, in view of the experience of California in the past, which has been such as to render it necessary to increase the number of judges in that State, and considering also the magnitude of the interests involved in our litigation, it would be well enough to increase the number to five. I spoke to several members of the committee, and they agreed with me, and the proposition was concurred in by the committee. Afterwards, however, actuated by considerations of economy, the committee saw fit to rescind that action, but with the understanding that the question would be brought up in the Convention. I think, myself, that it would be practically more economical to provide for five judges, than for three, in consideration of the interests involved in our litigation. The decisions would then be more satisfactory to litigants, to tax-payers, and to the people generally, while the increase of cost, in the matter of salaries, would be but slight.

Mr. WETHERILL. The difference in expense is only fourteen thousand dollars a year. I know, but these various items go to swell up the grand total, and I believe there is no necessity for more than three Supreme Court judges. Even with three judges we shall have great difficulty in our nominating Conventions to find that number of men possessing the requisite capability who will accept the position; and with five we shall encounter the same difficulty, but greatly increased. If we wish to secure ability and discretion on the bench, I think we shall succeed better by limiting the number to three instead of five, and I hope the change will not be made. ["Question! Question!"]

Mr. CHAPIN. If it is in order, I wish to say a word or two before the question is taken. I feel the importance, if not the necessity, of having a bench of five judges, and especially at this period, when there is so much important business to come up before the Courts. But I am free to confess to this committee my fear, that when we come to select five judges of the Supreme Court, and then some eight or nine judges of the several District Courts, we shall find ourselves a little short of timber.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is a reflection on the bar. There are two hundred lawyers in the gentleman's own county. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAPIN. But it is usual in Conventions when making nominations—and the politicians are very nervous and sensitive, indeed, on that subject—to so arrange the matter of selections that the several districts of the Territory or State shall all be represented; that each district shall be represented in the nominations, for whatever offices they may be. It will be so in this case, and that, above everything else, in my opinion, is what stands in the way of making good selections. I think, myself, that we ought to have five judges, but the question is whether we had not better start with three, and then leave the Legislature to increase the number, if it shall be found practicable and desirable.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. Brosnan, to provide for five judges, and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 8; noes, 14. So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will now read the article by sections.

COUNTY COURT IN STOREY COUNTY.

Mr. KENNEDY. It seems to me that before commencing the consideration of the article in detail, we might as well settle this other question, in regard to the County Court in Storey County. I will therefore move—it makes no difference which way the question is put—that we do not have a County Court in Storey County.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I rise to a question of order. It does not need any motion or resolution. If the gentleman desires to move to strike out so much as relates to that subject, I have no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think my motion is the very one that should be made, because it will be a vexed question, and it can be settled better now than when we are considering the article by sections. And there is another idea that should be taken into consideration; if we do not have a County Court in Storey, it will be necessary to increase the number of District Judges in that county.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the motion at the present time, believing that it will tend to harmonize our action.

Mr. NOURSE. I am in favor of this motion, and my reason is, that it will preserve uniformity in our judicial system. In the committee I was unable, and I still am unable, to see any good reason why we should provide for a County Court in one county, and for none in the others, when the addition of another District Judge in that county, making three instead of two in the district, will be sufficient provision for all the litigation of the county; and then all the records may be brought together, and kept in one place. This proposition for a County Court in Storey County, it seems to me, makes a bad break in our system, which is wholly unnecessary. Although there may be good reasons for it, I have not yet heard any such advanced.

FRIZELL—DELONG—KENNEDY.

[July 23.

Mr. FRIZELL. I hope the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, in relation to the County Court of Storey County, will be sustained. With all due deference to gentlemen who think differently, in my opinion, we need there a court of that character. And I cannot see that the provision creates any particular inharmony or discord in our proposed judicial system, when it allows the Legislature, as soon as any other county shall progress sufficiently in wealth and population, to establish a County Court in such county also. There are the Counties of Lander, and Humboldt, and Esmeralda, to each of which it is proposed, by the report of the Judiciary Committee, to give but one court and one judge; but I look forward to the time when they will have so far advanced, by reason of their local wealth, and their natural progress, as to need another court. Within the next two years, I have faith to believe that one, two, and possibly all three of those counties will require a County Court in addition, and the Legislature can make the necessary provision. In the meantime they will be sufficiently provided for under this article as reported. Therefore, I say that I discover no particular discord or inharmony in this provision for County Courts.

I am sorry to differ with gentlemen, but as a representative of Storey County, I say we do need that court. Our circumstances in that county are peculiar. There are numerous cases which properly come before a court of such nature, that might occupy all its time, sitting every day in the year. The District Court will have only its regular sessions, and these minor cases could only be reached at the regular terms, and would frequently have to go over from term to term. Hence, I insist that a County Court is needed in Storey County. Besides, I am always disposed to look with some degree of suspicion on practising attorneys—[merriment]—that is, in regard to the establishment of the courts. I stand here more as the representative of the people than of the bar, and I say that the people of that county need, and require us to give them a County Court. I hope that the report of the committee will be sustained.

Mr. DELONG. There is exactly where the whole difficulty lies, and that is what prevailed in the committee. Our darling little sister, Gold Hill, is aspiring. She wants to have the county divided, and when it is cut in two, she thinks she will get a court. In order to promote that end, the gentleman is willing to muddle this business, and injure the profession.

Mr. FRIZELL. Did I not give that up?

Mr. DELONG. Yes; by word of mouth; but some how or other in the committee the gentleman beat me, and having some experience in matters of that sort, I at once imagined there was a cat in the meal, and I am still of the same opinion. [Merriment.]

Now is it not really the object to divide the district, and give the little cañon city a court? If not, what is the object of our having a County Court? Cannot three District Judges do all the judicial business that we require in that county, with the aid of the justices of the peace, and so maintain the harmony of the system throughout the State? We can have one, two, or three judges, just as we need. But, no! With this exception for a County Court in our county, the whole article has got to be interlarded with "except the County of Storey," and to the courts in that county is to be given especially such and such jurisdiction. I say it muddles the whole thing, and I hope that Storey County will be allowed to stand like the rest of the State. Gold Hill appears in this matter here, as it did in the committee. It outmanaged me there, but I trust that the Convention will take the matter in hand, and preserve the uniformity of our judicial system.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have no particular feeling in this matter, and the only objection I have to making the exception in relation to Storey County, is that it spoils the harmony of the system. I have also heard from several of the delegates from Storey County, that the people do not want it there, but that they would prefer to have three district judges. In this matter I am willing now, as I was before the committee, to abide by the wishes of Storey County, and believing that a majority of the people of the county directly interested desire to have three district judges, and not a County Court, I shall vote to abolish the County Court.

Mr. FRIZELL. I spoke only two minutes and a half or three minutes, before, so my time is not yet exhausted. Now I am surprised that the gentleman from Lyon should profess to know more about the wishes of the people of Storey County than I do, and I assert that so far as establishing three District Judges is concerned, there is not a man or boy, old woman or young maid, in Storey County that has advocated it to my knowledge.

Mr. DELONG. If you have a County Court, suppose you want a change of venue from Storey County in any case, what Court would you go to?

Mr. FRIZELL. Excuse me; I am talking on time. [Merriment.]

Mr. DELONG. Oh; very well.

Mr. FRIZELL. Now I have no sinister motives in this matter. I seek nothing, and am asking nothing for Gold Hill. All I did ask in the first place, I gave up. Yielding to men older than myself, I acquiesced in the best humor in the world. But the people of Storey County do not want three District Judges, and I do not want them to have them because they really are not needed. On the other hand, the County Court is really needed, and I hope we shall not be deprived of it. Why, sir, I was in the Court when eight divorces were granted in one day. [Laughter.] At least it is so reported. I have mixed among the people of Storey,

Saturday,]

KENNEDY—COLLINS—PARKER.

[July 23.

not one class alone, but all classes, and I say we do not want three District Judges. And if you do away with our County Court, I shall make another speech of five minutes, if I can get a chance, in favor of two District Courts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I only wish to say, that before the gentleman's colleague, Mr. Hovey, went away this morning, he talked with me on this subject, and his earnest desire was to be here, in order to aid in abolishing this County Court of Storey County. He has often told me that was the wish of the people of Storey County.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not know by what right the gentleman spoke for Storey County. I claim to be as much a representative of that county as any other gentleman on this floor, and without professing to be able to state positively what is the opinion of the people of Storey, for one I believe that, if their true sentiment were obtained, it would be found to be almost unanimously in favor of a County Court. I know what is the feeling of the lawyers generally in regard to this matter, but I do not think the influence of the lawyers should be paramount upon a subject which pertains not to them alone, but to the people as a whole.

One reason why I want a County Court in our county is, that there are always a great many small cases, involving amounts which range between three hundred and five hundred dollars, and to carry on these small suits, there is a class of lawyers who are not extremely ambitious, and do not expect to receive those extraordinary fees which the higher grade of lawyers do, and yet they are just as competent as other men to carry these cases through the lower courts. By that means we can secure justice, in cases involving only those small amounts, without paying excessive costs, which have been known in some cases to amount to a great deal more than the sum for which suit was originally brought.

If you look at the constitution of society you will find it always divided into classes or grades—with higher, middling, and lower grades. And if you look at the various institutions organized under this arrangement of society, you will always find them graded in the same manner, because there is a class of minds adapted to each of those grades. So it should be with the arrangement of our judicial tribunals. There is no reason in the world why the District Court of Storey County should be brought down from the dignity of its lofty position to attend to these small cases that rightfully belong to a class beneath—to a Court lower in grade than a District Court. Then again, it would not be an easy matter if these small cases are left to the District Court, with two or three judges, to determine which judge should try them. One judge would feel that he did not want them, and another would feel the same reluctance, and it would be extremely difficult to get anybody to attend to them. I insist that there is this large class of cases involving smaller amounts that ought to be given to courts of a lower grade, and the District Court should not be burdened with them. In a lower court these small cases could be carried on cheaply and more promptly, and that, I contend, is the best system which gives justice promptly—on the spot—so that the law's delay is practically ignored.

I ask the Convention to give us this smaller court, that shall stand intermediately between the District Courts and the range of the inferior courts—those of the justices of the peace—although it may not meet with the approbation of some of the lawyers and office-holders. Why, sir, I have had occasion to go to a lawyer and ask him what his price would be to attend to a certain case in a Justice's Court, and of course he would not charge as much as in a District Court; and for like service in the County Court he would make a higher charge, and in the District Court so much more, making the arrangement according to the degree and status of the court. Then, I say that in regard to the expense—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PARKER. I understand that the proposition in the report is to have a County Court in only one county. Now I am no lawyer, nor the son of a lawyer, but I would like to ask of gentlemen of the bar, in all seriousness, how they are going to make that harmonize with the courts in other counties. I would like to know particularly what is going to be done in case of a change of venue? We will have to make some special provision for that, I suppose.

Mr. COLLINS. I will suggest, in answer to the gentleman's question, that the Legislature, in creating these courts, would probably be in the possession of good sense enough to make some provision by which, in a case where a change of venue is desired from the Storey County Court, it can be carried up to the District Court of an adjoining county.

Mr. PARKER. I think we would have to make some such provision here.

Mr. COLLINS. Would not the Legislature have the power, and the sense to do it? It might be very well for a lawyer to make that suggestion, in order to make a point in his argument, but it seems to me that it ought not to come from the practical sense of a layman.

Mr. PARKER. That is very possible, but then there are other difficulties. We provide that the Grand Jury shall make their presentments and findings of indictments in this court; and it is suggested to me that we have also a provision in the Constitution requiring that all laws must be of a general nature, and uniform in their operation. Now, in a case of murder in the first degree, for instance, the indictment will have to be transferred to another court. It seems to me that if we make such an exception to the general system, a great deal of work will necessarily have to be done, in the way of special legislation, in regard to transferring

NOURSE—MASON—CHAPIN—BANKS—COLLINS.

[July 23.

eases, change of venue, and almost everything else connected with such a court.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish simply to say, that it seems to me there is a good deal in this objection in regard to change of venue. For example, if a case is tried in the County Court in Storey County, the appeal lies to the District Court; but if you change the venue from Storey County, you necessarily give the appeal to the Supreme Court instead of the District Court. If you change one cog in the gearing, which should be as big as any other, it makes a smash every time the wheel brings it around. And you do not save any expense by it. It is no cheaper to try a case in the County Court than in the District Court. The county will have to pay the District Judges a salary of perhaps a thousand or two more a year, but then you will get much better timber for judges; because, the County Court being regarded as third rate, you cannot get as good men to accept the position of judge as you can in the District Court. It costs no more to impanel a jury, and no less, and the expense of one court is the same as the other, save and except the extra expense of the judge; in return for which you get a much better grade of legal talent on the bench, whilst at the same time you preserve the uniformity of the system.

I cannot appreciate the arguments of these gentlemen who are locally interested. I am glad to get information from them, of course, but in my judgment this is not merely a local question. We are making a Constitution for the whole State, and these gentlemen are here as much to make a Constitution for the County of Washoe as I am, and I am here to make a Constitution for the County of Storey, as much as they are. Therefore, while I take no part in any jealousy or rivalry that may exist between Gold Hill and Virginia, I only ask that the system which we adopt shall be uniform; and the burden of proof is upon those who ask for a County Court, that would be a variation from the general system, to show good reason why such a court should be provided for. I have heard no such good reason yet, and therefore I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. MASON. I can see no reason why there should be this clashing of interests. I feel as much interest in the future welfare of Storey County as in that of Esmeralda; but I say if there should be a County Court in Storey, there ought to be one also in Esmeralda, for we have the same kind of interests there. But I want uniformity in the system, and I am opposed to these County Courts. I look upon that whole system, as it has existed in this Territory, as little better than a nuisance, which should be abolished, not only in Washoe and Ormsby, and other small counties, but in every county.

As to the great preponderance of population in Storey County at the present time, I am under the impression that as soon as the wealth of some of the distant counties shall become developed, as, for example, Humboldt, Lander, Nye, and my own county, Storey County will not be burdened with any such vast superabundance of population.

Mr. CHAPIN. I would like to have this judicial system harmonize all the way through, by making it alike in every county; provided, always, that justice can be meted out in Storey County, where we have a vast amount of business, and where our manner of doing business may be somewhat different from that of the people of other counties. If my friend and colleague (Mr. Collins) be correct in his view, that a County Court is going to bring justice within the reach of the poorer classes of the people, then I would be in favor of it, most decidedly. I do not feel the weight of his arguments, however, for I cannot see why the matter may not be so arranged that we can get along just as well without a County Court. Then any such suit as those to which he has referred, may be brought in the District Court, and the litigants will have the benefit of a better class of men on the bench. The slight difference in the amount of salary, it appears to me, is of no account. If we can go into the District Court, and have all our cases tried there, I certainly prefer it, and I must hear stronger arguments than have yet been advanced to induce me to vote for the County Court.

Mr. BANKS. The gentlemen of the Storey County delegation, who are favorable to this proposed County Court, are among those members of the Convention to whose judgment I have been more especially in the habit of deferring, and I would very gladly do so in this instance, if I could. But, after listening to their arguments, I think the question resolves itself down to this—or, at all events, I see no point except this—that by having a County Court the community will be enabled to give employment to a class of lawyers generally regarded as inefficient. Now, sir, I have always believed in stimulating talent to the attainment of the most exalted qualifications possible, and by favoring the employment of only the best lawyers, we shall be stimulating the ambition of members of the profession to rise to that rank. There is in California a class of lawyers who never seem to aspire to anything beyond the Justices' Courts, and another class who never attempt to rise above the level of the County Courts. Those two classes I believe to be nuisances in any community, and I am ready to vote for anything that will have a tendency to discourage their existence. I believe there is no reason for this proposed deviation from the general system, except the one assigned by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins.) to which I have alluded, and that I conceive to be a very bad reason. Therefore I shall vote in favor of establishing a uniform system in all the counties of the State.

Mr. COLLINS. I ask the privilege of saying a word or to two—only half a minute. ["Leave Leave!"]

Saturday.] COLLINS—PARKER—GIBSON—BROSNAN—DELONG—JOHNSON—DUNNE, ETC. [July 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be allowed half a minute, if there is no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. I wish to say this, that in our Probate Court, or County Court, at this time, the docket is full, or certainly very nearly so. There are four hundred cases or thereabouts upon the printed docket. Now, it will take six months, or a year probably, for the District Court to clear off the present docket, and the small cases ought to be tried from week to week, or from month to month. The parties who are interested in them will suffer heavily, unless they have their cases promptly tried from time to time, and if we form these District Courts only, making no provision for a County Court, they cannot be tried until the docket of the District Court is cleared. I think that would work a manifest and great injustice to the poorer class of litigants, compelling them to wait until all these colossal cases are tried, some of which are going to occupy the time of the Courts probably from one to three weeks apiece.

I contend that society is classified, not by arbitrary rule, but by the law of nature, into first, second, third, and even fourth grades, and that we should not overlook that great law of nature when we are making the fundamental law of the community. If a lawyer is competent to carry causes through the Probate Court, and not competent, perhaps, for the higher court, we should nevertheless not ignore—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Lyon, (Mr. Kennedy,) to strike out the provision for a County Court in Storey County.

Mr. COLLINS. Is it in order to move to refer it back to the Storey delegation?

Mr. PARKER. We are in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COLLINS. But cannot one committee refer a subject to another?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly not.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the committee rise, and recommend that this part of the article be referred to the Storey delegation.

Mr. BROSNAN. There is nothing before the committee, except this motion. We have not yet considered the article by sections.

Mr. DELONG raised a question of order that the motion to rise could not be entertained while Mr. Kennedy's motion was pending.

After a brief discussion,

The CHAIRMAN overruled the point of order.

Mr. DELONG. The Storey delegation cannot agree, and what is the use of referring it? We shall have to settle the question here, at last.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would prefer that the delegation should settle the question among themselves, but the trouble is this, that the change proposed will involve corresponding changes in many other sections, and it would be impossible for the Convention, or the Committee of the Whole, to proceed any further with the article until final action has been taken upon this question. The proposed reference to the delegation would therefore practically place the whole article beyond our reach, for further consideration, until the delegation shall have reported.

Mr. DUNNE. I call attention to the fact that the reference would be equivalent to an adjournment, as this is the only business which the Convention has ready for consideration.

The question was taken on Mr. Gibson's motion that the committee rise and recommend a reference to the Storey delegation, and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Kennedy, to strike out so much as relates to a County Court in Storey County, and it was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. I give notice that I intend to move a reconsideration.

The committee proceeded to consider the article by sections.

ENUMERATION OF COURTS.

The SECRETARY read Section 1, as follows :

SECTION 1. The judicial power of this State shall be vested in a Supreme Court, District Courts, in County Courts, and in Justices of the Peace. The Legislature may also establish Courts, for municipal purposes only, in incorporated cities and towns.

Mr. BROSNAN. I now move to strike out the words "in County Courts."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that that has already been done by the action of the committee.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

CONSTITUTION OF SUPREME COURT.

Section 2 was read, as follows :

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and two associate Justices, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum : provided, that the Legislature, by a majority of the members elected to each branch thereof, may, at its second session, or any time thereafter, provide for the election of two additional associate Justices, and if so increased, three shall constitute a quorum. The majority of the whole Court shall be necessary to render a decision.

Mr. STURTEVANT. I move to amend the section by adding the following :

"Provided, That there shall be a special tax of one mill on the dollar, upon all property, real, personal, and mixed, including mines and mining property, to be retained as a special fund, and to be used only to pay the expenses of the Supreme Court of this State."

Mr. DELONG. We have provided for their compensation in another section, by a court fee.

Mr. NOURSE. At the request of my colleague, I second his amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. I move to amend by striking out "at its second session, or any time thereafter." Then it will leave the Legislature power to make the addition at the first session, if the interests of the people demand it.

Saturday,]

DUNNE—DELONG—JOHNSON—BROSNAN—PROCTOR—BANKS.

[July 23.

Mr. DUNNE. Why not strike out that clause altogether? Otherwise you limit them, as it will read, to the first session.

Mr. DELONG. No; they are not limited, then, to any session.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Chapin, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend by inserting the word "all" before "the members," so that the clause will read: "by a majority of all the members elected to each branch." etc.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendments being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

ELECTION AND TERM OF OFFICE OF JUSTICES.

Section 3 was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. The Justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at the general election, as provided by law, and shall hold office for the term of six years from the first day of January next succeeding their election; provided, that there shall be elected at the first election under this Constitution, three Justices of the Supreme Court, who shall hold office from the time of their election and qualification, and continue in office thereafter two, four, and six years respectively, from the first day of January next succeeding their election. They shall meet as soon as practicable after their election and qualification, and at their first meeting shall classify themselves, and determine by lot the term of office each shall fill, and the Justice drawing the shortest term shall be Chief Justice, and after the expiration of his term, the one having the next shortest term shall be Chief Justice, after which the senior Justice in commission shall be Chief Justice.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit now whether it is not advisable to fix the term so as to commence on the first Monday of December. We have a report from the Schedule Committee, I believe, in which such a provision is embodied, but I do not understand that it is contained in the report of the Judiciary Committee. It is sufficient, I apprehend, if it is in either one article or the other, and if we insert it here, when we are called to act upon the report of the Schedule Committee, if we find it repeated, we can strike it out. It is a matter that I am not particular about, and I prefer not to make any motion, but rather to suggest it to the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BROSNAN. As I understand the article, they will be judges from the time of their election and qualification, and may meet for the first term at such time as shall be provided, or at any time thereafter. No time is fixed for their first meeting, when they are to classify themselves by lot, except that it shall be as soon thereafter as practicable.

Mr. PROCTOR. If they are elected and qualified, and go into office in December, then the shortest term will be two years and one month, instead of two years.

Mr. BROSNAN. That is so.

Mr. JOHNSON. The objection I raise—and the explanation will only present it in a more striking view—is that there is no fixed time, no definite interval, between the period of their election and the time of their qualification. The election will occur on a particular day, and the time for qualification must necessarily be afterwards. My objection is, that there is not, as there should be, a fixed time, not only for their successors, but at which those who are first elected shall enter into office.

Mr. BROSNAN. I supposed that was to be provided for in the Schedule—that the time would be fixed in that when the judges, and all the State officers, shall enter upon the discharge of their duties.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then this would be in conflict with the Schedule, because there the time is fixed for the first Monday of December.

Mr. BROSNAN. We can make them harmonize. Will the gentleman suggest an amendment that will be in conformity with the provision in the Schedule?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will suggest that instead of "time of their election and qualification," we insert "from the first Monday in December."

Mr. BROSNAN. I am willing to accept that.

The question was taken on the amendment suggested by Mr. Johnson, and it was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Secretary read the proviso as amended?

The SECRETARY read as follows:

"Provided, That there shall be elected at the first election under this Constitution, three Justices of the Supreme Court, who shall hold office from the first Monday in December, 1864, and continue in office thereafter two, four, and six years, respectively."

Mr. JOHNSON. Now we want to add "until the election and qualification of their successors." My attention has been particularly called to this. The section should be so framed as by its language to continue the Supreme Court Judges in office until the election and qualification of their successors, which would be two years succeeding their election and qualification.

The SECRETARY. Then will you see if I have it right this time. Striking out, in the first place, "time of their election and qualification," and inserting in lieu thereof "first Monday in December, 1864;" then, in the second instance, striking out "from the first day of January next succeeding their election," and inserting instead "and until the election and qualification of their successors." Then it reads:

"Provided, That there shall be elected at the first election under this Constitution, three Justices of the Supreme Court, who shall hold office from the first Monday in December, 1864, and continue in office thereafter two, four, and six years, respectively, and until the election and qualification of their successors."

Mr. BANKS. While the gentlemen are fixing that proviso to suit them, I will ask of some gentleman more familiar with the subject than I am, what provision is made for filling vacancies?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will suggest that we pass over this section, informally, for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the section will be passed over for the present.

DELONG—CHAIRMAN—WETHERILL—FRIZELL—NOURSE.

[July 23.]

Mr. DELONG. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Humboldt, I will state that the Committee on the Judiciary came to the conclusion, pretty unanimously, I believe, that a judge who could stand the position in this country, must become iron-clad, and consequently there will be no danger of a vacancy. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that it becomes necessary, gentlemen of the committee, that we should have the entire attention of every member. It sometimes occurs that the neglect of one member hinders and delays the whole committee.

JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Section 4 was read, as heretofore amended, as follows :

SEC. 4. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law in which is involved the title or the right of possession of real estate or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand (exclusive of interest) or the value of property in controversy exceeds three hundred dollars; also, in other civil cases not included in the general subdivisions of law and equity, and also in all criminal cases in which the offense charged amounts to felony, on questions of law alone. The Court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, and also all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Each of the justices shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State, upon petition on behalf of any person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself or the Supreme Court, or before any District Court in the State, or before any judge of said Courts.

Mr. WETHERILL. I move to strike out "three," in the seventh line, and insert "two," so as to give jurisdiction in cases exceeding two hundred dollars.

Mr. DELONG. Oh, no! That breaks up the whole arrangement.

Mr. WETHERILL. Well, let it go.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

THE JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Section 5 was read, as follows :

SEC. 5. The State is hereby divided into nine Judicial Districts, of which the County of Storey shall constitute the first; the County of Ormsby the second; the County of Lyon the third; the County of Washoe the fourth; the Counties of Nye and Churchill the fifth; the County of Humboldt the sixth; the County of Lander the seventh; the County of Douglas the eighth; and the County of Esmeralda the ninth. The County of Roop shall be attached to the County of Washoe for judicial purposes, until as herein otherwise provided by law. The Legislature may, however, by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch thereof, provide by an alteration in the boundaries or division of the districts herein prescribed, or otherwise, for increasing or diminishing the number of the Judicial Districts and judges therein; but no such change shall take effect except in case of a vacancy, or the expiration of the term of an incumbent of the office. At the first election under this Constitution, there shall be elected in each of the respective districts, (except as in this section hereafter otherwise provided,) one District Judge, who shall hold office from the time of his election and qualification until the first day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven. After the said first election, there shall be elected at the general election which immediately precedes the expiration of the term of his predecessor, one District Judge in each of the respective Judicial Districts, (except in the first district, as in this section hereinafter provided.) The District Judges shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts, and shall hold office for the term of four years (excepting those elected at said first election) from the first day of January next succeeding their election and qualification; provided, that the first Judicial District shall be entitled to and shall have two District Judges, who shall possess co-extensive and concurrent jurisdiction, and who shall be elected at the same time, in the same manner, and shall hold office for the like terms, as herein prescribed in relation to the judges in other Judicial Districts.

DISTRICT JUDGES IN STOREY COUNTY.

Mr. DELONG. I move to amend the proviso by striking out the word "two," and inserting instead the word "three," so that we may have three judges in Storey County.

Mr. FRIZELL. I look upon this as an important matter, and I would like to have the yeas and nays taken upon the question of abolishing the County Courts.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be reached in the Convention; we are now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRIZELL. I know; but when I go back to my constituents, I wish to stand right on the record. That is the reason I shall ask for a vote by yeas and nays. But if the County Court is to be abolished, I think that two District Judges in Storey County would be sufficient. I believe there would be difficulty in getting a panel of jurors for a greater number of courts, for all the jurors that can be obtained in the county, in my opinion, will be no more than are required for one District Court. The business of the community is in a mixed up, hotch-potch condition, and the people generally are so much interested in the various questions that are litigated, that it is very difficult now to get an impartial jury. I think, however, that we might get along with two District Judges, if we have no County Court, but three are not required. I hope gentlemen will consider this matter, and on the motion of my colleague to strike out "two," and insert "three," I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be in order to demand the yeas and nays in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NOURSE. The gentleman's apprehensions are not well grounded, for the reason that it is not proposed to establish three District Courts, but only one District Court, with three judges. Those judges will divide up the calendar, and hold court all in the same building, though in different rooms. In my judgment, it will be easier to get the requisite number of jurors for this one court, with three judges, than it would be for two distinct District Courts. You will not require so large a venire as you would for two District Courts, or if you were to have a separate County Court. For example, suppose that one judge is impaneling a jury in a murder case. Many of the jurors will be found disqualified from serving, by reason of having formed an opinion; but a jury is finally obtained, and the case goes on, and then all the jurors who were excused in that case are perfectly eligible to sit in the next room, before another judge, who is trying a civil case in which they are not interested at all. Therefore, I say, it will not take as many jurors to run a District Court with three judges, as it would if you have separate courts, in which, if a juror is thrown out in one case on trial, he cannot act anywhere, and is left idle until the trial of that case is concluded.

Saturday,] BANKS—DELONG—COLLINS—CHAPIN—BROSNAN—DUNNE—NOURSE—JOHNSON. [July 23.

As to the number of judges, I think nobody will deny that for the next two years, at all events, three judges will be none too many in that county; and the Legislature may make provision for reducing the number at that time, if there should be a decrease in the amount of business. It may provide that after the term of one of the judges expires, there shall be but two in the district, or may even reduce the number to one, if it shall be deemed expedient.

Mr. BANKS. Now, sir, I wish to understand this matter perfectly before I am required to vote upon it. My impression concerning it (and I desire to be corrected if I am not right) is this: In the first place, Storey County constitutes but one judicial district, with one court. That court is to consist, if we adopt this amendment, (as I suppose we shall, after having abolished the County Court,) of three judges. They are to occupy different apartments, in the trial of causes; and then, so far as relates to decisions, I will ask if it will require the concurrence of at least two of the judges to render a decision?

Mr. DELONG. Oh, no; they are to be independent.

Mr. BANKS. They will be independent, then, so far as their action is concerned, but they will constitute, at the same time, one court. Now, I ask, why would it not be as well to create three courts, allowing each one of them to exercise jurisdiction all over the county, just as it is now provided they shall, instead of constituting one court, and leaving the three judges of that court to sit and act separately, as though each judge constituted a court?

Mr. DELONG. The difficulty is this: suppose that one judge should be a little more popular than the others; the result would be that his court would be overcrowded, and the other two would be without business, or with very little to do, so that we should be blocked up just as badly as we are now. Under this arrangement, lawyers and litigants will not know beforehand which judge is going to try any particular cause. After the calendar is made up, the judges will apportion it among themselves, and each then goes into session upon the cases assigned to him, and it is only after the apportionment of the calendar that a man knows which judge he is to appear before.

In that way everything goes on harmoniously. There are no separate records, and only one clerk and one jury.

Mr. BANKS. Well, the answer is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. COLLINS. I hope this amendment will not be adopted, but that, on the contrary, we shall adhere to the provision for two judges. When the proper time comes, I shall endeavor to urge my reasons, as well as I may within the five minutes allowed. I do not think that now is the time to make a speech upon that point.

The question was taken, viva voce, on the amendment offered by Mr. DeLong, and the vote appeared to be in the affirmative.

Mr. COLLINS. I ask for a division.

Mr. DELONG. I have a word to say before the division is taken, and it is this: I express it as my opinion, as a member of the bar of Storey County, that two district judges, working constantly from this time on for one year, could not try all the causes which are now on the calendar. There are about four hundred causes on the calendar, besides a number which have been commenced since the calendar was printed. Then, in addition, they are to have all the business now done by the Probate Court, which will occupy a great deal of time every month. Therefore, I say, if you limit it to two judges, the court will be blocked up just as it is now. We have some mining suits which will take two, three, or four weeks each to try, and then all the County Court business and criminal cases are also to come in. We require the services of three judges, and cannot get along with a less number.

The question was taken by a division, on Mr. DeLong's amendment, and the vote was—ayes, 16; noes, 2—no quorum voting.

The question was then again taken, viva voce, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAPIN. I have an amendment to come in at the end of the section. I move to amend by adding the following words:

"Provided, That the Legislature may reduce the number of District Judges, when the business of the county can be performed by a less number."

Mr. BROSNAN. That is already provided for.

Mr. CHAPIN. All right, then; I withdraw it.

Mr. DUNNE. I understood the Secretary to read that the County of Roop shall be attached to Washoe, etc., "until as herein otherwise provided." I call the attention of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee to that language. I would like to know whether the word "as" is there, or not.

The SECRETARY. It reads, "until as herein otherwise provided by law."

Mr. NOURSE. I move to strike out the words "as herein."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to propose an amendment, which will be in harmony with the suggestion I made relative to the terms of judges of the Supreme Court. I cannot refer to the number of the lines, as I am reading from the printed copy, but the clause I wish to amend now reads as follows :

JOHNSON—DELONG.

[July 23.

"At the first election under this Constitution, there shall be elected in each of the respective districts, (except as in this section hereafter otherwise provided,) one District Judge, who shall hold office from the time of his election and qualification, until the first day of January, in the year 1867."

This is liable to the same objection as that which was urged in reference to the Supreme Court Judges, and to prevent a conflict of language, I move to strike out the words "time of his election and qualification," and insert in their stead "first Monday of December, 1864," and it will then read :

"One District Judge, who shall hold office from the first Monday of December, 1864, and until the first day of January, in the year 1867."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now I will offer another amendment in the same clause. It reads—"At the first election under this Constitution," etc. I move to insert the word "general," so as to read—"At the first general election." No doubt this was intended, as I see the word "general" occurs in a subsequent clause.

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would suggest a still further amendment in the same sentence. In the printed copy it reads—"And until the first day of January, in the year 1867," and the amendment I suggest, is to insert the syllable "Mon," so as to read—"And until the first Monday of January, in the year 1867."

The amendment suggested was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. The same alteration is rendered necessary in the subsequent clause, which reads as follows :

"The District Judges shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts, and shall hold office for the term of four years, (excepting those elected at said first election,) from the first day of January next succeeding their election and qualification."

I move to amend by inserting the syllable "Mon" in that clause also, so as to read "from the first Monday of January," instead of the "first day of January."

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

No further amendments being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

JUSTICES OF SUPREME COURT—AGAIN.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that the committee now return to the consideration of Section 3, which was passed over informally.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the committee will take up Section 3 again.

Mr. JOHNSON. I offer the same amendment in the first clause of Section 3, so as to read—

"Shall hold office for the term of six years from the first Monday of January next succeeding their election," instead of the "first day of January."

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. The same amendment is necessary a few lines further on. It now reads—"and continue in office thereafter two, four, and six years, respectively, from the first day of January next succeeding their election." I move to amend that so as to read—"from the first Monday of January next succeeding their election."

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. The section has already been amended by striking out "time of their election and qualification," and inserting instead "first Monday of December, 1864." I will ask that the section be read as now amended.

The SECRETARY read as follows :

SEC. 3. The Justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at the general election, as provided by law, and shall hold office for the term of six years from the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that there shall be elected at the first election under this Constitution, three Justices of the Supreme Court, who shall hold office from the first Monday of December, 1864, and continue in office thereafter two, four, and six years respectively, from the first Monday of January next succeeding their election. They shall meet as soon as practicable after their election and qualification, and at their first meeting shall classify themselves, and determine by lot the term of office each shall fill, and the Justice drawing the shortest term shall be Chief Justice, and after the expiration of his term, the one having the next shortest term shall be Chief Justice, after which the senior Justice in commission shall be Chief Justice.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS.

Section 6 was read as follows :

SEC. 6. The District Court in the several Judicial Districts of this State, (except in the First District, for which distinct provision is otherwise made in this article,) shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law which involve the title to or the right of possession of real property, or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand (exclusive of interest) or the value of the property in controversy exceeds three hundred dollars; also, in all cases relating to the estates of deceased persons, and of the action of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, and also, in all criminal cases, not otherwise provided for in this Constitution, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. They shall also have appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in Justices' Courts, and other inferior tribunals, as the Legislature may prescribe. The District Courts and their judges shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and all other writs necessary to the complete exercise of their jurisdiction; and also, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person held in actual custody in their respective districts.

ing the First District. I move that all that, including the parentheses, be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend by inserting after the words "deceased persons," the words, "and the persons and estates of minors."

Mr. BANKS. I will suggest further, whether it would not be well to include cases of divorce.

Mr. DELONG. They are covered already. Those are actions in equity, and it is provided that the District Courts shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity. They will also have jurisdiction in all other cases provided for by law.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) but it appears to me that the courts must have equity jurisdiction over the estates of minors and insane persons. That is clearly a branch of the equity jurisdiction of the courts.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will add to my amendment the words, "and insane persons."

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Johnson, as modified, and it was agreed to.

Mr. NOURSE. I find a clause here which reads :

"They shall also have appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in Justices' Courts, and other inferior tribunals, as the Legislature may prescribe."

I move to amend that by inserting the word "such" before "other," so as to read, "in such other inferior tribunals as the Legislature may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNNE. I move to amend by striking out the word "prescribe," and inserting "provide." To "prescribe" would imply a limitation of jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

No further amendment being offered, the section, as amended, was adopted.

STOREY COUNTY COURT.

Section 7 was read, as follows :

SEC. 7. The District Court in the First Judicial District shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law which involve the title or the right of possession to or the possession of real property, or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand (exclusive of interest) or the value of the property in controversy exceeds five hundred dollars; also, in all other civil cases not provided for in this Constitution, and also in all criminal cases where the punishment may be death. The said District Court, and the judges thereof, shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and all other writs necessary to the complete exercise of its jurisdiction; and also, shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person held in actual custody in said district.

Mr. DELONG. All that needs to come out now, since we have determined to make the system uniform by abolishing the County Court in Storey County. I move that the section be stricken out.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. NOURSE. I move to strike out Section 8, also. There is no need of reading it, for it relates altogether to County Courts.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. NOURSE. Section 9 is all in regard to the County Court, also. I think that had better be stricken out without taking the time to read it.

JURISDICTION IN STOREY COUNTY.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not necessary to read the section. But in this connection, I desire to call the attention of members of the legal profession to one important consideration. So far as it relates to criminal business, ample provision has been made in this section; but since it has been determined to assign that business in Storey County to a District Court embracing three judges, I apprehend that some further provision will be necessary. The court is to be organized in December, and the Legislature does not convene until that time; hence it is necessary, in my judgment, to adopt some provision in the Constitution by which a grand jury can be impaneled in the meantime, because their services may be required before the Legislature will have time to enact needful laws concerning this particular matter. It occurs to me that it would be well for the Convention to designate one of the courts in which that jurisdiction shall be vested, at least until the Legislature can regulate the subject by law.

Mr. BANKS. Is there anything in Section 7, Section 8, or Section 9, which does not depend upon that portion which we have already stricken out?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think there is anything in those sections which could not well be stricken out. But here is the difficulty—and to this I wish to call the attention more particularly of the legal gentlemen of the Storey delegation—that during this intervening period of time, after the organization of the District Courts, and before the Legislature can take action, none of these courts, although possessed of co-extensive jurisdiction in criminal as well as civil cases, have especial authority given in criminal matters, as for example in the impaneling of a grand jury. I think it is important that one of these courts or judges should be designated, at all events, until provision shall be made by law.

Mr. DELONG. I really do not think that anything further is necessary. Either one of the judges of the District Court can receive the report of the grand jury, and direct it in every respect, the same as though there were but one judge in the district. An instruction from either one of the judges, would be an instruction from the First District Court.

Saturday.]

BROSNAN—BANKS—JOHNSON—NOURSE.

[July 23.

Mr. BROSNAN. I do not see any difficulty at all in the way. The misapprehension seems to arise from the fact that gentlemen are confounding judges with courts. There is to be but one court, and all the judges of that court are to have co-extensive and concurrent power in all actions, criminal and civil. All the business to be done, which is to come before that one court, will be subdivided between the three judges of the court.

Mr. BANKS. And the ruling of each is final, so far as that court is concerned, is it not?

Mr. BROSNAN. Certainly. And upon any decision by either of the judges, an appeal can be taken from that court to the Supreme Court. The grand jury is to be impaneled as heretofore; it is in and for that court. And furthermore, there is a provision contained in this article to the effect that the courts now existing, and the officers now in power and office, shall so remain, and not be superseded by anything herein contained, until the provisions of this article shall go into operation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Nevertheless, I think it is important to have this matter fully understood, and my point is not amenable to the criticism which my friend from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) has suggested. But, with all deference to that gentleman, it occurs to me that, as proposed, this is a mongrel system, in so far as it provides for one court and three judges, each judge clothed with full and complete jurisdiction. It is not a court in which a majority is required to act, but each judge has equal power with his associates. It is for that reason—because there are three judges, each having equal power and jurisdiction—that I suggest that one of them should be designated for this important duty. Any one of them may perform it, but suppose that under peculiar circumstances there might be a disagreement in regard to the matter? There may be questions of great moment arising in a criminal prosecution. The defendant may, for sufficient reasons, prefer that the presentment shall be made in his case to Judge A., or Judge B., whilst the prosecution, influenced by some unexplained reason may desire to bring the subject before one of the other judges.

It is true we provide that existing courts shall not be superseded until the new courts are organized, and the judges enter upon the duties of office, but gentlemen will observe that the date of that occurrence is fixed before the time the Legislature convenes, and consequently there is an interval between the commencement of the courts and the assembling of the Legislature, or the time when the Legislature can make suitable provision in the matter, whereby there may be some controlling power or authority in the district. It is now a general power, conferred upon each of the judges alike, and for the reason that there are to be three of them, I submit this proposition to the Convention, that is necessary, for the intervening time, that provision shall be made by which grand juries may be impaneled by authority of one of those judges; or, if you please, by authority of two of them, or of all three. I can see distinctly that a practical difficulty is likely to arise in this matter, and it seems strange to me that other gentlemen do not recognize similar objections.

Mr. BROSNAN. My friend from Ormsby will see, of course, that it is impossible for us in this Convention to designate any one of the three judges, inasmuch as they are not yet elected, and there is no one whom we could name.

Mr. JOHNSON. That only presents the difficulty which I have suggested in a more forcible light, and the same practical objections were urged in the committee. Instead of having one District Court with three judges, we should have provided for three District Courts, although we might have given them concurrent jurisdiction over the whole county. Then there would have been Judicial Districts No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3, and although the judges would have been elected in the same county, and would possess co-extensive jurisdiction within that county, nevertheless we could direct that until the Legislature should otherwise provide by law, the judge of District No. 1, or No. 2, or No. 3—whichever we might please to designate—shall exercise jurisdiction, in criminal cases, in said county. Then we would avoid that confusion which, it appears to me, must inevitably result from having these three judges, each with the self-same powers and jurisdiction, and all sitting in the same court. I merely desire to make the suggestion of this practical difficulty, in order that, if possible, it may be obviated.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not anticipate so much difficulty as the gentleman from Ormsby does, although I see clearly that we must provide for this matter of jurisdiction temporarily, in order to save trouble. I suppose, however, that such provision should be made in the Schedule, the peculiar office of which is to arrange for the change from one system of government to the other.

As to the matter of three judges in one district, I cannot see the difficulty which the gentleman apprehends. The scheme is not a new one. It has been tried year after year in New York, the State from which we borrow all the leading features of our code. There, the judges, by a rule of court—and every court necessarily has power to make its own rules—arrange for a division of their business; and under the rules of the court, the three judges, sitting together for the purpose, divide the calendar. All these minor details and arrangements which the Legislature neglects, or fails to make, are necessarily provided for by the rules of the court, and I have no fear that in this State, especially since we have the advantage of the precedents derived from the courts in New York, we shall find any difficulty on that score.

If you make three distinct districts, numbering the courts in them separately, and giving

BANKS—BROSNAN—DELONG—WARWICK—JOHNSON.

[July 23.

each concurrent jurisdiction throughout the county, you thereby necessarily give the plaintiff, in any suit, his choice of judges. The gentleman from Storey (Mr. DeLong) has referred to other objectionable features in that plan, but this one thing, it seems to me, should be sufficient for its overwhelming condemnation, that a plaintiff has a chance to pick his judge, and, of course, will always select the one who, for some reason or other, he thinks would decide the case in his favor. That would necessarily lead to suspicions against the integrity of the judge, and that is the reason, I presume, why the courts in New York establish rules for the management of their business, and division of their labors. That will undoubtedly be done here. Then, whichever judge is designated, under the rule, for the criminal business, will charge the grand jury, receive the presentments and indictments, and all that, and the others will attend to the civil calendar. I cannot see any difficulty in the way of the harmonious working of the plan, and I never heard that there was any, where it has been tried. But I can see that there may, perhaps, be a difficulty at the first, although even for this interregnum of a month, or it may be, for two or three months, before the enactment of any law on the subject by the Legislature, I do not know but the matter might be arranged by a rule of the court; and if not, at any rate, we can fix it in the Schedule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind gentlemen that the question is on the motion to strike out Section 9.

Mr. BANKS. I think it is quite important that we should understand this matter, at any rate. Now, sir, with three judges constituting one court, and each with the same power, and all the power of the court, I want to know how it would work in a case like this: Suppose I bring a suit before one of those judges, and he decides it in a certain way, but the other two do not view the matter as he does—then, in the same case, an appeal is taken; is that an appeal from the judge who decided the case, or from the court?

Mr. BROSNAN. You do not bring your case before the judge individually, but before the court.

Mr. DELONG. Some one judge tries the case, and you take your appeal not from his decision, but from the judgment of the First District Court.

Mr. BANKS. But suppose the other judges do not concur in that judgment?

Mr. DELONG. They have nothing to say about it, any more than if they were in another district altogether.

Mr. BANKS. Then we have the anomaly of an appeal from one court, consisting of three persons, when a majority of that court would have decided the other way.

Mr. DELONG. I would really recommend the gentlemen to the study of the law.

Mr. BANKS. I will make the same recommendation to the gentleman from Storey. [Mer- riment.]

Mr. WARWICK. I do not see any difficulty in this matter. In the first place, these judges have nothing to do with each others' decisions, because each one sits as a separate court. The calendar is divided between them, and any decision by either one of them is appealable to the Supreme Court. It is not a decision of a majority, or of an individual judge, but a decision of the court rendered by that one of the judges who has tried the cause. The calendar is divided between them, just as we divide our business here between the several committees, as we may agree among ourselves, but with this distinction, that each judge tries, and makes the final disposition of each cause upon his portion of the calendar. It amounts to the same thing, in that respect, as if there were three courts; we simply make it one district, because we do not wish to allow litigants to exercise their own preferences as to particular judges. We want the calendar made up, and divided, in the first place, by lot, it may be, and then each judge has full and entire jurisdiction and control over that portion of the calendar which has been allotted to him.

Mr. DELONG. What prevents the occurrence of the anomaly which is apprehended by the gentleman from San Francisco [Merriment,] or rather I should say from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) is the fact that the judgment of each judge becomes the judgment of the First District Court. The other judges have nothing to say about the particular case he decides, and therefore no such phenomenon as a judgment of the First District Court against the opinion of two of its judges, can by any possibility happen. The other judges, having nothing to do with the case, of course can give no opinion concerning it.

Mr. BANKS. All I want is to have a clear understanding of the matter, and if other members of this committee can see plainly that no such difficult complication can arise, then all I have to say is, that I cordially congratulate them upon their wonderful acumen. I understand now that the theory of the plan is this: that the District Court of Storey County shall have authority to delegate all its power to any of its judges; that they divide up the work between them; that the whole court says to A, B, and C, first that A shall take a certain portion of cases, and whatever he decides shall be the judgment of the court; then that B shall take another portion, and so on in regard to each of the judges.

Mr. JOHNSON. I deny, in advance, that there is or can be any power under this Constitution to divide these duties and responsibilities, and I assume that you must have the judgment of a majority of the court, at least, in order to render such judgment effective. Now, sir, this is the anomaly: you provide for your three judges in one district, but where is there anything contained in this Constitution

DE LONG—JOHNSON—BROSNAN.

[July 23.]

by which it is declared that each one of those judges shall have the same power that all the others have? If you provide for three judges in one district, it will be absolutely necessary that you shall adopt some provision to regulate their action.

Gentlemen have spoken of the operation of this system under the Constitution of the State of New York, but I do not find any such provision in that Constitution. They have Supreme Courts in that State, each consisting of four judges, one of whom is the presiding judge at the general term. I will read from Article VI, of the Constitution of New York, the provisions in relation to the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court.

SEC. 2. There shall be a Court of Appeals, composed of eight judges, of whom four shall be elected by the electors of the State for eight years, and four selected from the class of Justices of the Supreme Court having the shortest time to serve. Provision shall be made by law for designating one of the number elected, as Chief Judge, and for selecting such Justices of the Supreme Court, from time to time, and for so classifying those elected that one shall be elected every second year.

SEC. 3. There shall be a Supreme Court having general jurisdiction in law and equity.

SEC. 4. The State shall be divided into eight Judicial Districts, of which the city of New York shall be one; the others to be bounded by county lines, and to be compact, and equal in population, as nearly as may be. There shall be four Justices of the Supreme Court in each district, and as many more in the district composed of the city of New York as may from time to time be authorized by law, etc.

Mr. DE LONG. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the constitutional provision in this article which prevents the difficulty he apprehends. I understand him to say there is no power in the Constitution for dividing their labors; but Section 5, which we have already adopted, says that the First Judicial District shall have three District Judges, "who shall possess co-extensive and concurrent jurisdiction."

Mr. JOHNSON. But how would you divide the business of the court? Where is the provision of the Constitution, or the power conferred, to enact a law for that purpose? There is nothing whatever of that nature contained in it.

Mr. DE LONG. Every court has power to regulate that matter by rule.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was about proceeding to speak of that power. Now, without occupying further time by quoting from the Constitution of New York, I submit that there is no such provision contained in this instrument—none whatever. And the very fact that they have the powers which are there conferred disproves the proposition of the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse.) Because in New York the Supreme Court is but one court, presided over by one judge at the general term, at which motions may be heard, and other business transacted. The absence of any provision here for separate courts is very material. I insist, therefore, that the proposition before us is for the creation of a mongrel system, a parallel to which you can not find in any State, nor anything analogous to it. And I will say in regard to it this much, that you are venturing upon experimental ground—upon a system that is wholly untried, that is entirely new. For I believe it is unlike anything to be found in the Constitution of any other State, and if I am incorrect in that, I shall be happy to be set right, by any gentleman who possesses more extensive or more accurate knowledge than I do upon the subject.

In my judgment, if we are going to adopt this experiment, it is certainly very essential that we should incorporate some further provision in this article, of a character similar to what I have suggested, and I can see no difficulty in the way of adopting some such provision. One gentleman has suggested that by having separate courts, litigants will prefer proceeding before some particular District Judge, and thus one court would have all the business to the exclusion of the others. I see no reason why such should be the result. We know that in San Francisco they have had for several years two District Courts, with concurrent jurisdiction, and have quite recently established another, making the third District Court in that city; and I have never heard of any such difficulty arising there. But with the plan here proposed, I can foresee insuperable obstacles, as they appear to me, which will have to be encountered from the very inception of the court, and more especially will that be the case at the beginning, during the period intervening between the organization of the court and the time when the Legislature may enact laws providing for this novel system, and putting it into working order. There may be a controversy between the judges as to who shall exercise the criminal jurisdiction of the court, and especially in regard to that power we ought most certainly to prescribe the officer who shall perform those particular functions in the outset.

In relation to all of these matters, the article does not seem to have been well digested, probably for the reason that it was originally intended that the County Court should exercise exclusively this criminal jurisdiction. Hence it is quite apparent that all of our troubles now result from the abandonment of that system which had been well digested, and the substitution of another in its place. I present these views more particularly to the consideration of the members from Storey County, which is immediately interested.

Mr. BROSNAN. I rise merely for the purpose of stating to the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) that the Supreme Court of New York, to which he has referred, has an appellate power over each of the justices that compose that court. They are District Judges at the same time that they constitute a Supreme Court, and there is the Court of Appeals, back of them. There are four Supreme Court Justices in each district, and they each do circuit business, and also sit in bank in review of the decisions and judgments of the District Courts, the individual judge whose decision is to be passed upon not sitting in that case in the court of review; and then from the decision of these three judges of the Supreme Court there is a still further appeal to the Court of Appeals. That is the system in operation in New York.

JOHNSON—BROSNAN—NOURSE.

[July 23.

Mr. JOHNSON. Permit me to ask one question which may relieve my mind from embarrassment. It refers to this very point of difference. Is there, under the judicial system of New York, a court organized, in any manner analogous to this which is proposed for Storey County?

Mr. BROSNAN. There is, in the city of New York, but not in the State, outside of the city. The State has District and Supreme Courts, something like the system which we have here at present. The judges go out into their respective districts and sit by themselves; and then they have general terms in which all the judges of the Supreme Court meet, and cases come back to that court on appeal, that is, by appeal from the decisions of the judges of that particular district, which consists of four judges, the State being divided into eight judicial districts. The cases which are tried by the different judges come up on appeal to the united bench; that is to say, the District Judges constituting the Supreme Court Judges, the person whose case is being heard or argued not sitting himself, in judgment on that case. The provision made here in regard to the Court in Storey County is the same as that, except that here there is no appeal from the decision of one judge to the other members of the court, but the appeal is immediately from the District Court to the Supreme Court, which is our court of last resort. There may be, however, something well worthy of consideration in the suggestion of the gentleman from Ormsby relative to a provision for the possible interregnum which may exist between the primary organization of the court and the time when action may be taken by the Legislature.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think I fully understand this matter yet. Does the gentleman state that there is, or is not, any court in the city or the State of New York like this which is proposed for Storey County?

Mr. BROSNAN. I said there was, in the city of New York. I referred to the Superior Court.

Mr. NOURSE. And the Supreme Court, also, in the city of New York. If the gentleman will allow me, I will read from the Constitution of the State of New York on that subject. In New York, as the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan,) states, there are seven districts, besides the New York District, and they have their special terms. In the country there are four judges for each district, and they divide their districts into circuits, each one of the judges taking a circuit and holding courts therein; one judge taking one circuit, another taking another, and so on. Then, as the gentleman from Storey has said, at these special terms an appeal may be taken in any case, to the three judges who did not try it, and such appeals are heard at the "general term," as it is called. But in the city of New York the district is all one, and is precisely analogous to what is here proposed. Instead of dividing the district into circuits, as in the country, they divide the calendar, and each judge, sitting independently, tries the causes which may be assigned to him. And yet here is all there is on the subject in the Constitution of the State of New York:

"SEC. 4. The State shall be divided into eight judicial districts, of which the city of New York shall be one: the others to be bounded by county lines, and to be compact and equal in population, as nearly as may be. There shall be four Justices of the Supreme Court in each district, and as many more in the district composed of the city of New York as may from time to time be authorized by law, but not to exceed in the whole such number, in proportion to its population, as shall be in conformity with the number of such judges in the residue of the State, in proportion to its population. They shall be classified so that one of the Justices of each district shall go out of office at the end of every two years. After the expiration of their terms, under such classification, the term of their office shall be eight years."

And that is all there is of it, except a subsequent section in regard to the classification of the Supreme Court. I will read that section, also.

"SEC. 9. The classification of the Justices of the Supreme Court, the times and places of holding the terms of the Court of Appeals, and of the general and special terms of the Supreme Court, within the several districts, and the Circuit Courts, and Courts of Oyer and Terminer within the several counties, shall be provided for by law."

That is all there is in regard to the matter, in the Constitution of New York, and yet the Supreme Court in the city of New York divides its calendar, and does precisely what we propose to provide for the Storey County District Court.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman will read further, I think he will find much more in it.

Mr. NOURSE. No, sir; there is nothing more about the Supreme Court. The Superior Court has been mentioned, also. Well, that is another exception. However, it is only necessary to say, that both the Supreme Court and the Superior Court do business in that way. Now I cannot understand how there should be this difficulty arising with three judges, when it was all so easy with two judges in the Storey County District Court, as at first reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman from Washoe will bear me witness that I urged these same views before the Judiciary Committee, and also on a previous occasion in the Convention. I foreshadowed the difficulties that would be likely to arise, and insisted in the committee upon numerical districts—that either ther should be a geographical division of the districts, or at least they should be numbered, so as to be separate and distinct. Possibly, however, the gentleman was not present at the time.

Mr. NOURSE. Of course it is so, if the gentleman says so, but I only recollect of his objecting to the third judge, very much, and that he wanted a County Court.

Mr. JOHNSON. As to that, I cared nothing about it. If the members from Storey County wanted three districts, I was willing that they should have them.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not think that when the gentleman first took the ground he did, there was a majority that way in the committee; I imagine that the gentleman rather carried the majority with him. But that is not of material consequence. What we want, is to establish a judicial system that will work. We have no desire to provide for any system but one that will always be efficient. At the same time, however, I believe that we may safely trust to the precedent of New York. There is no State in the Union whose system is more analogous to ours in other respects, and none whose judicial system has, as a general thing, operated more satisfactorily. Hence I feel perfectly safe in following that precedent, and think it is a much better and safer one to follow than that of San Francisco. The plan has been tried in New York for years and years, and is well approved and established. They have not provided in their Constitution for all the matters of minutiae as much as we have in this article, but rather have preferred to leave those things to the laws, and the courts themselves. For my part, I would feel entirely safe to leave the subject to a rule of the court.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not understand the operation of the Supreme Court of New York to be at all as the gentleman states it. In fact, my understanding of that subject is very different.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out Section 9.

Mr. DELONG. Why, nobody opposes that. [Merriment.]

The CHAIRMAN. This whole discussion has been, strictly speaking, out of order, but it has been tolerated by the consent of the committee, and I do not apprehend that it has been by any means unprofitable.

Mr. DUNNE. I would like to add a few words. I cannot admit that the rules which govern the Supreme Courts of the State of New York afford any proper precedent whatever for our guidance, in the establishment of a court in Storey County, on the basis proposed; and for the reason that causes are to come before the proposed court in Storey County, as a court, originally, whereas, in the Supreme Court of New York, causes do not come up before the court originally, as I understand, but are brought originally in the District Courts, which seem to correspond in their status very nearly with the District Courts as they now exist in this Territory; and then appeals are taken from those District Courts to the Supreme Court, the same as they are in this Territory. It is not, therefore, a division by the Supreme Court of work before it, consisting of cases coming originally before it, and divided by the court into districts, assigning one judge to go into a particular district, and try certain cases, and another to go into another district to try certain other cases, and so on, as we propose in the Storey County District Court; but all the cases arise in the districts first, are there tried by the district judges, and are then brought upon appeals before the Supreme Court, as in this Territory. That is the way I understand it, from the statements which have been made here.

Mr. DELONG. The gentleman is mistaken. The New York Supreme Court has original jurisdiction, as much as the District Court of Storey County will have.

Mr. DUNNE. Then, when the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction, can a case be referred in this manner to a District Court?

Mr. DELONG. No, no! The gentleman does not understand the matter yet. The City and County of New York constitute one district, and that district is not subdivided geographically, but there are four Supreme Judges, and they have original business.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Storey a question. Is there any such thing under that system as an appeal from one member of that court directly to the highest court?

Mr. DELONG. The Court of Appeals? Certainly.

Mr. BANKS. Is not it only over an appeal to the united court in the first instance?

Mr. DELONG. No, sir. The Supreme Court sits in bank, on cases in the District Courts, and whenever cases are commenced in the Supreme Court, then appeals may be taken to the appellate court, or Court of Appeals.

Mr. BANKS. The whole question turns, it appears to me, on a difference of opinion between the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) who has the Constitution of New York to refer to, and the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) who has it not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, sir, I will undertake to say that they have not, and cannot have any such thing as a District Court, under the Constitution of New York. And everything which the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) has read from that Constitution goes to prove that we are adopting here a mongrel system, which will not be self-acting, nor have we conferred any authority upon the law-making power by which it can be rendered operative. The gentleman from Washoe says there is not much in the constitutional provision which creates that Supreme Court in New York. That is very true; but, sir, a few words may express a great deal. I will read Section 6, which follows the provision creating the Supreme Courts.

Saturday,]

NOURSE—DUNNE—CHAPIN—CROSMAN—KENNEDY.

[July 23.

"SECTION 6. Provision may be made by law for designating, from time to time, one or more of the said Justices, who is not a judge of the Court of Appeals, to preside at the general terms of the said court, to be held in the several districts. Any three or more of the said Justices, of whom one of the Justices may hold special terms, and Circuit Courts, and any one of them may preside in Courts of Oyer and Terminer in any county.

These are but few words, as the gentleman says, but they express that very power with which the court is clothed, and without such words they could not possess that power.

Mr. NOURSE. I think we can fix this matter during recess, and I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to, and the committee accordingly rose.

IN CONVENTION.

The PRESIDENT having resumed the chair,

The CHAIRMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration Article VI, entitled Judicial Department, had made some progress therein, and had instructed him to ask leave to sit again.

The report was accepted, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. DUNNE gave notice of a meeting of the Committee on Schedule during the recess.

Mr. CHAPIN. This question of the courts in Storey County has now been under discussion for a long time, and it seems to me is liable to be debated for hours longer. I suggest that it be recommitted to the Judiciary Committee, to be considered by that committee during the recess. It will be a great point gained if the committee can harmonize the matter so as to avoid further discussion.

Mr. NOURSE. They can consider it informally just as well. I move that the Convention take a recess.

The hour of twelve o'clock having arrived,

The PRESIDENT declared the Convention at recess until two o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at two o'clock, P. M., and was called to order by the President.

The SECRETARY, by direction of the President, counted the Convention and reported that twenty-one members were present.

ARTICLES ENGROSSED.

Mr. CROSMAN, from the Committee on Engrossment, reported correctly engrossed Article XI, entitled Salaries and Appropriations; Article XII, entitled Education; and Article XVI, entitled Miscellaneous Provisions.

The report was accepted, and the several articles reported were placed on the general file for third reading.

Mr. KENNEDY. Could not we place those articles on their third reading now, so as to give them to the Enrolling Committee this afternoon?

The PRESIDENT. That may be done by suspending the rules.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move that the rules be suspended, and the articles placed on their third reading and final passage.

SALARIES.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Article on Salaries was transferred to the Schedule by a resolution adopted this morning. Consequently, that will lie over, and be considered with the Schedule, when that article is again taken up.

Mr. DUNNE. It was not referred, I understand, but merely ordered to be inserted in the Schedule.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will omit that from my motion, and only move that the rules be suspended, and Articles XII and XVI be placed upon their third reading now.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

EDUCATION.

Article XII, entitled Education, was read a third time, as follows:

ARTICLE XII.

EDUCATION.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall encourage by all suitable means the promotion of intellectual, literary, scientific, mining, mechanical, agricultural, and moral improvement, and also provide for the election, by the people, at the general election, of a Superintendent of Public Instruction, whose term of office shall be two years from the first Monday of January, 1865, and until the election and the qualification of his successor, and whose duties shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. The Legislature shall provide for a uniform system of common schools, by which a school shall be established and maintained in each school district, at least six months in every year; and any school district neglecting to establish and maintain such a school, or which shall allow instruction of a sectarian character therein, may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public school fund during such neglect or infraction; and the Legislature may pass such laws as will tend to secure a general attendance of the children in each school district upon said public schools.

SEC. 3. All lands, including the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in every township, donated for the benefit of public schools, in the Act of the thirty-eighth Congress, to enable the people of Nevada Territory to form a State Government; the thirty thousand acres of public land is granted by an Act of Congress, and approved July 2d, 1862, for each Senator and Representative in Congress; and all proceeds of lands that have been or may hereafter be granted or appropriated by the United States to this State; and also the five hundred thousand (500,000) acres of land granted to the new States under the Act of Congress distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. 1841;—provided, that Congress make provisions for, or authorizes such diversion to be made, for the purposes herein contained; all estates that may escheat to the State; all of such per cent. as may be granted by Congress on the sale of land; all fines collected under the penal laws of the State; all property given or bequeathed to the State for educational purposes; and all proceeds derived from any or all of said sources, shall be, and the same are hereby solemnly pledged for educational purposes and shall not be transferred to any other fund for other uses; and the interest thereon shall, from time to time, be apportioned among the several counties, in proportion to the ascertained numbers of the persons between the ages of six and eighteen years in the different counties. And the Legislature shall provide for the sale of floating land warrants to cover the aforesaid lands, and for the investment of all proceeds derived from any of the above-mentioned sources, in United States bonds, or the bonds of this State; provided, that the interest only of the aforesaid proceeds shall be used for educational purposes, and any surplus interest shall be added to the principal sum; and provided further, that such portion of said interest as may be necessary, may be appropriated for the support of the State University.

Sec. 4. The Legislature shall provide for the establishment of a State University, which shall embrace departments for agriculture, mechanic arts, and mining, to be controlled by a Board of Regents, whose duties shall be prescribed by law.

Sec. 5. The Legislature shall have power to establish Normal Schools, and such different grades of schools, from the primary department to the University, as in their discretion they may see fit; and all professors in said University, or teachers in said common schools, of whatever grade, shall be required to take and subscribe to the oath as prescribed in Article XVI of this Constitution. No professor or teacher who fails to comply with the provision of any law framed in accordance with the provisions of this section, shall be entitled to receive any portion of the public moneys set apart for school purposes.

Sec. 6. The Legislature shall provide a special tax of one-half of one mill on the dollar of all taxable property in the State, in addition to the other means provided for the support and maintenance of said University and common schools; provided, that at the end of ten years they may reduce said tax to one quarter of one mill on each dollar of taxable property.

Sec. 7. The Governor, Secretary of State, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, shall for the first four years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, be a Board of Regents to control and manage the affairs of the University, and the funds of the same, under such regulations as may be provided by law; but the Legislature shall, at its regular session next preceding the expiration of the term of office of said Board of Regents, provide for the election of a new Board of Regents, and define their duties.

Sec. 8. The Board of Regents shall, from the interest accruing from the first funds which come under their control, immediately organize and maintain the said mining department, in such manner as to make it most effective and useful. Provided, that all the proceeds of the public lands donated by Act of Congress, approved July 2nd, 1862, for a college for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts, and including military tactics, shall be invested by the said Board of Regents in a separate fund to be appropriated exclusively for the benefit of the first-named departments to the University, as set forth in Section 4, above. And the Legislature shall provide that, if through neglect or any other contingency, any portion of the fund so set apart shall be lost or misappropriated, the State of Nevada shall replace said amount so lost in said fund, so that the capital of said fund shall remain forever undiminished.

SECTARIAN INSTRUCTION.

Mr. BROSNAN. I ask that Section 2 may be read again.

The SECRETARY again read Section 2.

Mr. BROSNAN. I see that in this section it is provided as a condition precedent to obtaining the school money, or to any school district being entitled to its proportion of the interest on the school fund, that a school shall have been established in such district for six months in every year. Then, in the succeeding clause, there is a provision that unless that is done, or in case of any sectarian instruction being imparted in such school, the district shall forfeit the benefit of the school money, or lose its proportion thereof. For my part, I should like to have it stated as clearly in the section, that no sectarian instruction shall be imparted or taught, as it is that a school shall be maintained for six months in the year, as a condition precedent to permitting the district to receive its proportion of the interest on the school fund. As the section stands at present, there is no positive prohibition against imparting sectarian instruction, the only penalty being the forfeiture of the school money. I am, myself, decidedly and strenuously opposed to the inculcation, upon the juvenile mind in the public schools, of anything like sectarian instruction, no matter of what character or description it may be, and therefore I would suggest that the section be amended, if it may be done, by inserting after the words "shall be established and maintained in each school district, at least six months in every year," the words "but no sectarian instruction shall be allowed in any public school so established." Then the section will provide not only that a school shall be required to be maintained in each district for at least six months in the year, but also that any district neglecting to establish and maintain such school, or imparting sectarian instruction therein, shall be deprived of its proportion of the school money. I think the section as it reads at present does not reach that object, and the words which I propose to insert are taken from the section as it stood in the former Constitution, which we have heretofore adopted. If it be necessary to state, as a condition precedent to the receiving of the public moneys, that a school shall have been conducted for six months in the year, I take it to be equally necessary, or, if not as necessary, at least as appropriate, (inasmuch as we all agree upon the general proposition that there should not be in the common schools the inculcation of any sectarian doctrines upon the infant minds of pupils,) to state that the exclusion of sectarian instruction shall in like manner be a condition precedent.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment can be made at this time by unanimous consent, but there is similar language occurring in the latter part of the section, which will need to be stricken out.

Mr. BROSNAN. The language in the latter part of the section, as printed, has already been stricken out.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's point is, as I understand, that the section as it now reads permits the establishment of sectarian instruction, and only prohibits the district from receiving the school money, if sectarian instruction is established.

Mr. BROSNAN. Yes, sir. My amendment is to insert after the word "year," in the sixth line of the engrossed copy, the words "but no sectarian instruction shall be allowed in any school so established."

[July 23.

Mr. COLLINS. I would inquire whether it would not be proper to incorporate a new section, in regard to the organization of colleges, etc.? We might declare that in none of the schools named above, shall any sectarian doctrine be taught. That would make the prohibition positive as to all the schools, while this section relates only to drawing the school money for the common schools.

Mr. BROSNAN. I do not know but that would be as well, if such is the sense of the Convention.

Mr. COLLINS. I think there is now nothing of the kind, in regard to instruction in the University.

Mr. CROSMAN. If I correctly understand the gentleman from Storey, my impression is that the section as it stands now, covers the ground he wishes. If the people of a neighborhood, made up largely of one particular religious element, desire to establish a school of their own denomination, I presume no gentleman here wants to preclude them.

Mr. BANKS. That would not be a public school.

Mr. CROSMAN. No, sir; then it is not a public school; and therefore I understand that the section, as it now stands, fully covers all that is desired. A school established by a district, if it shall tolerate sectarian instruction, cannot receive the money or aid of the State, and is not under the patronage of the State. It constitutes no part of the general educational interest.

Mr. BROSNAN. The idea is this: I think that if a school is established in any district, under the law, it is a public school. Now, such a school may, under this section, establish sectarian instruction. Through what influences it may occur, I will not undertake to say, but there may be taught in such a school sectarian doctrines, if it shall please those who control it; subject, I admit, to the forfeiture of the right of the school to receive its proportion of the public school money. But, nevertheless, it is still a public school, that being the only prohibition there is against such instruction. My desire is that the prohibition of sectarian instruction shall be as positive and as clearly expressed as is the requirement that the district shall maintain a school for six months in the year, and I wish to accomplish that purpose by placing both in the same category, and in the same clause. If that is done, and no other change is made in the section, it will meet my views.

Mr. COLLINS. I like the scope and design of the gentleman's remarks, and his amendment, but it occurs to me that this section refers exclusively to the common schools, which are to be maintained at least six months in every year. Then the article goes on to provide for a University, for normal schools, and for different grades of schools, from the primary departments up to the University. It seems to me that it would be better to provide by an additional section that no sectarian doctrine shall be permitted to be taught in any school established under this Constitution. That would cover the entire ground, while this amendment does not prohibit sectarian instruction in the colleges, normal schools, or such other or higher grades of schools, as are not required by Section 2 to be maintained for six months in the year. I think it would be eminently proper to adopt a separate section, declaring that in all the schools, up to and including the University, no sectarian doctrines shall be taught.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will include the University, then; let my amendment apply to all the schools.

The PRESIDENT. The proper motion will be to recommit with instructions.

Mr. COLLINS. I understand there is no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The question may be taken in that shape, if there is no objection, and then the amendment can be made at once.

Mr. BROSNAN. If there is any possible objection, I do not wish to take a vote upon it.

Mr. COLLINS. I trust the amendment will be so drawn as to apply generally to all the schools.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will withdraw my amendment, and prepare a separate section for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. The proposition of the gentleman from Storey, if I understand him correctly, is now so modified that he asks leave to have the article recommitted, with a view to incorporating a section which will prohibit sectarian instruction in all departments of the public schools, the primary branches included.

The PRESIDENT. So I understand. But if unanimous consent is given, the amendment may be made in that manner, instead of by recommitment.

Mr. BROSNAN. I have drawn a section, in order to carry out the view of my colleague, (Mr. Collins.) Instead of making any change in Section 2, as I had proposed, I will withdraw that amendment, and will now propose, with the consent of the Convention, to add to the article the following, as an additional section:

SEC. 9. No sectarian instruction shall be imparted or tolerated in any school or university that may be established under this Constitution.

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

THE SPECIAL SCHOOL TAX.

Mr. CHAPIN. I would like to make a further amendment, and I presume there will be no objection to it. It is a slight change in Section 6. That section now provides that a special tax shall be levied by the Legislature, for the benefit of "said University and common schools," and I propose to alter it so as to read in this wise: "for the support and mainte-

CROSMAN—CHAPIN—COLLINS—PRESIDENT.

[July 23.]

nance of said University, common schools, or mining department." Then the Legislature may, in the exercise of its wisdom, appropriate either the whole or a portion of the tax to the mining department, whenever it shall be found necessary.

Mr. CROSMAN. Is it not stated in a preceding section that the Legislature shall establish a State University, with a mining department? It seems to me that covers the case entirely, the mining department being a portion of the University.

Mr. CHAPIN. But here is a special tax to be levied, and it is specified what the tax shall be for.

Mr. CROSMAN. But the University is one of the objects specified, and we have previously declared that the University shall embrace a mining department.

Mr. COLLINS. The difficulty of my colleague appears to be this: The proceeds of the ninety thousand acres of the public lands granted by the Act of Congress of July 2d, 1862, are set apart exclusively for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, and my colleague, regarding the mining department as one of the most important branches of our educational interests, at any rate next in importance to the common schools, desires to have the matter so arranged that the proceeds of this special tax may, in the discretion of the Legislature, be set apart exclusively for the benefit of the mining department. Now it occurred to me when the section was drawn up, that the terms "university" and "common schools," both occurring, the construction must be that the tax is to be levied for the benefit of the public school fund; and as that fund comes under the control of the Board of Regents, that Board will have the right to appropriate this tax, or any portion of it, as well as other funds, (excepting, of course, that which is specially reserved, in conformity with the Act of Congress,) to any branch of education the Board may deem proper, whether it be the University, the mining department, a scientific school, or the public schools; or even to the higher grades of public schools, such as normal, or high schools, and academies. It appears to me that it comes within the province and the right of the Board of Regents to appropriate this special tax as they please; but if there is the least doubt on this subject in the minds of members of the Convention, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT. I would ask the gentleman if he does not regard the language of the section, at present, as being sufficiently comprehensive?

Mr. COLLINS. It seems to me so.

The PRESIDENT. Then I will take the liberty to suggest that, the article having been engrossed, it is very desirable to avoid making any amendments, unless they are absolutely necessary.

Mr. COLLINS. I would like to have the opinion of the President on the matter I have suggested.

The PRESIDENT. Let the Secretary read the section.

The SECRETARY read Section 6.

Mr. COLLINS. Now let him read Section 4.

The SECRETARY read Section 4.

The PRESIDENT. I understand that the mining department is made a part of the University.

Mr. CROSMAN. I think so.

The PRESIDENT. I think there can be no question as to that. It is one of the departments of the University, and when the term "University" is used, it must be understood as including the mining department.

Mr. CHAPIN. I was fearful, probably without having sufficiently examined the subject, that the language would not cover the mining department, and I did not want any doubt left upon that point, because I consider that as the most important institution we shall have within the borders of our State; and I regretted very much that the amendment proposed the other day by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) was not adopted, devoting this tax exclusively to the mining department. As, however, the opinion of the Convention seems to be clear upon the construction of the language, I withdraw the amendment.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the article as amended, and the vote was—yeas, 23; nays, none—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Brosnan, Chapin, Collins, Crawford, Crosmán, DeLong, Dunne, Frizell, Folsom, Gibson, Hawley, Kennedy, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, Murdock, Nourse, Parker, Tagliabue, Wetherill, and Mr. President—23.

Nays—None.

So the article was passed.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

Article XVI, entitled Miscellaneous Provisions, was read a third time, as follows:

ARTICLE XVI.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

SECTION 1. The seat of government shall be at Carson City, but no appropriation for the erection or purchase of capitol buildings shall be made during the next three years.

SEC. 2. Members of the Legislature, and all officers, Executive, Judicial, and Ministerial, shall, before they enter upon the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe to the following oath or affirmation:

"I —, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States, and the Constitution and Government of the State of Nevada, against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance, and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution, or law of any State, Convention or Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and farther, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever. And I do further solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not fought a duel, nor sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, nor been a second to either party, nor in any manner aided or assisted in such duel, nor been knowingly the bearer of such challenge, or acceptance, since the adoption of the Constitution of the State of Nevada, and that I will not be so engaged or concerned, directly or indirectly, in or about any such duel, during my continuance in office. And further, that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office of ——— on which I am about to enter; so help me God."

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to any office who is not a qualified elector, or who has fought or been in any manner concerned in a duel since the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 4. The general election shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November.

SEC. 5. The aggregate number of members of both branches of the Legislature shall never exceed seventy-five.

SEC. 6. All county officers shall hold their offices at the county seats of their respective counties.

SEC. 7. The Legislature shall provide for the speedy publication of all statute laws of a general nature, and for such decisions of the Supreme Court as it may deem expedient; and all laws and judicial decisions shall be free for publication by any person; provided, that no judgment of the Supreme Court shall take effect and be operative until the opinion of the Court in such case shall be filed with the Clerk of said Court.

SEC. 8. The Legislature may at any time provide by law for increasing or diminishing the salaries or compensation of any of the officers whose salaries or compensation is fixed in this Constitution; provided, no such change of salary or compensation shall apply to any officer during the term for which he may have been elected.

SEC. 9. All officers whose election or appointment is not otherwise provided for, shall be chosen or appointed as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 10. The tenure of any office not herein provided for may be declared by law, or when not so declared, such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment; but the Legislature shall not create any office, the tenure of which shall be longer than four years.

SEC. 11. The Governor, Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Controller, and Clerk of the Supreme Court, shall keep their respective offices at the seat of Government.

SEC. 12. The enumeration of the inhabitants of this State shall be taken under the direction of the Legislature, if deemed necessary, in the year 1855, and 1867, and 1875, and every ten years thereafter; and these enumerations, together with the census that may be taken under the direction of the Congress of the United States in the year 1870, and every subsequent ten years, shall serve as the basis of representation in both Houses of the Legislature.

SEC. 13. A plurality of votes given at an election by the people, shall constitute a choice, where not otherwise provided by this Constitution.

The PRESIDENT. I will call attention to Section 12, in relation to a State Census. I understood it was proposed to make an amendment, to obviate the necessity of taking the census, at the expense of the State, if it is done by the General Government.

Mr. DUNNE. I offered the amendment, and it was adopted. It now provides only that the census "shall be taken under the direction of the Legislature, if deemed necessary." I think that is sufficient.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF DUELISTS.

Mr. BANKS. I move to refer Section 3 of this article to a special committee, with instructions to insert in lieu thereof the following, and report immediately:

SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to any office who is not a qualified elector. No person who, while a citizen of this State, has, since the adoption of this Constitution, fought a duel with a deadly weapon, sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel with a deadly weapon, either within or beyond the boundaries of this State, or who has acted as second, or knowingly conveyed a challenge, or aided or assisted in any manner those thus offending, shall be allowed to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust, or enjoy the right of suffrage under this Constitution. The Legislature shall provide by law for giving force and effect to this section.

Mr. COLLINS. I second the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, and I do so from a conviction that the time has arrived when every civilized community, at least every community in our country that aspires to the dignity of a State Government, should, in its organic law, declare its decided and permanent hostility to the barbarous institution of dueling. And, sir, I marvel somewhat that those who framed and perfected the Constitution which was submitted to the people last year, did not go further than they did in this matter.

The proposition embodied in this amendment is nothing new. There are States in the Union which have gone far beyond this provision, in regard to dueling. Several of them—three, at least, namely: Connecticut, Michigan, and California—have embodied in their Constitutions provisions which, if not identical, are very similar to this, whilst in Virginia and Missouri, not only is there a disqualification for holding office, but there is a constitutional requirement that the Legislatures of those States shall pass laws by which the estate of the successful duelist shall be charged with the support of the widow and orphans of his unfortunate antagonist. In Alabama, Iowa, Indiana, and Ohio, constitutional provisions have been adopted which go quite as far as was proposed in the Constitution of last year—that is, disqualifying any person who may be engaged in a duel from holding office.

One objection has been found to exist to laws against dueling, especially in some of the older States of the Union, where the penalty prescribed has been death, namely, that the severity of such laws defeated their operation. It has been found very difficult, if not impossible, to convict a man who has slain another in a duel. But here are two severe penalties, which, in my judgment, it is entirely practicable to enforce. The man who infracts the prohibition against dueling, it is provided shall be deprived of the right to hold office, and shall also be deprived of the right of voting; and these are two privileges which in our country are regarded as especially valuable and sacred. They are held in greater esteem by many than silver or gold, and therefore the establishment of such a penalty as the forfeiture of these privileges, must, in my judgment, have a very powerful influence in restraining men from the commission of such acts of violence—acts which I feel justified in characterizing as cold-blooded murder. I may have some sympathy with an individual who, in the heat of passion, while his blood is boiling in his veins, may commit a homicide, but I can have no sympathy with the man who coolly and deliberately re-

Saturday.]

BROSNAN—DELONG.

[July 23.]

solves on the means by which he takes the life of his fellow-being. Consequently, I have no sympathy with the duelist.

There has been on this coast some sort of public sentiment which has tolerated the practice of dueling to some extent, and even justified it in many instances. But at the present time, and in our State, any such public sentiment ought to be discontinued and frowned upon. When the spirit of the so-called "chivalry," that had at one time an important influence in the control of the destinies of California, bore full sway, dueling was rife in that State. Men from the Northern and Eastern States, coming in contact with that arrogant class of men from the Southern States, and receiving insults at their hands, naturally desired to show them that they possessed all the spirit and manhood necessary to protect themselves, and hence the State of California has been made a battleground for duelists. But there is no good reason why we should permit such a condition of things to exist in our State. There is no reason why we should not lay it down as a fundamental principle, that no man shall be allowed to take the law into his own hands. Just in proportion as you suffer men in the community to take the law into their own hands, just in that proportion do you weaken the government, and sap it of its strength. Every man is then allowed to become as it were a law unto himself and his neighbor. In California, the northern spirit having become aroused, as I have said, by men of the "chivalry" stamp, during the first six years of the State organization not less than thirty-six duels were fought, several of them having a fatal termination; and unless we take measures to prevent it now, while we are forming our fundamental law, unless we shall lay the axe at the root of the tree, we may reasonably anticipate a repetition of those scenes in our own State, and our government will thus be sapped of its power and weakened of its influence; for I contend that government is only strong when the laws are respected and enforced, and when the persons and the character of men are held most sacred.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BROSNAN. I am undergoing a mental struggle at the present time, in regard to the amendment which the gentleman from Humboldt has proposed. It is not a very easy matter for me to give the reasons for the position which I occupy, at my present time of life, especially when I am limited to five minutes; but I will say that if I vote for this amendment, as I very probably may, it will be a revolution—a complete change from the convictions and habits of thought, resulting from the whole course of the associations and teachings of my past life. Perhaps it is better that it is so, because if I vote for this proposition, I mean to uphold and defend it. I have seen occasions, Mr. President, and may see such occasions again, where the enforcement of such a provision, if it would not strike down the spirit of a man, would, at least, subject him to the contumely of his fellows, to a greater or less extent. It is hard to subjugate the human will, especially when it is invoked in the support of a man's honor and standing among his fellow-men. Xerxes thought to chain the Adriatic, but he failed. So, too, the haughty Dane would have checked the overflow of the advancing tide from Neptune's dominions, but failed in his attempt. And philosophers, in the Augustan era of English literature, have said, as I think, wisely and truly, that—

"Men dreamed that they could silence at their will
The storms of passion, and say—'Peace; be still!'
But 'thus far and no farther,' when addressed
To wild wave, or to wilder human breast,
Implies authority that never can,
And never ought to be, allied to man."

I say, Mr. President, that if I shall vote for this proposition, (and at the present stage of my life I may very likely do so,) it will be a change in the whole course of my life—in the whole course of my teachings; yet, if I can be fully convinced that it will be a public benefit, I shall no longer hesitate to give it my vote.

I did not propose to say anything further at this time, but there is one thing I will add. My learned colleague, (Mr. Collins,) in speaking about the penalties attached to duelists and dueling, has mentioned the fact that in some of the States of the Union the successful combatant in a duel is bound by law to sustain the family of him who has fallen. It has been within my knowledge, sir, that that penalty has been prescribed by law in the State of California, and I have known the author of that law to be himself the first to infringe upon its requirements, and violate its provisions, disregarding the very statute of which he had been the framer and introducer in the Legislature of that State; thus spurning all respect for that solemnity which should attach to the laws of the land. I mention this as one of the reasons which induce me, or, at any rate, have some tendency towards inducing me to vote against the provision. I fear that men will disregard it, and if it is not regarded, it is only increasing their guilt. For myself, if I shall vote for it, I shall observe it.

Mr. DELONG. I intend to vote for the amendment, and solely for the reason that I prefer it to the original, inasmuch as the original disfranchises a man from holding office, if he has fought a duel, no matter whether here or elsewhere.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Storey, that this is offered as a substitute for Section 3, and not for Section 2, which embodies the oath.

Mr. DELONG. Then it seems that a man must swear to it twice. It may be that I am in error, but I honestly believe that the system which it is here proposed to establish, is one well calculated to legislate men into cowardice. By such legislation you cut a man off from the privilege of defending his honor, and if you do so, you either disfranchise him or make him a coward. Now, sir, I candidly believe, as I live, that if the practice of redressing insults when offered, and of defending the honor when attacked, had been the same at the North as at the South, we would not have had the rebellion that exists to-day. I believe that the idea which prevailed at the North, that the taking of human life is wrong under any and all circumstances, caused northern men to so conduct themselves as to lead southern men to the conclusion that all the men of the North were cowards.

NOURSE—DELONG—PARKER—COLLINS—BANKS.

[July 23.

Mr. NOURSE. They have found out their mistake.

Mr. DELONG. Yes; they have now found out their mistake, but nevertheless it has produced that result. Again, it will have the effect to embolden men who are in the habit of scandalizing others, and imputing bad motives. Knowing that those whom they malign will not dare to call them to account personally, or, at least, cannot do so without being disfranchised, they will feel that they have immunity for editorial assaults in the newspapers, or for attacking the character of men in conversation—that they can do so without fear of the consequences which might otherwise result from the resentment which such conduct naturally provokes.

Mr. PARKER. If a man who traduces my character is responsible in no other way, cannot I go and "whale" him? [Merriment.]

Mr. DELONG. No, sir; for what is a duel? If it is a combat with pistols, it is also with swords, and if it is with swords, it is with the fists. Any kind of contest, by which one man engages in a fight with another, is a duel.

Mr. NOURSE. Oh, no! A duel is a deadly combat.

Mr. DELONG. But it may not result in death.

Mr. COLLINS. I believe it is defined to be a fight with deadly weapons.

Mr. DELONG. Then the question is, what is a deadly weapon?

Mr. BANKS. That has been defined.

Mr. DELONG. Yes; you can find a dozen different adjudications. It is said that a deadly weapon is anything that will produce death—but that might be a club, and men have often been killed by blows of the fists. If a man kills another in a fight with fists, would he not come under this provision?

Mr. COLLINS. I would certainly want to bring him under it.

Mr. DELONG. I believe it is hopeless to expect to prevent dueling by such extraordinary penalties, and any such law will only result in being totally disregarded. Why, sir, very many of our best men have fought duels, right in the face of statutory and constitutional provisions, which declared them felons at the time they did so. And by this provision, if a man commits that offense, the law being wholly disregarded, you add to it what will impose on his soul the further crime of perjury.

Mr. BANKS. In a conversation I had with an able and eloquent member of the Convention a few days ago, he related to me a circumstance, which very forcibly illustrates the principle upon which I desire to incorporate this amendment. He told me that a friend of his had been challenged by a party to fight a duel; "but," said he, "my friend declined to fight, unless the man who challenged him would first go and pay all his debts, because he did not wish to incur the responsibility of killing the man, and so depriving his creditors of what was justly due them." I regard that as a valid excuse, and want to carry out the principle, by furnishing a good reason for not fighting.

Mr. DELONG. You do not give the excuse exactly right. The law of California imposes as a penalty that the party who kills another in a duel shall pay his debts and provide for his family. This man being challenged, replied to the challenger, "Go and provide for your family and pay your debts, and then I will fight a duel with you."

Mr. BANKS. That makes the illustration better still.

Mr. NOURSE. I shall take ground exactly the converse of that of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong.) I shall say that if the state of society which existed at the north had existed at the south, we never should have had a rebellion. That, it seems to me, is the correct statement of the case.

Mr. COLLINS. Hear, hear!

Mr. NOURSE. Now I am not a fighting man. I do not expect ever to have occasion to fight a duel. And yet I never have been willing to believe myself personally a coward. I do not believe there is any necessity for fighting a duel. I have heard of a great many duels for the vindication of men's honor, but I do not believe that any man's honor can be purified in that way. If a man insults or abuses me, I do not gain anything by placing myself in a position to be shot by him, or undertaking to shoot him in return. There is, I admit, at the first blush, some force in the gentleman's argument of restraint—that the fear of being held responsible in a duel may sometimes keep men from using abusive language; that, in short, it may be a check upon men's tongues. And yet that argument is one implying a charge which men would not like to admit, and that is, that nothing but cowardice prevents them from impugning the motives and conduct of others.

I have never lived in the South, but I have seen southern men brought in daily contact with those who might be termed representative men at the North, and I found they were as different in their manners as light and darkness. At the law school which I attended, we found a large number of sons of aristocrats from the South, themselves as aristocratic and haughty as they could be, and every one of them bound to fight a duel, with pistol or bowie knife, upon what they regarded as proper provocation. I admit that they did have, as I did not always, a thorough acquaintance with those words which constitute the technical grounds for a duel, and they were careful to avoid them; but I never met with a class of men in my life so totally regardless, after all, of what really belongs to the manners of a gentleman. They would not call me a liar, or say I was "no gentleman"—that is the mortal word with them—but they could be more insulting in tone and manner, avoiding the technical cause of offense, than any other men I ever saw. With all their peculiar training, they knew exactly how to act, and what to say, and still not step over the technical line. And I will tell you frankly, that about the only occasion when I ever felt as if I wanted to fight, was when these men, with their insolent manners and supercilious bearing, would pass by us who were northern men. Yet they never said or did anything which we could make a ground of justification for a quarrel. No, sir; I do not think that this dueling system has any real tendency to improve men's manners, abroad or at home. It may be able in some cases to restrain men as to the extent of their words, but that has but little to do with genuine courtesy.

I think, as the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks,) says, that this provision will give an additional and very proper excuse to men for refusing to fight a duel, and in that way will tend to prevent the practice. While you may not be able to convict men for murder, when they kill other men in duels, yet there will be no difficulty in enforcing this provision, and I think the very class of men who would ordinarily be willing to fight duels, will be extremely glad to avail themselves of the excuse it affords.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's time is exhausted.

Mr. MASON. I am very sorry to be obliged to differ on a question of this kind from my friend from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) but I have been brought up in that part of our land where human life is regarded as of some value, and my teachings have been such that I am decidedly opposed to fighting duels. And I do not believe in exercising my right of suffrage for the elevation to honorable and responsible position of any man, nor that any man should be allowed to hold high position, who would practice dueling, or maintain and defend that peculiar doctrine on which the practice is based—that it is the part of true courage to dare Omnipotence. I have been taught to believe, and do believe, that it is downright presumption, and that true courage is never found in rash adventure. Neither is that properly to be accounted honor which arms one man against another in a private quarrel. I have been brought up, sir, to believe in doctrines of that kind, and I still believe in them. I look upon dueling as wholly wrong in principle—a mere relic of barbarism—wholly inconsistent with modern civilization and enlightenment; and more than that, the voice of Christianity stamps the seal of condemnation upon the policy and the practice. Consequently, I shall support the amendment, and the proposed oath in regard to dueling, entirely and to the letter.

Mr. DELONG. I wish merely to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Esmeralda. I was not brought up in a fighting school any more than he, and would engage in a duel no sooner than he would. But I do not subscribe to Mr. Seward's doctrine, that a man who is not a gentleman cannot insult me, and a man who is a gentleman will not insult me.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman having already spoken his allotted time on this question, is not in order to proceed further.

Mr. HAWLEY. I confess that, consulting only my feelings, I voted for the section embodying the oath, and shall vote for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt with some degree of reluctance. But, sir, when I consult my judgment, I have no hesitation whatever in giving my sanction to the measure. I think, however, that the gentleman from Washoe, (Mr. Nourse)—and he will excuse my feeling a little on the subject—does a great injustice to southern gentleman, when he takes a class of fifteen or twenty young men in a northern college, and sets them up as the embodiment of southern manners and southern breeding.

Mr. NOURSE. Allow me to explain. I did not mean to do that. I only say that is as far as my knowledge extends on the subject never having lived at the South. There were seventy or eighty of them, however, and that was their style.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well; I have met with the same sort of manners among a certain class of young men, but I have always found those who would indulge in such conduct so utterly devoid of brains, as to be unworthy of attention. So much for that.

But, sir, when I cast my eyes along the page of history, and read how Hamilton fell, and how many other men, almost equally distinguished, have fallen, from time to time, upon what is falsely termed the "field of honor;" when I look at the history of the past few years in our sister State of California, I cannot but believe that the blood of the many noble men who have been so untimely taken off, calls loudly upon us for our reprobation of this barbarous system. Now and then cases may arise where men may possibly be justified in even going to the extent of disfranchising themselves, to prove, for instance, the falsity of an assertion that they are cowards; but I believe, sir, that in the vast majority of instances in this country, where this system is resorted to, as a mode of settling differences, the public generally would care but very little if both of those who went out to combat should remain upon the field. What is claimed to be the "honor" of the great majority of those who in these times resort to the practice of dueling, is a matter of no consideration to the public; but, sir, when the practice of the requirements of the code results in the untimely death of some man of promise, some one who might have been expected to exert great influence for the good of his country, then we can feel the evil of the system, and it becomes our bounden duty, so far as may be in our power, to set upon it the seal of reprobation. Entertaining these views, I shall vote for the amendment, although I doubt the propriety or applicability of some portions of it. That is a matter of detail, however, which may come up hereafter.

Mr. WARWICK. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The SECRETARY read Mr. Banks's amendment.

Mr. NOURSE. Permit me to suggest that perhaps it might be well to change that a little. I do not think we ought to take cognizance of duels which are fought outside of the State, unless one or both parties be citizens of the State.

Mr. BANKS. The President has suggested an addition to the language here employed. It now says that "no person shall be eligible to any office who is not a qualified elector." At his suggestion, and with the permission of the Convention, I will add to that the words "under this Constitution."

Mr. WARWICK. I wish to say a word or two in regard to this amendment. For my own part, I am not only in favor of adopting a provision which will exclude from office the duelist who is a citizen of our own State, but I am also in favor of excluding the imported duelist. I do not think him entitled to any more consideration than one who is native here, and "to the manor born."

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to call attention to a portion of Section 2 of Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, which reads as follows:

"No person shall be a representative who shall not have attained to the age of twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States; and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen."

Now, sir, this language plainly implies that a man who is an inhabitant of this State, that is, of the State of Nevada, who is twenty-five years old, and who, at the time of his election, has been a citizen of the United States for seven years, may be elected to Congress as a representative from this State. These are the only qualifications necessary. It does not even say that he shall be a citizen of the State of Nevada, but only a citizen of the United States for seven years, and an inhabitant of this State. If this amendment shall prevail, it may happen that men will be elected to Congress, or to other and perhaps very important offices, who will be disqualified by such a provision; and while I am disposed to do everything I properly can do to frown down the practice of dueling, yet I do not wish to support any proposition that would render ineligible to office a citizen of the United States and an inhabitant of this State, in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, which we are sworn to support.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair regrets to interrupt the gentleman, but hopes that every member will keep in mind and observe the rule, which permits each member to speak five minutes upon any one subject, but gives no privilege to occupy the attention of the Convention for a longer time.

Mr. WARWICK. I am fully aware of the fact that the gentleman from Douglas suggests, and I do not believe that the State of Nevada will enact any law that is going to do violence to the Constitution of the United States. Nevertheless, I am in favor of enacting a law here which shall place the seal of condemnation on what I regard as one of the most barbarous practices that ever cursed humanity anywhere. Sir, if we are going to allow this vestige of barbarism to exist among us, we might as well go back to the ancient custom of trial by combat for the righting of wrongs, appealing to the Almighty to protect the right. We are here about to form a Constitution for a new, Christian State, and Christian civilization all over the world has, by its legal enactments, given emphatic condemnation to the practice of dueling,—that practice which has robbed the world of some of its best and noblest men. Shall we stand aloof, and in the face of the civilization of the world give our sanction to the practice? If there is a provision of the Constitution of the United States which prevents us from interfering with the qualifications of members of Congress, still there are other offices over which we have entire and perfect control, and let us at least declare that the prohibition shall apply to those officers—that no man shall hold office among us who has indulged in this barbarous practice since the adoption of our Constitution.

Mr. BROSNAN. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The SECRETARY read the amendment, as modified by the mover.

Mr. BROSNAN. I understand that, as the amendment is framed, it exempts from the penalty any person who has fought a duel, sent or accepted a challenge, or in any manner aided in a duel, outside of the limits of this State.

The PRESIDENT. This inhibition is in addition to that of the preceding section, or Section 2 of the article. Section 2 provides that every man elected to office shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, make oath that he has not fought a duel, sent or accepted a challenge, or in any manner aided or assisted in a duel since the adoption of the Constitution, and that he will not participate in any manner in a duel, during his continuance in office. This substitute for Section 3 goes further, and provides that no man who, while a citizen of this State, and since the adoption of this Constitution, has fought or aided in a duel, either within or without the State, shall hold office, or enjoy the right of suffrage. I do not understand that either section exempts a person who has fought a duel after the adoption of the Constitution of this State. Although he may have been a citizen of another State, and fought a duel in another State, yet the form of oath in Section 2 attaches to him, applying as well to one class as the other; and this amendment denies the right of suffrage, as well as the right to hold office, to any man who, while a citizen, has been concerned in a duel. That is the distinction. The amendment, as I understand, would not apply to a man who may have fought a duel elsewhere, while a citizen of another State, and who subsequently came here and became a citizen of Nevada, whilst the form of oath, as prescribed in Section 2, applies to all who may have been concerned in a duel, at any place, subsequent to the adoption of this Constitution, and would operate to prevent them from entering upon the duties of any office to which they may have been elected.

Mr. FRIZELL. I would like to know in what quarter the moon is? That inquiry is not made, however, in order to imply lunacy on the part of any person living, but it applies to myself. I have always been a little superstitious at times, having occasionally indulged the fancy that I was "out of luck"; and I think this must be one of my bad days, because I believe I have not voted for a thing to-day that has been carried. Now I think from the remarks that have been made—

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman rise to a privileged question?

Mr. DELONG. He is speaking about the moon; that must be in order. [Merriment.]

Mr. FRIZELL. My remarks will apply to this amendment. I say, judging from the speeches that have been made, from all the sentiments that have been expressed here by members, I think, sir, that I am "gone up" again. [Laughter.] Sir, what has heretofore been commendable, as far back as we can read in history, sacred and profane, in the days of Moses, and in the days of the greatest glory of ancient Greece—what has been regarded as commendable in men, in all ages, and among all nations—it is proposed that we shall place our seal of condemnation upon.

For my own part, I profess no particular bravery, but I do say that gentlemen are attempting, by this proposition, to reach something that cannot be reached. The men who do these things against which gentlemen are aiming to legislate, are generally men of education, men of the finest and nicest sense of honor, and of right and wrong; and when such a man has been insulted until he can bear it no longer, and makes up his mind to do this thing, to fight a duel, to take the chances of life and death—for a duel is necessarily a life and death struggle—when a man, goaded by insults and wrongs, makes up his mind to do that, contrary to the teachings of Christianity, contrary to the lessons inculcated upon his infant mind by his mother, contrary, I am willing to admit, to the spirit of modern civilization, do you suppose that any laws we can pass, or any provisions that we can embody in this Constitution, will stop him? I think not. I am quite sure it would not if it were my own case. If I should be so unfortunate as to be compelled to fight a duel, and I could not vote in this State thereafter—I would not mind the other deprivation, but the right of suffrage, the birthright of an American freeman, I should regret to lose—in that case I should have to leave the State, and then I should be out of luck again. [Laughter.]

This is a matter, however, for the good sense of members, and the judgment of the Convention, and whatever way it shall be decided by the vote of the Convention, I shall try to be satisfied. Nevertheless I think I am out of luck. [Merriment.]

Mr. DUNNE. I am in favor of this amendment, but as to the original section, or the section providing for this oath, I desire to say, although it may not be strictly in order while the amendment is pending, that I think it is a most unjust provision. I am opposed to the incorporation of such an oath in our Constitution, because I think it places a power in the hands of irresponsible men—

Mr. COLLINS. I call the gentleman to order. He is discussing the preceding section, while the only question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks) to Section 3.

Mr. DUNNE. Did not the gentleman from Storey himself, when he spoke on this question, address his remarks to the general subject of dueling?

Mr. COLLINS. I addressed myself to the substitute.

Mr. DUNNE. But did not the gentleman refer to the subject of dueling generally, in his remarks?

Mr. COLLINS. I confined myself entirely to the substitute, sir.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Humboldt will endeavor to confine his remarks to the question.

Mr. DUNNE. I say, sir, that it puts the whole life of a man—his political rights, and his standing among his fellow-citizens—into the hands of any irresponsible man whose services may be bought for that purpose. Does anybody suppose that when a man is willing to risk his life in a duel, he is going to stand back for the reason that he also risks an office which perhaps he never would get, anyhow? That is an absurd supposition. And the effect would be to place all the advantage in the hands of irresponsible men, giving those who are law-abiding, and who may be supposed to stand in some fear of the penalties imposed, no opportunity for redress, no chance to justify themselves. If you sne an irresponsible man for libeling your character, he may refer you to a clause which we have already adopted in Article I—the Declaration of Rights—by virtue of which he may laugh at you. Those who are advocating this proposition ought to take measures to add to the clause in the Bill of Rights declaring that there shall be no imprisonment for debt, the words “except in cases of libel or slander.” Then the party whose character is assailed by an irresponsible man might have some show for justice, and then such men would be careful about attempting to destroy the reputation of citizens, when they would have before them the fear of imprisonment, perhaps for life. But my great objection arises from the fact that duellists can be hired who stand ready to fight at any time, and in that manner the reputation of any man in the Territory or State may be attacked. For that reason I am opposed to the proposition.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am somewhat like my friend from Storey (Mr. Frizell) on the subject of luck, and have been during almost the whole session of the Convention, having nearly always been in the minority. I voted against the section which contains this oath disfranchising a man for fighting a duel, conveying or accepting a challenge, or any thing of that kind. As to this amendment, however, I do not understand exactly what it means; but if there is any possibility of getting the article back into the Committee of the Whole, or anywhere else where that oath, and all else on the subject can be stricken out, I hope it will be done. I think the establishment of such a provision, disfranchising a man because he has happened to take up an insult offered to himself, or possibly to some member of his family, when there is no other way of reaching and punishing the offender, would really be going backward instead of forward in the march of progress. I do not understand the purport of the amendment, and in order that I may understand it, I ask to have it read again.

The PRESIDENT. This amendment has been read several times already, but the Secretary will read it once more, and the Chair trusts that members will pay attention, in order to save time.

The SECRETARY again read the amendment proposed by Mr. Banks.

Mr. DELONG. Would not that include also one who might carry a man off the field after he had been shot in a duel, and the surgeon who should bind up his wounds? Just read that last clause carefully. It says—“or aided or assisted in any manner those thus offending.” That surely cannot be the intention. [“Question! Question!”]

Mr. BROSNAN. I shall have to vote against the amendment.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the motion to recommit Section 3, with instructions to make the amendment as modified, and the vote was—yeas, 14; nays, 11—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Chapin, Collins, Crossman, Folsom, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, Murdock, Nourse, Parker, Warwick, and Mr. President—14.

Nays—Messrs. Brosnan, Crawford, DeLong, Dunne, Frizell, Gibson, Hawley, Kennedy, Proctor, Tagliabue, and Wetherill—11.

So the section was recommitted, with instructions to amend, as proposed by Mr. Banks.

The PRESIDENT appointed as the special committee to make the amendment, Messrs. Banks, Nourse, and Warwick.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would ask leave to say one or two words in explanation of my vote.

Mr. DELONG. It will come up again in a moment, on the committee's report.

Mr. DUNNE. Can I make a report at this time, by leave of the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. The regular order is the consideration of the remaining sections; the gentleman can, however, make his report by a suspension of the rules.

THE OATH.

Mr. PARKER. Can we recommit another section at this time?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly; the article has all been read.

Mr. PARKER. I move that Section 2 of this article be referred to a special committee, with instructions to amend the section by inserting after the word “enter,” in the last line, the words “if an oath,” in parentheses; also, by adding after the words “so help me God,” in the last line, “if an affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury;” the words “if an affirmation” to be included in parentheses. The last clause will then read as follows:

“And further, that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office of — on which I am about to enter, (if an oath,) so help me God; (if an affirmation,) under the pains and penalties of perjury.”

Mr. BROSNAN. I really cannot understand that this amendment adds any force or increased effect to the oath. I do not perceive the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. PARKER. I will explain my intention. In the first part of the oath, gentlemen will observe, the language is “I, —, do solemnly swear (or affirm)” — the words “or affirm” being in parentheses. The object plainly is to provide for those who may from conscientious motives, prefer to affirm, rather than take an oath. But at the end, it now reads “so help me God” — and that is no affirmation, but an oath — and a “Friend” could not take or subscribe to such a declaration. It is not an affirmation if a man is compelled to say at the end, “so help me God,” and the object of my amendment is to provide for an affirmation. If the Convention prefer to strike out the words “or affirm” in the beginning of the oath, I shall not object, but if we undertake to make provision for those who choose to affirm, let us do so.

Mr. BROSNAN. Those who are called

"Friends," are not the only persons who affirm.

Mr. PARKER. I am aware of that. I only mentioned a "Friend" for the sake of an illustration.

Mr. BROSNAN. I understand that this is framed in the usual way, either for an oath or affirmation; it simply requires the party to express his reliance upon Omnipotence—upon the Creator. The gentleman's amendment does not, in my judgment, read handsomely, and it gives no greater force to the section.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit Section 2, with instructions, and it was not agreed to.

DUELING—AGAIN.

Mr. BANKS, from the special committee, to which was recommitted Section 3, presented the following report:

MR. PRESIDENT—Your special committee, to which was recommitted Section 3 of Article XVI, with instructions to amend the same, beg leave to report the section back, amended according to the instructions of the Convention.

Your committee also recommend that the words "those thus offending" be stricken out of the substitute, and the words "in fighting a duel" inserted instead, so that the clause will read:

"Or who has acted as second, or knowingly conveyed a challenge, or aided or assisted in any manner in fighting a duel," etc.

Mr. DELONG. That report is contrary to the instructions of the Convention.

Mr. BANKS. We report it back amended in accordance with the instructions, and we take the liberty of making that suggestion, in addition.

Mr. NOURSE. I will move that the report of the committee be amended in that way.

Mr. DELONG. I understand that the only question is on the adoption of the original amendment, as it was referred to the special committee.

Mr. NOURSE. No, sir.

Mr. DELONG. I ask the Chair.

Mr. BANKS. Now, sir, I have no particular objection to a factions parliamentary fight, if the gentleman from Storey desires it, and I intend to confine myself within parliamentary rules. I will therefore ask that the section, as amended and reported by the committee, be adopted, and then, to cover the gentleman's quibble, I shall move to recommit the section, with instructions to make this further amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on accepting the report.

Mr. DELONG. I insist that there is no such thing as accepting the report of the committee at this time. The committee simply makes its report, and the report goes on file. The only disposition that can now be made of the report is to place it on the general file.

The PRESIDENT. The only question now is on the acceptance of the report, and the discharge of the committee. The committee was appointed for a special purpose, and if the committee has not discharged its duty, the gentleman can vote against the acceptance of the report.

Mr. DELONG. Is it to be accepted before it goes on the general file?

The PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly so. The only question which can be considered is the acceptance of the report.

Mr. DELONG. I make this point of order, that under the rules when a matter is reported from a committee it goes on the general file, and then it comes up in the regular order of business, without any motion. The acceptance of the report is when it is handed in, and then it goes to the general file under the rules; when it comes up again in its order, the question is not on accepting the report, but on its adoption. I do not now raise an objection to the acceptance of the report.

After some discussion in regard to the exact condition of the report, and the question pending,

The PRESIDENT overruled the point of order, and decided that the report could not go on the general file, but must now be considered and acted upon, because of the subject matter of the report being a component part of the article under consideration, and now on its final passage.

Mr. DELONG appealed from the decision of the Chair.

After a brief discussion,

The question was taken—"Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?"—and was decided in the affirmative. So the decision was sustained.

Mr. BANKS. Now, in order to cover this difficulty, which I consider purely technical, and to avoid any further points of order, I move that Section 3 be referred to a special committee of one, to consist of the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Collins,) with instructions to further amend the section by striking out the words "those thus offending," and inserting instead the words "in fighting a duel;" and that he be instructed to report immediately.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS reported back the section amended, according to instructions, so as to read as follows:

Sec. 3. No person shall be eligible to any office who is not a qualified elector under this Constitution. No person who, while a citizen of this State, has, since the adoption of this Constitution, fought a duel with a deadly weapon, sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel with a deadly weapon, either within or beyond the boundaries of this State, or who has acted as second, or knowingly conveyed a challenge, or aided or assisted in any manner in fighting a duel, shall be allowed to hold any office of honor, profit, or trust, or enjoy the right of suffrage under this Constitution. The Legislature shall provide by law for giving force and effect to this section.

No objection being made, the report was received and the committee discharged.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the final passage of the article, as amended.

Saturday,]

PARKER—DELONG—DUNNE—BANKS—FRIZELL—JOHNSON.

[July 23.

THE OATH—AGAIN.

Mr. PARKER. I move to recommit Section 2, of this article, with instructions to amend, by striking out, in the first line of the oath, the word "or" and the parentheses, and inserting, instead of "or," the word "and."

Mr. DELONG. Then they would solemnly swear and affirm. [Merriment.]

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman from Storey is amused, but he is not a clergyman, if he is a lawyer. Now, sir, we have that language in other State Constitutions, as, for example, in the State of Massachusetts, where the form prescribed is, "I, A B, do solemnly swear, and affirm," the latter words being an avowment following, and in addition to "I do solemnly swear." I had proposed to leave this portion of the oath unchanged, and amend the concluding portion so as to read, "(if an oath) so help me God; (if an affirmation) under the pains and penalties of perjury." The Convention has refused, however, to make that change, and I now offer this amendment, so that the first part of the oath may harmonize with the latter part.

Mr. DELONG. The idea, I understand, is, that if a man desires to make an affirmation, we shall require him, by this amendment, to swear, and affirm, both.

Mr. PARKER. I only want it to harmonize, the Convention having refused to amend the latter portion so as to permit an affirmation.

The question was taken on Mr. Parker's motion, and it was not agreed to.

DUELING—AGAIN.

Mr. DUNNE. I desire to call attention to what appears to me a discrepancy between the section just adopted and this form of oath. Under Section 3, a man may be elected to office who has fought a duel while a resident of another State; but if he is elected, before entering upon the duties of his office, he is obliged to swear he has not fought a duel "since the adoption of the Constitution of the State of Nevada."

The PRESIDENT. The Chair suggested this apparent contradiction sometime since.

Mr. BANKS. I can see no inconsistency. If the oath does go further than the provision in Section 3, it seems to me it can do no harm. At all events, no person will be likely to take office, or hold office, if he has fought a duel.

Mr. FRIZELL. I think it is exactly right, as it is, in that respect. I do not wish to give a non-resident any advantage over me. If men go to fighting duels in other States, and then come here, I do not want to allow them to hold office, while I, living here, may be disqualified for the same cause.

Mr. DUNNE. I will make a motion that Section 2 be referred to a select committee of three, to consist of Messrs. Banks, Nourse, and Warwick, with instructions to amend the section so as to make it conform to the language in Section 3.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's instructions are too indefinite; he will please to reduce the instructions he proposes to writing.

Mr. DUNNE. I will do so. I move to recommit Section 2, with instructions to amend by inserting, between the words "not" and "fought a duel," the words, "while a resident of the State of Nevada." Then it will read:

"And I do further solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not, while a resident of the State of Nevada, fought a duel, nor sent or accepted a challenge," etc.

[Mr. WARWICK in the chair.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. The difficulty is not in Section 2, but in Section 3; and in my judgment the former is right, whilst the latter is wrong. Section 3, as amended, makes an obvious, and, as I regard it, an unjust discrimination between those who may have been engaged in duels without the State, and those who may have offended in that manner within the State. The oath in Section 2 would have the effect of precluding every man from holding office who shall have been concerned in a duel, here or elsewhere, subsequent to the adoption of the Constitution; whilst Section 3, as amended by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Banks,) prohibits any person from either voting or holding office who "while a citizen of this State," and subsequent to the adoption of the Constitution, shall have taken part in a duel, either within or beyond the boundaries of the State.

The only inharmony I can discover between the two sections, is that occasioned by the incorporation, in the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, of the words "while a citizen of this State." Here is the only trouble, and for my part I do not think it is just or proper to place an inhibition upon those of our own citizens who may have offended in this particular, when we virtually invite duelists from abroad to come here and enjoy the privileges denied to our own citizens. If we strike out of Section 3 the words "while a citizen of this State," it will be entirely in consonance with the oath prescribed in Section 2.

But the amendment now proposed would make the same unfair discrimination in Section 2. That is to say, it proposes to take a step backward. I prefer to retain the present form of language in Section 2, so that if duelists from other States are not disfranchised by the direct provisions of Section 3, they will at least be excluded from holding office by the requirements of the oath of office. I do not propose to take any backward step. I desire, as does the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. Frizell,) that those who come from without the State, if they have been duelists, shall be subject to the same disabilities as our own citizens, because I do not see the justice of permitting men who have fought duels in California or other States, subsequent to the date of the adoption of our Constitution to remove here and exercise rights and enjoy privileges which are denied to citizens of Nevada who may have done the same thing. I would much rather take the chances, under the section as it stands, of excluding those men from office by means of the form of the oath, than to amend it as now proposed by the gentleman from Humboldt, (Mr. Dunne,) and thus make a direct discrimination against our own citizens.

Mr. NOURSE. I do not know that I have any objection to the oath as it is, for I do not care if it does go a little beyond the provisions contained in the other section; but I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Ormsby, (Mr. Johnson,) as to where the trouble is, if there be any. I suppose the reason why these words were inserted in Section 3, is that a person fighting a duel in this State, necessarily does so knowing what are the provisions of the Constitution, and that he is doing something in direct violation of those provisions, and for that reason he may properly be excluded; while if a person fights a duel elsewhere, it is a matter over which this State has no control, and to say that when a man comes here he shall not be allowed to vote or to hold office if he has fought a duel in some other country, where perchance there may possibly have been at the time no law against dueling, and the practice may have been considered perfectly allowable, it seems to me would be rather of the nature of passing an ex post facto law. We mean this inhibition to apply only to those who have fought duels in opposition to or in violation of the provisions of our Constitution, and living in another State they could not be expected to know what those provisions were. Further than that, I am not, for my part, prepared to go.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not favor any ex post facto provision, but I do propose that when we adopt a State Constitution, and become ourselves bound by its provisions, it shall be applicable also to those who may hereafter come to live amongst us; not that it shall apply to those who are out of the State, whilst they remain out, but when they shall remove here they are, and properly should be, subject to all the provisions of our Constitution. I do not propose to make any distinction between the duellists of other States and those of Nevada. If it be wrong or objectionable to apply the rule to one class, it is equally wrong and objectionable to apply it to another; and if it be in conflict with the public sentiment of this State to permit the duelist to hold office, it makes no difference whatever whether he has violated the theory of our law or Constitution on that subject, here or elsewhere.

Mr. BANKS. Section 3 was introduced with a full knowledge of what it contained, and I think it was voted for with a like full and complete understanding on the part of the Convention. Now what is proposed by these provisions in both sections? In the first place, nobody can hold office, because nobody can take the oath of office if he has fought a duel anywhere, since the adoption of the Constitution. Then, in Section 3 it is provided, I think clearly, that any person who has fought a duel, being a citizen of this State, shall be deprived not only of the right to hold office, but of the right to vote. The oath absolutely prohibits from holding office any person who has fought a duel anywhere since the adoption of the Constitution; and Section 3, going a little further, prescribes a penalty, so far as persons fighting a duel while living in Nevada are concerned. They are prohibited from either voting or holding office. I will say, however, that if gentlemen desire to amend Section 3, so as to apply to those who shall have been concerned in duels before they became citizens, I am willing to go even as far as that, but I shall certainly vote against this amendment proposed by my colleague.

Mr. DELONG. I am surprised at the degree of conscientious regard manifested by the gentleman from Washoe (Mr. Nourse) for the amendment made by the gentleman from Humboldt (Mr. Banks.) He votes for the oath in Section 2 with great pleasure, and yet that is already subject to the same objection which he thinks might be made to Section 3, if amended according to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson.) While it is not strictly an ex post facto law, yet it is something very much like the edicts of that Roman Emperor, who caused the laws to be written in small characters, and posted upon high columns, so that nobody could read them. It punishes a man for having done an act, without any intention in the world to disobey our laws. If a man has fought a duel in some other country, where no such penalty attaches, when he comes here he finds that his having done that not only disqualifies him for holding any official position, but also deprives him of the right of suffrage.

Now I think I am about in the condition of my friend and colleague (Mr. Frizzell) in regard to bad luck. The moon is about in its last quarter, and I suppose "that's what's the matter." [Merriment.] At any rate, there must be something wrong. Nevertheless, I insist, if men must be disfranchised and debarred from holding office for the offense of fighting a duel, they should at least have the right to know what the laws are, before they are considered as having offended against them; and therefore I ask that the penalty shall not be made to apply to those who may have fought duels before they came to this State—in some country, perhaps, where it is not looked upon at all as a crime. I think that is carrying the provision a little too far.

Mr. COLLINS. It would be difficult to find a man who has come here from any State in the Union, who does not know that it is against the law to fight a duel. There are laws against dueling, I believe, in every one of the United States, and in European countries, also.

Mr. DELONG. I think you will find a great many who have come here ignorant of the law to a certain extent, if not altogether.

JOHNSON—DELONG—HAWLEY—DUNNE.

[July 23.

Mr. JOHNSON. We do not desire men of that class to hold office.

Mr. DELONG. A great many of them do.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. Dunne, to recommit Section 2 with instructions, and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 10; noes, 11. So the motion was not agreed to.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on the final passage of the article, as read, and subsequently amended, and the vote was—yeas, 16; nays, 8—as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Banks, Belden, Chapin, Collins, Crossman, DeLong, Folsom, Hawley, Kinkead, Lockwood, Mason, Murdoch, Nourse, Warwick, Wetherill, and Mr. President—16.

Nays—Messrs. Brosnan, Crawford, Dunne, Frizell, Gibson, Kennedy, Proctor, and Taghianue—8.

So the article was passed.

During the voting—

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state this, by the way of briefly explaining my vote, in order that it may appear consistent on the record. I regret that we should have an apparent contradiction in our Constitution, for its harmony is marred thereby. I think that Section 3 should go further than it does, and I protest against what seems to me to be an unjust discrimination between those who may have been parties to duels outside of the State, and those who may have offended in the same way within the State, after the adoption of the Constitution. Nevertheless, being in favor of the general principle of prohibiting, as far as possible, the practice of dueling, I vote aye.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have voted "no," simply because the difficulty which was suggested by the gentleman from Storey, (Mr. DeLong,) had also suggested itself to my own mind. But because I am opposed to dueling, and believing that a fair, although a very strict construction of the instrument will not subject to the prescribed penalties the surgeon who performs the duties of humanity for a man wounded in a duel, or the friend who bears a wounded man from the field, I shall change my vote to "aye."

Mr. DELONG. I change my vote from "no" to "aye," with a view to moving a reconsideration.

The result of the vote having been announced, as above stated—

Mr. DELONG. I give notice, that on our next day of session, I will move to reconsider the vote by which this article was passed.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary will make a note of the gentleman's notice, and the article as passed, will be referred to the Committee on Phraseology.

THE SCHEDULE.

Mr. DUNNE, from the Committee on Schedule, submitted the following additional report:

MR. PRESIDENT—Your Committee on Schedule respectfully report the following additional sections as the balance of the article entitled Schedule:

SEC. 7. The term of State officers, except judicial, elected at the first election under this Constitution, shall continue until the Tuesday after the first Monday in January, A. D. 1867, and until the election and qualification of their successors.

SEC. 8. The Senators to be elected at the first election under this Constitution shall draw lots, so that the term of one-half thereof, as near as may be, shall expire on the day succeeding the general election in A. D. 1866, and the term of the other half shall expire on the day succeeding the general election in A. D. 1868; provided, that in drawing lots for all Senatorial terms, the Senatorial representation shall be allotted so that in the counties having two or more Senators the terms thereof shall be divided, as near as may be, between the long and short terms.

SEC. 9. At the general election in A. D. 1866, and thereafter, the term of Senators shall be for four years from the day succeeding such general election, and members of Assembly for two years from the day succeeding such general election, and the terms of Senators shall be allotted by the Legislature in long and short terms, as hereinbefore provided, so that one-half thereof, as nearly as may be, shall be elected every two years.

SEC. 10. The term of members of the Assembly elected at the first election under this Constitution, shall expire on the day succeeding the general election in A. D. 1865, and the terms of those elected at the general election A. D. 1865, shall expire on the day succeeding the general election A. D. 1866.

SEC. 11. The first regular session of the Legislature shall commence on the second Monday of December, A. D. 1864, and the second regular session of the same shall commence on the first Monday of January, A. D. 1866, and the third regular session of the Legislature shall be the first of the biennial sessions, and shall commence on the first Monday of January, A. D. 1867, and the regular sessions of the Legislature shall be held thereafter biennially.

SEC. 12. All county officers, under the laws of the Territory of Nevada at the time when this Constitution shall take effect, (except Probate Judges,) whose offices are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Constitution, shall continue in office until the first Monday of January, A. D. 1867, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified. And all township officers shall continue in office until the expiration of their terms of office, and until their successors are elected and qualified.

SEC. 13. At the first regular session of the Legislature, to convene under the requirements of this Constitution, provision shall be made by law for the payment of the publication of six hundred copies of the proceedings of this Convention, in book form, to be disposed of as the Legislature may direct; and the Hon. J. Neely Johnson, President of this Convention, shall contract for, and A. J. Marsh, official reporter of this Convention, under the direction of the President, shall supervise the publication of such proceedings. Provision shall be made by law, at such first session of the Legislature, for the compensation of the Official Reporter of this Convention, and he shall be paid in coin, or its equivalent. He shall receive for his services, in reporting the debates and proceedings, fifteen dollars per day during the session of the Convention, and seven and one-half dollars additional for each evening session, and thirty cents per folio of one hundred words for preparing the same for publication; and for supervising and indexing such publication, the sum of fifteen dollars per day during the time actually engaged in such service.

SEC. 14. The Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, and Superintendent of Public Instruction of the Territory of Nevada, shall each continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices after the admission of this State into the Union, and until the time designated for the qualification of the above named officers to be elected under the State Government; and the Territorial Auditor shall continue to discharge the duties of his said office until the time appointed for the qualification of the State Controller; provided, that said officers shall each receive the salaries and be subject to the restrictions and conditions as provided in this Constitution; and provided further, that none of them shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites for the performance of any duty connected with his office.

KENNEDY—BROSNAN—DELONG—BANKS—NOURSE—JOHNSON.

[July 23.]

SEC. 15. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Controller, Attorney-General, Surveyor-General, Clerk of the Supreme Court, and Superintendent of Public Instruction, to be elected at the first election under this Constitution, shall each be qualified and enter upon the duties of their respective offices on the first Monday of December succeeding their election, and shall continue in office until the first Tuesday after the first Monday of January, 1867, and until the election and qualification of their successors respectively.

SEC. 16. The Judges of the Supreme Court, District Judges, and County Judges, provided to be elected at the first election under this Constitution, shall be qualified and enter upon the duties of their respective offices on the first Monday of December succeeding their election.

SEC. 17. The terms of the Supreme Court shall be held at the seat of government of the State, and the terms of the District Courts and County Courts respectively, shall be held at the county seats of such counties respectively; and until provision shall be made by law, the terms of the Supreme Court shall be held at such times as a majority of the judges of said court may appoint. The first term of the District Court in each county, and the County Court in Storey County, shall commence on the first Monday of December, 1864. The Legislature shall provide by law for the time of holding the terms of the Supreme, District, and County Courts.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DUNNE, Chairman pro tem.

The report was accepted, and the sections reported were referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the consideration of the remainder of the Schedule.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT. I think it would be better to vary the motion somewhat, so as to go into Committee of the Whole on the article on Judicial Department. It is important to place that article in the hands of the Enrolling Committee as early as possible.

Mr. KENNEDY. Very well; if that is the desire of the Convention, I will move that we go into Committee of the Whole on Article VI, entitled Judicial Department.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will suggest that, unless we can get through with both of these articles this evening, it would perhaps be better, and certainly it would give more satisfaction to the Storey County delegation, to defer the article on the Judicial Department until Monday. Some of the members from that county who are not here now will probably be down on Monday, and they would like to participate in the consideration of that article.

Mr. DELONG. They ought to have remained here to-day, at least.

Mr. KENNEDY. If we get through with this article to-day, we may be able to finish up on Monday; but if we keep it back till Monday, we shall not get through our business before Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. BROSNAN. I will not make any motion.

The question was taken on Mr. Kennedy's motion, as modified, and upon a division the vote was—ayes, 15; noes, 14. So the motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

The Convention accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (the PRESIDENT remaining in the chair,) and resumed consideration of Article VI, entitled Judicial Department.

STOREY COUNTY COURT.

The pending question was stated to be on the motion of Mr. Dunne, to strike out Section 9, which establishes the jurisdiction of the county court in Storey County.

Mr. BANKS. Are general amendments in order at this time?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir; the reading of the article by sections has not been completed.

Mr. NOURSE. I wish to say, if I may be allowed, that I propose to offer an amendment which I think is calculated to meet the objections that have been urged against this article, as it will stand after striking out so much as relates to county courts, including Section 9.

The question was taken on the amendment to strike out Section 9, and it was agreed to.

PLACES OF HOLDING COURTS.

The Secretary read Section 10, as follows:

SEC. 10. The times and places of holding the terms of the Supreme Court, the general and special terms of the District Courts within the several districts, and of County Courts, shall be provided by law.

[Mr. CROSMAN in the chair.]

Mr. NOURSE. The words "County Courts" will need to be stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will offer a substitute for Section 10, providing that the District Courts shall be held at the county seats of the respective counties, and that the terms of the Supreme Court shall be held at the capital of the State. I do not see any more appropriate place than this for such a provision, and I think it is one of considerable importance. We ought not to leave it in the power of the Legislature to provide by law that the terms of the District Court in any county shall be held perhaps in some remote part of the county. If it is proper that the State officers should be required to reside at the capital, and that the county officers should keep their offices at the seat of government of their respective counties, it is certainly proper that the terms of the Supreme Court should be held at the capital, and the terms of the District Courts at the several county seats. I am informed that a section has been prepared and reported by the Committee on Schedule, intended to cover this same matter, but I think this is probably a better place for it, and that portion of the Schedule not having been acted upon, it will be at a future time within the control of the Convention. I will prepare my amendment in a moment, and I hope we shall incorporate it here.

Saturday.] BROSNAN—JOHNSON—DELONG—BANKS—FRIZELL—WARWICK—NOURSE. [July 23.

Mr. BROSNAN. The section now stands precisely as it was in the old Constitution, with the exception of omitting the Probate or County Courts; and I believe my friend from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) had the honor of framing that section.

Mr. JOHNSON. That does not necessarily prove that it was right. [Merriment.]

Mr. DELONG. Does it prove the contrary? Mr. JOHNSON. I will not undertake to say. I think, however, that both the gentlemen from Storey concur with me in the opinion that there are some features of the old Constitution which are not exactly right, while in regard to others we differ. The question now is, whether it is better that the terms of the District Court in each county shall be held at the county seat, or at some other place. I move to amend by striking out Section 10, as printed, and inserting the following in its stead:

SEC. 10. The times of holding the Supreme and District Courts shall be as fixed by law. The terms of the Supreme Court shall be held at the seat of Government, and the terms of the District Courts shall be held at the county seats of their respective counties.

Mr. BROSNAN. I should like to have that section retained as it was in the original Constitution, or as it was reported by the committee. I would prefer, for my part, that the place of holding the Supreme Court should not be fixed permanently in the Constitution. It seems to me that exigencies may arise when it would be proper to give the Supreme Court authority to meet at some other place than the one fixed by the Constitution.

Mr. BANKS. In what cases?

Mr. BROSNAN. Many cases might arise. They should themselves be the judges of the occasion.

Mr. JOHNSON. If any valid reasons can be shown why the terms of the Supreme Court should not be held at the Capital, and the several District Courts at the seat of government of each county respectively, I hope they will be stated. Possibly the gentleman from Storey (Mr. Brosnan) may be able to assign some more substantial reason for voting against this amendment, than the fact that the original section was copied from the Constitution of last year.

Now, sir, I do not think we ought to permit our courts to go traveling and strolling around the country, any more than we should a Legislature, and I think there are special reasons why the Supreme Court should remain at the capital, and the District Courts should be held in each county, at its seat of government. If you allow the courts to go strolling around the country, the clerks with their voluminous records must follow in their wake, or accompany them, and the expense which that would involve would in many instances be very great. In my judgment this is a matter which should be fixed in the Constitution, and not left subject to the mutations and changes incident to legislative action.

Mr. FRIZELL. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ormsby (Mr. Johnson) will be voted down. It is generally conceded by the representatives from Storey County, that at the end of about two years it will probably be necessary to have two or three District Courts in that county, and if that shall become necessary, Gold Hill certainly ought to have one of them, notwithstanding that Virginia City is the county seat. Therefore I trust that this amendment will be voted down, and then there will be one thing, at least, going in my favor to-day.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. Johnson, and, upon a division, the vote was—ayes, 12; noes, 5. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARWICK. I call attention to the fact that this amendment was carried by a vote of less than a quorum.

Mr. DELONG. That is no matter; we are now in Committee of the Whole, and it will have to be acted on by the Convention.

JUSTICES' COURTS.

[The PRESIDENT in the chair.]

The Secretary read Section 11, as follows:

SEC. 11. The Legislature shall determine the number of Justices of the Peace to be elected in each city and township of the State, and shall fix by law their powers, duties, and responsibilities. It shall determine the manner and the cases in which appeals may be taken from Justices' and other Courts; provided, such powers shall not in any case conflict with the jurisdiction of the several Courts of Record; and further, that such Justices' Courts shall have no jurisdiction in the trial of cases wherein the title to real estate or mining claims, or the right of possession, is or may be involved. The Supreme Court, the District Courts, the County Courts, and such other courts as the Legislature shall designate, shall be Courts of Record.

Mr. NOURSE. It is necessary to strike out "the County Courts."

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will make that amendment, to conform to the previous action of the committee.

Mr. BANKS. I would like to hear the latter part of the proviso read again, commencing with "and further."

The SECRETARY again read the proviso.

Mr. NOURSE. Now that the County Courts are stricken out, possibly it would be better to define the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace, so as to come up to the jurisdiction of the District Courts.

Mr. DELONG. It does already.

Mr. NOURSE. I think not, in the amount of their jurisdiction.

Mr. WARWICK. Yes, sir; the limit fixed is three hundred dollars.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the Committee of the Whole directed that the references to County Courts be stricken out wherever they occur throughout the article?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. NOURSE. I will not offer an amendment now, but if the committee will pass over the section, I will endeavor to draw up one.

Saturday.]

CHAIRMAN—BANKS—BROSNAN—KENNEDY—DELONG—NOURSE.

[July 23.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendments, we will proceed with the reading until the article is finished, and then general amendments will be in order. It is not necessary to take a vote on the adoption of each section as it is read.

No further amendment being offered—

MUNICIPAL COURTS.

Section 12 was read, as follows :

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall prescribe the powers, duties, and responsibilities of any Municipal Court that may be established in pursuance of Section 1 of this article : and shall so fix by law the jurisdiction of said court as not to conflict with that of the several Courts of Record.

No amendment was offered.

FEES AND PERQUISITES.

Section 13 was read, as follows :

SEC. 13. No judicial officer, except a Justice of the Peace, shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office.

No amendment was offered.

INELIGIBILITY OF JUDGES.

Section 14 was read, as follows :

SEC. 14. The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the District Judges, shall be ineligible to any office other than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected, and all elections or appointments of any such judges by the people, Legislature, or otherwise, during said period, to any office other than judicial, shall be void.

No amendment was offered.

CHARGES TO JURIES.

Section 15 was read, as follows :

SEC. 15. Judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.

No amendment was offered.

STYLE OF PROCESS.

Section 16 was read, as follows :

SEC. 16. The style of all process shall be—"The State of Nevada," and all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the same.

No amendment was offered.

EQUITY ADMINISTRATION.
